In the afternoon, we were glad to meet with brethren and sisters and many dear children in the Brethren's meeting-house in this place. Here the Word of God was read, and many questions asked and answered. Our Master once astonished the doctors and lawyers with His asking and answering questions. Here the desire seemed to be, to know God's will and do it. This can only be done in union and love. The best method of so doing should concern every brother and sister. God commands us to assemble and worship Him. Just where to assemble He says nothing, hence the church must look for the where—the place. Many things are required of us by our Father, but where and how, He does not prescribe in every case. Circumstances must more or less determine these, hence He wisely leaves the where, the how for the church to decide. Now this being the case, each brother and sister should labor, not to have his or her own way, but compare plans with each other and adopt the best, ever remembering that the most simple, and that in harmony with the meek and lowly character of Jesus, is the best. Brethren, sisters and children should not come together to simply pass time, not to make a display of talent or culture, but to do good—to make themselves and others better. The motive should be to conform more and more to the image of Him whom we have put on—into whom we have been baptized. I would rejoice to see every brother, every sister and all the children assemble once each week to teach and admonish each other in love and to good works. The early Christians came together or often to learn of Jesus. There were no suspicions, no fears of usurpation, no strivings for pre-eminence among the primitive disciples, but they labored in union and love, and then when any one became disorderly they withdrew from him. But they did not withdraw until he did walk disorderly. I wish to notice here for the encouragement of brethren and sisters elsewhere, that the called of Christ in and around this place are not ashamed of the apostolic order in word, deed and appearance. In love they are behind none; not that they simply love those who may chance to visit them, but one soon find out that they love each other. This tells well. The standing collar on the coat, is no banding block here. In fact the plain garb of the brethren and sisters is very highly respected, as a rule, by those who have received like precious faith. "Holiness and dress," seem to dwell richly here. The reader will pardon this seemingly "small subject" here. Hope to give our readers something more clear on this subject soon. God bless all who hunger and thirst after righteousness and true holiness; for here are many veterans in God's vineyard—many who have borne the heat, the burden and vexations of the day. Here are those who, full of youthful vigor, are willing to spend and be spent for God's cause. Here are scores who, with careful training, may soon adorn the House of the Lord by good works and consistent lives. God grant that the apostolic order, the primitive purity and practice may be held sacred in every converted soul.

Yesterday brother Mentzer kindly showed me the extensive boiler manufactory with which he is identified. I noticed the strong hand of man would rapidly change the shape of the massive sheets of iron, converting them into a useful machine for man's service. This made me think of God's power. His Word and Spirit is able to take hold of a man, and though he be ever so vile, will turn him into a new creature, make him a man of God, a jewel for heaven. What lessons we learn by looking at these wonderful works. Next visited the Geiser Manufactory Institution, where brother J. F. Oiler spends much of his time. Here many brethren work day by day, and the place is noted for the quietness and steadiness of the hands. Our minds grasp many noble thoughts as we learn that these threshing machines are sent to all parts of the United States, and even to South America. Behold the innumerable premiums from that they separate from the chaff for the farmer. They do the bidding of man for man, saving him much hard labor. God has a great threshing machine too—His Spirit. It is doubtless able to separate the chaff from the wheat if we only allow God to work it. We must permit Him to work in us to do His own good will and pleasure.

I leave you now, and by God's grace and care, shall pass on to Philadelphia and other points further East. Peace and joy in the Holy Ghost to all who are not ashamed of Jesus.

FROM BROTHER BASHOR.

Dear Brethren Moore & Eshelman:—

GRACE, mercy and peace from the tri-personal God be with you now and forever, lending lustre to your life and labors in Christ, and the power to fold your mantle in peace at death, and Elijah-like, ascend to the dwelling-place of the first Begotten of God, where the old life will be forgotten in the felicities of the new.

I have for several days, resolved to reply to your Christian missive, but as often failed in the attempt, through a feeling of mental indigence and physical indifference, brought on, probably, by a general relaxation of the system after my incessant mental labor and preaching in the past; but to-day I feel like putting something on paper for you, and I presume something of a general character will prove of more interest to you. Not being acquainted personally in this locality, locals would be monotonous and neighborhood gossip (of which we always have a full stock and of the latest styles and variety), would prove wearisome.

As a church, we are moving along toward the city of final union, in peace and brotherly love, with the exception of an occasional gossip-cloud which hovers over our spiritual plantation, and stops the works of Jesus, to gaze from faith and hope backward to the flesh-pots of Egypt. This, however, is of common occurrence everywhere, and the more deplorable because it is so prevalent. We have extremely large congregations at all points of preaching, and usually services at two places on each Lord's day. Our Sabbath-school will reorganize, probably (at the "big church") next Sabbath with a full corps of teachers and pupils. Of former years the school has been quite flourishing, and it is presumable it will continue so.

The BRETHERN AT WORK finds its way to my address each week, laden with good things from the mental kitchen of our brotherhood, and is eagerly read by both of us (wife and I), especially the local quibs and editorials, and church news, too, forms an important item when the writers have something to tell outside of big dinners and social life and conversation. I am pleased with the position you take relative to "Original Ground," as it is the only position that will stand in the light of the Gospel and bring about a unanimity of sentiment among our people.

Labor to make the BRETHERN AT WORK a link between the extremes—a G. spel. trumpet—and God will bless your labors for every good deed and act you commit. I find the paper very highly esteemed by all its readers, and trust it may ever command the respect of all.

My lungs are still weak and I fear I will never be able to labor as continuously in the future as in the past; but to whatever is the will of God, I willingly bow. It is pleasant to remember the past years of labor, and the souls gathered into the great garner of God. I hear, now and then, of some one of those who, I am led to believe, I helped into the kingdom here, have preceded me into the gates of glory. It will be pleasant to meet them on the other shore. And O, the thousands who may meet you there and bless God, that in His mercy you lived to work on earth.

WHAT THE SINGLE IMMERSIONISTS SAY ABOUT THE DEBATE.

CONFLICTING opinions exist relative to Dr. Ray's failure to set up the claim of single immersion at the Newtonia discussion.

1. There are those who say that Ray is only about a third-class man in point of talent, which they say, accounts for his failure to establish the claims of single immersion. We cannot accept that as being correct. Ray's long experience as a debater, having engaged in so many regular debates with other denominations, and the fact that he stands approved by the Landmark Baptists of the South-west, as one able to defend their doctrine, certainly argues against the correctness of such a conclusion.

2. There are others who say, that Stein is such a mild speaker, and Ray is so stormy that they might utter the very same language, and that spoken by Stein would have a deeper impression than that spoken by Ray. While we are willing to agree that Ray did display an extraordinary amount of voice, we cannot accept that as being the reason of the failure.

3. A third apology is that, Ray did not anticipate such opposition or he would have made different arrangements. Of the validity of such reasoning let the unbiased mind decide.

4. There are those who say that Ray is a very talented man, a good scholar, &c., that they expected him to set up the claims of single dip baptism, especially when that trunk fall of looks was exhibited, but seeing that he made such a complete failure, they are forced to the conclusion that he has no foundation to build on, and that he did perhaps as well as any one can do. With the latter we are agreed. It would certainly take a very extraordinary mind to make an argument in favor of a practice that had its origin with a Eunomian heretic, and was nullified by a Spanish Catholic Pope far this side of the Apostolic age. As to the backward action in baptism, we don't know whether any one would attempt to defend the practice or not. We will await further developments.

J. T. MASON.

Newtonia, Mo.

Brother Mason, the writer of the above, was, for a number of years, a prominent member of the Baptist church, well read in their histories, and posted on their doctrine, but when he came to examine the Baptist claims to church succession and Bible characteristics, he found them without foundation. He at once came out from among them and united with the Brethren. He attended the debate throughout, and it is needless to say that he enjoyed it, and was much confirmed in his change. His living in the town, and mingling much with the people of that place afforded him an excellent opportunity of knowing their sentiments.—Etc.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

"Habit not thou agree with me for a penny a day."

CHRIST'S penny means more or less, as the case may be. It means an equivalent, whether it be a dime or a dollar. It is God's ordination that "the laborer is worthy of his hire," whether he till the ground, or the Garden of grace. Luke 10: 7; 1 Cor. 9: 14.

Change of circumstances, which curtail my personal resources, render it imperative that those who solicit articles for their special benefit, whether private or published, defray all expenses, and allow me a reasonable compensation for my labor.

A dependent invalid for twenty-five years, speechless fourteen years, too feeble for any form of service save with the pen, it is surely no more than simple justice that I get my penny a day. It is only Christ's due-doll. "How much owest thou unto my Lord?" If it be "a hundred measures of oil, or wheat" do not write "fifty," or "eighty."

REMARKS.—The above, and much needed notice, from brother Balsbaugh should not be overlooked by those who admire his writings. He is unable to labor at anything else save writing, and when we take into consideration the amount of writing he has to do, answering letters, queries, and writing articles, we know that his expenses must be considerable. Those who write him should not fail to send the brother something that can be used to defray his expenses.

A WELL-PUT REBUKE.—Mr. Bright was recently asked to dine with the Princess Louise, and a small party was made for him, mostly Dutchesses. One of these great ladies presently began, as the fashion now is, to abuse Mr. Gladstone. Mr. Bright, in his grave way, asked this personage: "Madam, have you any children?" She admitted she had. "Then permit me, Madam, to advise you to take them on the first opportunity where they may see Mr. Gladstone, and when they are in his presence, say to them they are standing before one of the greatest Englishmen who ever lived, and who has done his country perhaps the greatest service it was ever permitted an Englishman to do, by preserving it from a wanton and wicked war."

All those who contemplate going to the A. M. from Northern Illinois, will please drop us a card. The round trip fare from Lanark, Shummon and Freeport will be about $10.00. We want to know the number that is going.

A BRO. has ordered the BRETHERN AT WORK sent to James James, of Texas, saying that he is 114 years old, and was at one time neighbor to George Washington. This ripe old age is reached by but few, though it might be attained by thousands more if the laws of health were more scrupulously adhered to.

We will soon have more time to devote to our series of articles on Original Ground, and writing out the remainder of the Newtonia discussion, which report has been kept back on the account of the contemplated written debate, which we think is almost sure to come off before long. It will be quite a treat to our readers.

Those who write for our paper should remember that we will not, under any circumstances, allow miscellaneous controversies between contributors, as it has a tendency to engender strife and contention. Those who write articles, abusing the general practice of the Brotherhood, and want us to publish them, will save postage by keeping them at home. It is only about two feet from our writing desk to the waste basket, and it does not take abusive articles very long to travel that distance.

Writers who know the principles by which our paper is to be governed should not tempt us to violate our rules. Though we think none of them have yet been broken, yet it is evident (but in a few instances we have bent some considerably). Our paper is intended as an uncompromising defender of Primitive Christianity as it was enounced by our EARLY BRETHERN, and those who want to drag us from this old Apostolic platform, should know that we are not for sale—we do not propose to sell what little honor we have for the simple sum of one dollar and fifty cents. When we get so far along in heresy that we cannot be satisfied with the doctrine of the Brethren Church we will quit it like a man. We do not propose to be a member of our church and then preach and defend the doctrine of another, hence want it distinctly understood, that this sheet is published in the interest of the Bible characteristics of the BRETHERN, and will not open its columns to a few who want to engender strife and discord among our people. We enounced the Brethren's doctrine, because we thought it was right, and we are not ashamed to defend it.

UNANSWERED QUESTIONS.

Having on hand a number of queries which we have not time to answer, we give some of them below, hoping our correspondents will aid us in this department. Let your answers be short and to the point.

I wish an explanation of Rom. 9: 17-23. THOS. D. MCKONN.

Are there any Brethren living in Germany? What became of those members baptized by brother Kortz while on a visit in Germany some years ago? S. S.

What is the soul? What is the Spirit? and what is the difference between the soul and spirit? Will some kind brother please answer through the paper? S. D. GUNMAN, JAMES M. BALKY.

Did Christ die a God-forsaken man according to the following Scripture? "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Mark 15: 34. J. J. GUYER.

Will some of you please give an explanation on the 67th verse, third chapter of 1st Corinthians? B. A. W.

I wish to know, through your paper, the meaning of the 6th verse of the third chapter Titus. WM. B. GOODWIN.

Would you or some other brother please give us your views on the third verse of the seventh chapter of Hebrews? "Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, but made like unto the Son of God, doleth a priest continually." MARY B. HICKS, S.D.

A man claiming to be a minister of the Gospel, in a sermon against feet-washing, debated the world to show, from sacred or profane history, that the Gentile church ever practiced the ordinance of feet-washing. And W. C. Thurman, in his book on feet-washing, page 59, 60, says it might be shown from church history, that feet-washing has, from the night of its institution, down to the present day, always been observed as an ordinance of the church. Now which is true? Please inform me through your paper. SAMUEL SALS.

Please explain, through the paper, the Scripture found in Act 2: 17, 18, concerning the prophesying of daughters. Also recited what Paul says in 1 Cor. 14: 34. S. BALSBAUGH.

Did the apostle Paul receive the Holy Ghost before he was baptized? Please answer through the paper. J. E. B.

 "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath."
 "Children, obey your parents in all things."

SUNDAY MORNING.

God's Works.

GREAT and marvelous are thy works, O Lord. It is the language of the man of God. They are not only great, not only vast and stupendous, but marvelous in our eyes. Who, but the Lord could make the huge rock? Who, but the almighty Father could rear the lofty mountain, or shape the pleasant valley? Who, but Jehovah could form man and all things that are? Great and marvelous are thy works!

Now behold the pretty bud breaking its little covering at the approach of Spring! Who, but our Lord could make the refreshing blossom and afterwards the ripe fruit? Our God can cause the tender blade of grass to spring up to delight the herds and flocks. The gods of Egypt never did this. Our God created the pretty birds which sing for us now. Listen how they warble their sweet notes! How they cheer and enliven the drooping spirits of men. O, thank the Lord for the pretty, useful birds! Do not hurt them, dear children, for our Father gave them to us for company. They are part of His great works.

Our God makes the seed yield its fruit in due season, and gives to His people the abundance of the earth's increase. Thus comes the daily bread which keeps our bodies strong. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." Praise the Lord for the "fullness," for He has given that into our keeping. When He calls for some of it for the poor, O let us hasten to return it to Him! Open thy hand to the needy if thou wilt be rich in the Lord. Remember the fullness is the Lord's, as well as the earth itself. Our God sends the early and the latter rains; these gather into brooks and rivers, and go forth to serve man, beasts and all animated beings. No other god can create water. Without we cannot live; hence we all depend upon our God and our Father for life. Children, never forget this. Thank our Father for good, pure water.

Now look at that noble horse as he draws the wagon through the streets, or on the farm. Ah, how useful he is to man. God made the horse; treat him well, feed him, care for him, for he is the Lord's. And there is the useful cow, the innocent sheep, the dog, and all other useful animals. God made them all. Use them tenderly. Speak kindly to them, and notice how they understand it. God made them to understand kindness. Now point to any kind of animal, vegetable or mineral that God did not create. Our God made them all. I want you to see how dependent we are on our God. We own nothing. The earth is the Lord's. The earth's fullness, all things that grow on the earth, belong to the Lord. I want you to see how poor we all are. Naked came we into the world, and naked we go out. Then we are all alike when we come in and all alike when we go out. We are a part of God's great work. In the world we are prone to seek variety. We seek to excel one another in goods and lands; but then we should not forget that the good and bad belong to the Lord. They go not with us to the grave. There our God makes us all alike again. We have no pre-eminence over each other there. Marvelous are the works of the Lord. Thank the Lord for His great and marvelous works. The flowers, the birds, the fruits, the grain, all things belong to our God. If we remember this, our hearts will feel very humble. If we look at God's works as belonging to us, we soon become lifted up with pride. God be thanked for the earth and the fullness thereof.—M. M. Eshelman.

TOO LATE.

Dear Young Friends,—

WE have no doubt but that you all intend to be good children and have a great regard and respect for your parents; then when you are commanded to do anything, let me warn you of the great danger of putting it off until it is too late. I always loved my parents, but did, through neglect, disobey my dear mother at one time. Although it has been nearly forty years, it seems to me that I can remember it as if it were but yesterday. Would you like to know how it happened?

One Sunday morning, meeting being a long way off, father started quite early. There being no Sunday-school in that country (E. Tenn.) at that time, the neighbor boys came to our house. We were busy at play in the yard when my dear mother told me to put the cattle in the pasture; but we were so busily engaged in play that I put it off till we would get through. We were soon in the woods and over the hills when it came to my mind; I thought we would soon be at home then I would attend to it, but at last I forgot it. Night came on, now it was too late. Mother knew nothing of it till father came home; when she found it out she burst into tears. You can imagine my feelings, I cannot express them. O if I could only do my dear mother's command, but it was too late.

This has been a warning to me since; for if my feelings were such then, what will they be if I, through neglect, put off the Savior's commands? Read Luke 19.

THE JEW.

THE Jew still walks the earth, and bears the stamp of his race upon his forehead. He is still the same being as when he first wandered forth from the hills of Judea. His name is associated with avarice and extortion, and spoken in bitterness and scorn, yet, in the morning of history, it gathers around it recollections sacred and holy.

The Jew is a miracle among the nations. A wanderer in all lands, he has been a witness of the great events of history for more than eighteen hundred years. He saw classic Greece when crowned with intellectual triumphs. He lingered among that broken but beautiful architecture that rises like a tombstone over the grave of her departed splendor.

The Jew saw Rome, the "mighty heart" of nations, sending its own ceaseless life's thread through all the arteries of its vast empire. He, too, has seen that heart cold and still in death. These have perished, yet the Jew lives on—the same silent, mysterious, indestructible being. The shadow of the Crescent rests on Palestine, the signet of a conqueror's faith—still the Jew and his religion survive. He wanders a captive in the streets of his own once queenly Jerusalem, to meditate sadly and gloomily on the relics of ancient power. Above him shines the clear sky, for as when it looked down on the towers of Zion; but now, alas! it beholds only a desolate city and an unhappy land. The world is his home. The literature of the ancient Hebrew triumphs over all creeds, and schools, and sects. Mankind worshiped the sacred songs of David, and bow to the divine teachings of Jesus of Nazareth, who also was a son of Abraham. Such is the Jew. His ancient dreams of empire are gone. How seldom do we realize, as we see him in our city streets, that he is the creature of such a strange, peculiar destiny. Neither age, nor country, nor climate, have changed him. Such is the Jew, a strange and solitary being, and such the drama of his long and mournful history.

And the Jew in all his strange characteristics is a living witness of the truth of the Old Testament which he cherishes, which ages since he beheld his wondrous destiny; and also of the New Testament, which he rejects, but whose prophecies at the same time he continually fulfills. Jerusalem is yet trodden under foot—of the Gentiles, (Luke 21: 24), the Jews are yet wanderers in every land, (Luke 21: 24; Dent 4: 27), their name is left for a blessing and a curse in all the earth, (Isa. 65: 15), while their silent influence, momentous and unmeasurable, shapes the destinies of nations, leads in the march of intellect, insinuates itself throughout the social and political system, and controls the financial destinies of the world. The history of the chosen people is full of solemn interest and instruction to Gentiles. Once nourished like branches of a good olive tree in the garden of God, "Because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear; for it fool spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee. Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God; on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness; otherwise thou also shalt be cut off. And they also, if they abide not in unbelief, shall be grafted in; for God is able to graft them in again." (Rom. 11: 17-24).—The Christian.

That day comes to us all in this life; we set our hearts on things it is not God's will for us to have and then we go sorrowing; the people we love are taken from us, and we can find joy in nothing, because they are not with us; sickness comes, and we faint under the burden of our feeble bodies; we go astray and do wrong, and bring ourselves into trouble with our fellow-men. There is no man or woman born into this world to whom some of these trials do not fall.

THE FAMILY BOOK.

THE family is like a book.
 The children are the leaves;
 The parents are the cover which Protecting beauty gives.

At first the pages of the book
 Are blank and purely fair,
 But time soon writeth memories
 And painteth pictures there.

Love is the little golden clasp
 Which bindeth up the trust,
 O break it not lest all the leaves
 Should scatter and be lost.

FROM CALVIN ESHELMAN.

I HAVE come out from the world and am now trying to serve God as near as I can, but I sometimes forget and leave undone the things I ought to do and do the things I ought not. I live in Farmington with my father and three sisters. My mother died when I was twelve years old; I miss her very much. Little children, be kind to your mother, for you cannot realize how kind she has been to you until she is called away.

Father takes the paper and I like to read it. I always enjoy reading the little folks' letters. We have organized a Sunday-school at our church, and hope to have a large attendance. We have meeting every Sunday at the Cade Creek church. The church is in a prosperous condition; thirty have been added to the church by baptism since last August; among the number were my brother and two sisters. We have many trials and temptations while here on earth, yet this should not discourage us, but when we think of the reward that is laid up in the future for the faithful, we should take courage and go on our way rejoicing; for the crown is not in the beginning nor in the middle, but he that endureth to the end shall be saved.

Can any of the little folks tell how old the Savior was when He was crucified? also, How old was He when He was baptized?

HOW TO HELP MOTHER.

1. Children little realize the anxious care of mother; therefore govern yourselves; be gentle and patient.
2. Guard your tempers, especially in seasons of ill health.
3. Never speak or act toward mother in anger.
4. Do not expect too much of mother. She is often weary and worn by care. Seek to comfort her.
5. Remember, she will serve you when very weary, therefore do not needlessly disturb her. Some children never think "mother is tired."
6. Never ret of a sharp or angry word to mother; it may break her heart.
7. Often speak kindly and lovingly to her, and confess your faults to her.
8. Learn to speak to mother in a gentle tone and kind spirit.
9. Say kind and pleasant things whenever an opportunity offers.
10. Do not neglect little things if they can effect her comfort. Do many little things for her, to save her steps.
11. Avoid moods, and fits, and fits of sulkingness, and angry words.
12. Remember the grave, the judgment-seat, and the scenes of eternity, and that mother may soon be gone. Then you will miss her.

PEWS.

TIME following from the Chesham Herald, gives the history and origin of pews in churches, and shows how selfish some people used to be in trying to have things all to their own comfort regardless of the welfare of others. The sleeping part, however, we ought to say, is rapidly going out of date, and well it may. The Lord does not want to find any of His servants asleep when He comes:

"A writer in the Spannfeldt Kopblau says, The first seats provided in churches, are seen in those of some Anglo-Saxon and Norman edifices, still standing in England. They consist of stone benches which project from the wall, running around the whole interior excepting on the East end. In 1319 the congregations are represented as sitting on the ground or standing, and it was at this period that the people introduced low, rude, three-legged stools promiscuously over the church. Not till after the Norman conquest were wooden seats brought into use. In 1287 a decree was issued, in regard to the wrangling for seats (which had become a decided nuisance), that no one should call any seat in the church his own except noblemen and patrons, each person taking the nearest empty seat he could find, as he entered the church. From 1530 to 1540, as we approach nearer to the reformation, seats were more generally appropriated, their entrance being guarded by cross-bars, and the initial letters of their owners engraved upon them. But directly after the reformation the pew system commenced, for there is extant a complaint from the poor commons, addressed to Henry VIII, in 1546, referring to his decree that a Bible should be in every church at liberty for all to read, because they feared it might be taken into the "guyre" or some "pue." Galleries in churches were not known till 1608.

As early as 1611 luxurious arrangements were considered essential in church pews, and they were raised or cushioned all over their sides, and the seats furnished with comfortable cushions, while foot-stools were also introduced. Next, the sides of the pews were made so high that they entirely concealed the occupants from view. This is said to have been a device of those who desired not to be seen by the officers, who reported all who did not stand up and bow low when the name of Jesus was spoken by the clergyman. Fire places were also built in the pews, and every possible convenience added for the comfort of the highly-favored few. But the services were often so long and tedious that the listeners fell asleep and frequently nodded their approbation of the minister's sermons, while they were totally oblivious of its teachings. Swift's lines, which we quote, allude to the prevailing fashion of church upholstery:

A bolster of the antique mode,
 Compact of timber many a load,
 Such as our ancestors did use,
 Was metamorphosed into pews,
 Which still their ancient nature keep,
 By lodging folks disposed to sleep.

With the reign of Charles I. the reasons for the heightening of the sides of the pews disappeared; and from the civil war they declined to their present height.

BE GOOD TO MOTHER.

How Children:—

YOU who have a kind mother, do you ever think of the many children in the world who have no mother? Some, perhaps, have kind friends to take care of them, but no friend on earth can fill the place of a mother.

Twelve years ago I was one among eight children who surrounded the bed of our dying mother to bid her a last farewell. Oh what a thought must this be—the last time I shall kiss the lips of my dear mother, or look upon her face, who has often smiled upon us, now so pale. She turns her eyes towards me as if to speak; her lips move, but no sound. Oh, can this be real? Shall I never hear my dear mother speak again? This almost crushed my heart. My father said, she wishes to say, be a good girl. She bowed her head,—that was it. May our heavenly Father help me to keep in remembrance your last wish, dear mother.

Children, since then, I have had many trials to pass through. All the trouble and anxiety I ever caused my mother, has been brought forcibly to my mind, and I have been made to realize what a blessing it is to have a kind mother. Dear children, now while your mother is with you, be kind to her, be careful not to cause her unnecessary care and trouble, and be kind to those dear children who have no mother to care for them. If you know of any such now, may the Lord help you in your work, is my prayer.

DIED.

Obituaries should be brief, written on but one side of the paper, and separate from all other business.

ZEIGLER.—In the Swan Creek church, Fulton Co., Ohio, April 18, of consumption, sister Elizabeth Zeigler, daughter of Bro. Silas and sister Sarah Zeigler, aged 18 years, 2 months and 10 days.

The subject of the above notice was one like many others, put off serving the Lord until lately, when the Lord called her to repentance. Said, she was not willing to die until she was baptized. The case seemed to be a critical one, as she was very weak in body. But since she was strong in the Spirit, we repaired to the water about a mile from the house, carried her into the stream, and through the grace of God baptized her. She stood it well, and afterwards was desirous to be released from earth and be with Christ, and an infant brother and sister in the spirit world who preceded her in death, in one week from the time she gave her heart to Jesus. She had her desires complied with and died in the blessed hope of a glorious immortality. May the Lord comfort the parents, brothers and sisters left behind. May the above notice be a warning to others to prepare for death. Funeral services by the writer, assisted by A. Stutzman and D. Berkeley from Rev. H. B. B.

(P. C., please copy.)

ROLSTON.—In Washington Congregation, of consumption, April 26, 1878, sister Rachel A. Rolston, aged 29 years, 8 months and 7 days. She was a faithful servant of Christ, and longed to be with Him in heaven.

JESSE CALVERT.

MOORE.—In the Cold Water church, Butler Co., Iowa, Ethan, infant son of Bro. John and Mrs. Barbara Moore, aged 6 months and 12 days.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Report of a Discussion.

THE proposition discussed read as follows: "One dip into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, constitute Christian Baptism."

Mr. Shull affirmed. Bro. Forney denied.

The first argument was based upon the word baptizo, claiming that its meaning was to submerge but once.

The second argument was drawn from the following figures: Salvation of Noah and family, a figure of baptism (1 Pet. 3: 21). Children of Israel passing through the Red Sea (1 Cor. 10: 1, 2).

The third argument was based upon the following figures. Baptism is compared to a planting (Rom. 6: 5). Baptism is compared to regeneration (Matt. 19: 28). Baptism is compared to a burial (Rom. 6: 4).

Mr. Shull next introduced a number of figures to establish the fact, that wherever there was a singular number on one side of a Bible figure, the same must be on the other. And wherever there existed plurality on one side, there must be plurality on the other. To explain this more clearly, he took the figure of the ten virgins, claiming that there were two kingdoms, and ten virgins in each kingdom, and while there were five wise in one kingdom, there were five wise in the other; and while there were five foolish in one, there were likewise five foolish in the other; consequently plurality on both sides. (Bro. Forney thought a lesson on the kingdom might do his friend much good.)

Bro. Forney took the figure of the Paschal Lamb, and showed that his friend's arguments, in reference to Bible figures, were not well founded, showed the many points of dissimilarity existing between it and that which it prefigured, showed that while the Lamb, slain from the foundation of the world, was singular, the lambs slain by the Israelites were many. In reply to Shull's second argument it was clearly shown, that they had no bearing upon the point at issue, namely, the number of dips in Christian baptism. That as figures of baptism they were given long after the commission Matt. 28: 19, which alone does determine the number of actions in baptism; as figures, the only features they presented were those of salvation.

In reply to first and second figures of the second argument, Bro. Forney, we think, proved very clearly that both planting and regeneration were the results of baptism and not baptism itself, showed that there was quite a difference between the means and the thing accomplished. Referring to Rom. 6: 4, Bro. Forney thought, the passage might do to prove immersion, but could not see that it had any bearing upon the point at issue, for if it had been designed to set forth the action in baptism, it would not have been necessary to do the same in the peculiar phraseology of the commission.

Another argument was founded upon Eph. 4: 5, claiming that Paul here alluded to the number of dips in baptism. Bro. Forney showed from the language here used that Paul was exhorting his Ephesian brethren to unity, and hence had no allusion to the action in baptism; claimed that Paul was not arguing against the doctrine of sprinkling and trine immersion, as his friend thought, for he himself would not admit that they then existed. But designed, showing, that as there was but one Lord, one faith, so there was but one baptism for Jew and Gentile; bond and free, barbarian and Scythian.

Having thus given the principal points brought forward upon the affirmative, in favor of one dip in baptism, we shall now give as briefly as possible some of those produced on the affirmative in favor of three dips. We shall give the points in order as presented:

The proposition read as follows: "Three dips—into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit,—constitute Christian Baptism."

The first argument in favor of the proposition was based upon the Trinity. It was shown that Father, Son and Holy Spirit were one in a certain sense, and three in another. Also while they were one in purpose, they were three in name and office.

The second argument was based upon the fact that these three were first associated together as three distinct persons at Christ's baptism. The Son was baptized and not the Father. The Spirit descended and abode upon Him.

The third argument was based upon the fact, that the Christian is represented as being in the Father, and in the Son, and in the Spirit (Thess. 1: 1; Gal. 5: 25). Showed that in baptism this change of relationship is effected.

The fourth argument was based upon the fact that the Greek Fathers understood the Scriptures to teach trine immersion. For proof referred to Chrysostom, Mennius and Tertullian. Shull here defied Bro. Forney to trace true immersion beyond Tertullian, claiming that in his time the change was made from single to trine immersion.

Bro. Forney here brought upon the witness stand, Clement of Alexandria, who was born only one hundred and fifty years after Christ, and stood at the head of the first Christian seminary in the world, and he says they practiced trine immersion there. Bro. Forney also established the fact beyond contradiction, that single immersion could not be traced beyond the middle of the fourth century, when it was invented by Eusebius, a heretic.

Forney challenged his friend to show where trine immersion was ever called in question, while on the hand it was abundantly proven, that single immersion was an innovation and was not considered valid baptism until legalized by the fourth council of Toledo in the year 423, acting under advice of Pope Gregory. — This showing that it was human and not divine, and lacked three hundred years of being old enough to be Christian baptism; was first practiced in Spain over one thousand miles from Jerusalem, the birth-place of Christian baptism.

The fourth argument was based upon the grammatical construction of the commission as recorded in Matt. 28: 19. Forney showed from the best grammatical authority that in the English language there existed compound elliptical sentences and proved the commission to be such. Showed that it contained a repetition of certain words, which could not be properly dispensed of in any other way. Showed, that as a compound sentence, it consisted in three propositions, and then referred to Latham's "Hand-book of the English Language," for instructions as to how the second and third propositions are formed. He defied his friend Shull, or any one present to show anything to the contrary.

Shull here objected to a repetition of the word name in the commission upon the ground, that it was equivalent to the "firm name," and in it were included the three names, Father, Son and Spirit, claiming that they were a grand unity.

Bro. Forney here proceeded to transpose the commission, so as to have it read, "into the Father's name," in order to compel his friend to admit a repetition of the word name in the second and third proposition, and then referred his friend to Clark's Grammar, page 262, as authority for doing so. Shull seeing that Bro. Forney had sustained, by the best authority, his position with regard to repetition of the word name, he referred to Dr. Comant's Critical Notes on Matt. 28: 19, reading as follows:

"The practice was adopted at an early period, of immersing at the utterance of each name.— But this is clearly contrary to the terms of the commission. To justify such a practice, the form should have been either, 'in the names of,' or 'in the name of the Father, and in the name of the Son, and in the name of the Holy Spirit.'"

In reply to this, Bro. Forney referred to A. Campbell, Myers, McConnell and others who accepted the repetition of the word name, just as Dr. Comant says it ought to read to imply three dips, and further claimed that when the ellipsis is properly supplied, it is the way the commission does read.

The next effort made upon the part of Mr. Shuff, in order to sustain his position, was to diagram the commission so as to engulf the three names in one, and necessarily excluding the repetition of the preposition of, thus rejecting a part of the phraseology of the proposition agreed upon before entering upon the discussion.

To sustain his position, he (Shuff) quoted, if we mistake not, from a work, entitled "McKene's Greek Grammar," on the Genitive in Greek as authority for dropping the preposition, when the three names, (as he chimed in this case) are engulfed in one. In this same connection the same author explained the Genitive in Greek to be equivalent to the preposition of in English; connecting its subsequent term with its antecedent term, which it modifies, which corresponded with the authorities referred to in Clark's Grammar, for transposing the language, "Into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," so as to read, "Into the Father's name, and into the Son's, and into the Holy Spirit's," thus showing that in the Greek as well as in the English, the repetition of the word name was necessarily required, a fact to which Bro. Forney called his friend's attention, asking him now to supply the preposition of, which he refused to do, claiming that the Father, Son and Holy Spirit were one.

Bro. Forney, in order that the audience might more fully comprehend the idea he wished to sustain, proceeded to place in diagram the commission, supplying the ellipsis in the second and third proposition, after which he called upon his friend to parse it in any other way than that in which he had diagrammed, and show the grammatical relation of words, as required by the rules of grammar. His friend Shuff not seeming disposed to undertake the task, Bro. Forney then proceeded to parse it himself, at the same time extending the liberty to any one present who might feel disposed to ask any questions or offer any criticisms; but there were none offered. Bro. Forney repeatedly called upon his friend Shuff to parse the proposition of and point out its terms of relation, which he refused to do. Mr. Shuff here denied the verbatim reading of the commission; but afterwards said that Bro. Forney's analysis was correct, but said, he would not risk his salvation on the weak phraseology of the English commission.

We are sorry, we cannot give in full Bro. Forney's closing speech. It was, as Mr. Shuff himself acknowledged, eloquent indeed, and while it was eloquent, it was fruitful of solid argument, such as riveted convictions in the hearts of all present, and will ever loom up in the minds of those who heard it, as a monument in defense of Gospel truth.

Bro. Forney proved himself amply able for the occasion, and ready for any emergency that might present itself. Mr. Shuff made an able effort in defence of the faith and practice of his brethren, and all that it lacked, was the "thus saith the Lord," to sustain it. The discussion passed off pleasantly, both speakers parting with the best of feelings. Our brethren were pleased with the results, being much strengthened in their faith, and looking forward with bright anticipations to the time when they shall reap a bountiful harvest as the result of the "bread cast upon the waters."

From Lemuel Hillery.

Dear Brethren:—

If it is not out of place, I would write a few lines. I feel a deep sense of unworthiness, in occupying space in your paper, not because I think the sheet is any too good to give space to my weak and imperfect efforts. The reason is, I fear, that I might be the means of having something published, which would only retard the progress of truth, for already we have such crippling work before us from able writers. Where there are hundreds of members and old, organized churches, the cause will stand a pretty heavy shock, but away, on the outskirts, where the cause is only weak, we fear such blunders. If there is anything wrong in church government, talk about it at home, or at the District Meetings and the A. M.

A missionary paper should devote its pages to the salvation of souls; and what belongs to the congregations, districts, or annual meetings, let that be discussed where it belongs. Whenever there is anything wrong, keep on working until everything is arranged according to the Word of God, and then if you want to publish anything about it, it will be enough to say, thank God, we are planted upon the Gospel, the whole Gospel, and nothing but the Gospel; otherwise your lack of using proper judgment to come to right conclusions, will only end in useless public discussions, much to the retarding of the cause of Christ.

The time is soon coming when the Northern District of Illinois will consider her missionary work of the past year, and to act for the furtherance of the cause during the coming year. Oh, may God help the brethren and sisters to meet and labor in the name of Jesus for the purity of the church and the salvation of souls. We have need to be encouraged for the success that the Brethren have had on this field, although the work was not gone into, according to the true order. With a brother appointed to this work, qualified to do the work of an evangelist, much more can be accomplished during the coming year.

It has been but a short time since we commenced our work in Central Illinois. We had but six members in all this country, now we number forty and there are more applicants for membership. — But we cannot expect to accomplish very much towards building up and organizing churches, unless some brother will move to this country, who will be faithful in his living, true to the cause in character, as well as faithful in preaching; then I believe we could do much. There ought to be three ministers located on this mission; with such a start as we now have, if faithfully maintained, in ten years we would grow up a powerful district in Central Illinois, as much so as the one North and South of us.

One of our dear sisters in Bureau Co., has left the little band of believers here, to join the brotherhood on high, namely sister Catharine Kulp, the daughter of Share and Elizabeth Stauffer, in whose barn we held our Love-feast last year. Sister Kulp had been a member of the Campbellite, or Christian church, as called by some. She united with us in the face of derision and opposition from some. Her experience in uniting with the Brethren is so peculiar, that I may write out a brief sketch of it in the future, and have it published.

I receive a goodly number of letters from different places, as well as different brethren, to know what I expect to do when my time is out here. I cannot tell, but want to do what is right, and I believe that will be to preach and labor with my hands as I am able and have opportunity, which I try to do wherever I go. Some ask the question: "Will you go West?" If the Lord will, I expect to go West after our District Meeting; how far I don't know, but want to go to Western Iowa, and also to Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska. Cannot tell how long I will remain West, but think about eight weeks, and I would say that I am willing to stop with the brethren, wherever I am most needed. Would like to attend some Love-feasts with the Brethren in the West; but wherever you expect ten or twelve preachers, you will have enough. There may be places where the Brethren will not have much help, there my effort might be gladly received.

As much as I love to associate with the brethren in large congregations, yet I feel like traveling through the West to visit and hold meetings in neighborhoods of isolated members. The fact is, in what little I can do, I am a kind of a frontier missionary preacher. I cannot help it, and I do not want to help it very much.

The Lord willing, we will start West the fifth of June; until that time you can address your letters to me at Shannon, Carroll Co., Ill. From the fifth to the fifteenth of June I want to put in my time any place that the brethren may think best, in the Eastern portion of Iowa. By the 15th we want to be in Marshall Co., Iowa, on our way further West; my wife will accompany me.

Brethren wishing to write me, can address their letters to Quarry, Marshall Co., Iowa, care of John Murray.

Dear Brethren:—

BROT. T. D. LYON and I held a meeting at Sevier, in the C. M. church, with the understanding that we were to have the use of the house until we would see fit to close. The first evening or so, the congregation was rather small; but it still continued to increase until we had about a full house, good attention and good order. Bro. T. D. Lyon had been requested to preach on Trine Immersion, which he did. After meeting closed, their old minister walked up into the stand and said that he would review Trine Immersion, Feet-washing and the Lord's Supper, when we got through, which was quite a damper on the meeting, inasmuch as it said, these people have not preached the truth. As I did not feel willing to continue the meeting in this fog, I went to him next morning and asked him to make his review the coming night, and then we could go on with our meeting until we got through. — But he said that he would announce it that evening, and make his review the next. So we agreed, and that night I spoke from the full Commission. After meeting he announced to the congregation, that he would preach on the subject of Trine Baptism, the Feet-washing and the Lord's Supper.

When the evening came, he said nothing about it, but reviewed my discourse, and that the next night he would review his former subject. This he did, but according to my judgment did not succeed very well. So, taking two nights out of our meeting, and destroying the interest, we thought best to just quit. But as it seemed to be a good time for reviewing, I met their two preachers next morning and told them, that there had been enough cross-firing done, and that I would now meet either of them, and we would review our differences, until we were through; when the old man excused himself on account of age, and said that the other was the man. So we let it rest, telling them, that they must father all that they nurse in their church, and we would do the same. So in a few days we went back and offered the following proposition:

In order that we may have a better understanding between our respective denominations, the Dunkards and Campbellites, we agree to meet and discuss our differences of doctrine and practice; each to defend what they fellowship and tolerate in their church; each to affirm their own doctrine and practice. We also offered as a starting-point, that the Dunkards are nearer right than the Campbellites, or they might affirm. But he would not come to time, backed out like a man, saying, with this proposition we would dig down towards the hard pan.

Dear Brethren:—

A FEW lines from this part of the country, will probably prove acceptable to you. Our country certainly is not excelled by any of the great Western States, and has some advantages not enjoyed by others.

Our soil we consider inexhaustible, and our climate we consider as good as can be found in America. It is generally admitted that we have a better climate than Nebraska, and a better soil than Southern Kansas and our country is settling up with a rapidity that is astonishing. We have two organized churches of the Brethren in this county. This (White Rock) and Bewak, numbering altogether about 130 members, but there is still a demand for ministering brethren to move here. There is some government land here yet, and some very cheap farms and claims for sale, and I would just add that for a healthy country, we can compete with Colorado.

I will cheerfully correspond with Eastern Brethren, who want information about this country, with a view of emigrating thither.

Yours Fraternally,

J. D. SWITZER.

From Iowa.

Dear Brethren:—

THE Southern District council of Iowa, held with the Monroe Co., brethren, passed off very pleasantly the 12th and 13th of April. — Peace and harmony prevailed throughout the entire proceedings of the council. But four queries were under consideration.

The Church Extension Union was taken cognizance of, and disposed of as follows. While we endorse the Church Extension Union as a great and glorious work, and wish it unbounded success in extending the borders of Zion, would prefer to keep up our own missionary work, commenced by this district council, held at Mt. Edna, Adams Co., in 1874.

We had preaching at three different places at night during the time. The church in Monroe Co., is under the care of Elder Daniel Miller, assisted in the ministry by Hiram Barkman and Daniel Miller, jun.

We found many young members in that congregation, that are an ornament to the church. May the good Master help them to be faithful to the end!

GLEANINGS.

From Dancausville Congregation. — God bless the abundant efforts you are putting forth to sow the seeds of truth and righteousness in the hearts of His people. Sabbath, April 14th was the regular day for services here. The weather was delightful. The house was well filled with anxious listeners. We found upon reaching the place of meeting that, much to our surprise, Bro. Joseph B. Sell, of Elk Lick, Somerset Co., Pa., would address the meeting. He spoke from James 1st chapter, latter clause of the 23rd verse, "He is like a man, beholding his natural face in a glass." He portrayed the subject to our minds first in a temporal, then in a spiritual point of view. The sermon was concluded by Bro. James

A. Sell, who, it is known by many of our readers, was absent from home, preaching for about two months. It is also known by many that Bro. Joseph B. Sell in former years was one of the speakers in this congregation. He and companion were here on a farewell visit to their friends, when they expect to start for a field of labor at Shoals, Ind. God bless the dear brother and family in their mission field, so that their labors may be crowned with a home at God's right hand, is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

E. R. STIFLER.

From Cerro Gordo, Ill. — Had meeting in the Methodist church at Ogden, Champaign Co., Ill., and one meeting at St. Joseph, where we baptized three, with good prospects for more. The Universalist minister soon left Ogden, as he could only get a few hearers. I would like if some of our missionaries would stop at Ogden.

JOHN METZGER.

From Ashland College. — Operations have now commenced on the College grounds, and the Trustees have appointed regular meetings to be held during the Summer and Fall, on the second Tuesday of each month, at 10 o'clock, A. M., and the Building Committee to meet every Saturday, at one o'clock P. M., during the Summer and Fall. All correspondence concerning soliciting funds and subscriptions, should be addressed to the Secretary. By order of the Trustees,

H. K. MYERS, Sec'y.

From Grundy Center, Iowa. — We are still in a prosperous condition here. Bro. Bashor was with us and gave us four meetings. The Word was preached with power, and we hope may bring fruit accordingly. Our town is growing very fast; last Spring, when I came here, there were only two members at this place. Now there are eighteen members here, and we have one of the finest counties in the State, good society, water, and land of a superior quality. To brethren and sisters who are thinking of making a move, we would say, Come and see our town and country.

J. M. SNYDER.

From Antioch, Cal. — Our meetings commenced the first of March, at what is called the East Union, on the sand plains, near Eld. George Wolfe's place. There were four preachers the most of the time, namely Elder Wolfe, S. Broadhurst, J. P. Wolfe and Waldemar Meyers. They preached Christ and Him crucified, which made sinners tremble and saints to rejoice. We had rainy weather a part of the time, but not enough to stop meetings. I stayed here one month, and was much pleased to see four make the noble confession, and come out on the Lord's side.

Grain looks well and we expect big crops this year. Haying will commence the first of May. God bless you and your work.

THOMAS MORGAN.

From A. N. Huffman. — I have been reading your paper, and like it very much. I think it is just the paper for everybody to read, and I wish to subscribe for it, as I do not get to hear the brethren preach very often. There are five members here, all of the same family, those are all the members near us. We moved from Oregon here last Fall, and I hope there will more come, and settle close by, so we could have preaching more frequently. This is a new country, just settling up. There is good land here to be taken yet, but there is a big immigration to this country now, they are coming in every day, and I hope there will be some Brethren among them.

Pine Creek, Whitman Co., W. T. Y.

Sunday-School Organized. — On Sunday, April the 7th, the members belonging to the Greenville meeting-house, located on the Eastern side of the Allegheny mountains, and belonging to the Meyersdale congregation, met to organize a Sunday-school. Quite a number of the members and friends of the cause having convened, Bro. Hady was called to the chair, who, with appropriate remarks addressed the meeting, followed by C. G. Lint. After the meeting, officers were appointed to serve for one month, after which they will be elected for one year. The prospects for a good school are rather flattering; hope they may succeed in having good attendance and the good results, they are laboring for. The school is to convene every Sunday at 9 o'clock during the Summer months. May God's blessings crown their efforts.

MISSIONARY HYMN.

HARK! the voice of Jesus crying—
 "Who will go and work to-day?
 Fields are white and harvest waiting;
 Who will hear the sheaves away?"
 Loud and strong the Master calleth,
 Rich reward He offers thee;
 Who will answer, gladly saying,
 "Here am I; send me, send me!"

If you cannot cross the ocean,
 And the heathen lands explore,
 You can find the heathen nearer,
 You can help them at your door,
 If you cannot give your thousands,
 You can give the widow's mite;
 And the least you do for Jesus,
 Will be precious in His sight.

If you cannot speak like angels,
 If you cannot preach like Paul,
 You can tell the love of Jesus,
 You can say He died for all.
 If you cannot rouse the wicked
 With the judgment's dread alarms,
 You can lead the little children
 To the Savior's waiting arms.

If you cannot be the watchman,
 Standing high on Zion's wall,
 Pointing out the path to heaven,
 Offering life and peace to all;—
 With your prayers and with your bounties
 You can do what heaven demands;
 You can be like faithful Aaron,
 Holding up the prophet's hands.

If among the older people,
 You may not be apt to teach;
 "Feed my lambs," said Christ our Shepherd,
 "Place the food within their reach."
 And it may be that the children
 You have led with treading hand,
 Will be found among your jewels,
 When you reach the better land.

Let none hear you idly saying,
 "There is nothing I can do,"
 While the souls of men are dying,
 And the Master calls for you.
 Take the task He gives you gladly,
 Let His work your pleasure be;
 Answer quickly when He calleth,
 "Here am I; send me, send me!"

ONE THING IS NEEDFUL.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Brother J. C. Marsh, of Illinois:—

THANKS for your Heaven-savoring missive. I could not satisfactorily decipher your address, and so my reply was returned. I now send it to press, in hope of its reaching you. Mary chose the good part, which was promised her as everlasting possession. Sitting at the feet of Jesus was not the choice which Christ so highly commended. The complaint of Martha against her sister was not without ground, even in Heaven's Order, God is a Mighty Worker, and so is His Son. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Christ needed a good dinner as much as Martha needed Bread from Heaven. She might have shared Mary's "good part" even while busy in the pantry and while preparing a meal for the hungry Savior and His Disciples. Mary's station at the feet of the Godman may have been a typical act, but what it represented she might have enjoyed in the kitchen frying meat or baking bread. Her choice was Jesus, not a peculiar physical posture. She had a true appreciation of His incarnation, and a perfect repose of soul in it, and this was infinitely better than Martha's fussy ado about "the meat that perisheth." My mind fills out the unfinished Gospel picture by longing Mary with a bound to her feet to assist her fretting sister to hasten dinner. The "one thing needful" will not so etherealize us as to raise us above food and raiment. But it will unquestionably so exalt us to the higher citizenship as to leave behind the follies of fashion, and the indulgence of artificial appetites. Mary's choice does not mean a garter and dandy lip for the Brethren, and hats and ebignons for the sisters. Christ's whole life was a preparation for the Cross; and in accepting Him we begin where He ended.

To take Mary's typical position is to welcome the thorn-crown, the nails, and the derision, and the death-agony. The prickly coronet of the world's contempt does not fit the head that glories in fashionable rigging; nor the cup of atoning Divine-human blood the lips befouled with carnal nastiness. The Divine sufferer is fine enough to catch the most infinitesimal gnaw, and our throats should not have room enough for the passage of a camel. No one can sit at the feet of Jesus who has not found the Crucified, and to find Him is to lose all else. Here is the trouble with our pleasure-loving, flesh-honoring, world-worshipping members. They know not the import and glory of having "fellowship with Christ's sufferings." They will rather be under the ban of the Church and the frown of the Crucified, than break with the world.

A certain Lutheran fashion-worshiper calls our dressy members "sensible Christians." Senseless idolatry rather. When the soul is in sympathy with the Cross, we "are crucified to the world, and the world unto us." There is no inconsistency in Lutherans going with the world; but Christ is "not of the world," and Christians are like Him. The life of Jesus in us, will express itself in the mould of His incarnation. "One thing is needful"—to be what Jesus was in the flesh, "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." IN CHARACTER AND CONDUCT. This is Christian; all else is the offspring of Anti-christ.

THE DANGERS OF WORLDLY PLEASURE.

BY JAMES STONE.

FROM the consideration of the dangers which beset the Christian in his conduct with the world, and temptations which too often draw the professed child of God aside from duty and true happiness; if we are truly children of God, we have been chosen by Him in His eternal counsel, to a life of usefulness, as well as to a life of holiness. Everything in our position in the age in which we live, in the solemn duties to which we are called in the terms of salvation, and the price paid for our redemption, calls on us to aim at a high standard of piety, and to the attainment of eminent holiness. If we would have at last an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God, we must make religion the business of life; it is not enough to profess it, we must be so permeated with the Spirit of Christ that it shall shine forth in every act of life. It is because the love of the world and conformity to it, hinder the prayers of the Christian, prevent his usefulness, destroy his influence, and mar his peace of heart, that I wish to present to us the dangers and evils of seeking after worldly pleasures and amusements, and the vain and trifling fashions.

The motto of the Christian should be, let us lay aside every weight. Some appear to act as though there were no line of demarcation between the church and the world, except that which is made at the table of the Lord. The great question which every one is bound to answer, is not how far he may live away from God, and yet be a Christian, nor how near he may inlude the world, and yet maintain his standing in the church, but how he may most honor his Savior and promote the interests of His cause and the salvation of souls; and the good rule of Christian life is, whether ye eat or drink or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God. Conformity to the world, renders a man or woman useless as a member of the church of Christ, the object for which they are placed there, is to honor God and advance the interests of His kingdom. "Herein," saith Christ, "is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit." But he who allows himself to be drawn aside from his profession and to become conformed to the world in its sinful tastes and fashions and amusements, loses not only the confidence of his brethren, but the respect of the world as a Christian; his influence as a Christian ceases when he crosses the line that divides the church and the world.

Even the enemies of our holy religion respect and honor the man who leads a life consistent with his Christian profession, and look upon their lives as a more convincing argument in favor of the truth of Christianity, than all the demonstrations of the defenders of the Gospel. The logic of the life often succeeds, while other testimony fails. But he who in effect tells the world that religion has no pleasures, and who when he desires them, seeks them, amid scenes of gayety and amusements and dissipation, of what use is he as a witness for Christ? What new lessons does he give of the value and power of religion? What proof does he afford that "wisdom's ways are pleasantness, and all her paths are peace?" So far from being a witness for Christ, he is leading men to question the reality of the religion he professes, and to despise the Gospel whose effect he fearfully misrepresents. His example so far as it extends, is an injury to the cause he professes, whenever he passes over to the world, and is led astray by its wiles. He cannot stand neutral. If he is doing no good, he is accomplishing evil. If the fig tree is barren, it is a denuder of the ground.

The cause of religion suffers whenever its professors fail to manifest its proper results. And Christ, were He questioned, What are these wounds in thy hands? might answer, those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends, many a fair and flourishing professor has gone back to the world, parleying with temptations. Our own age and times have produced more than one appalling example of men who once stood high in the church, but who yielding to the fascinations of pleasure that the world called innocent, were drawn down to ruin.

The Gospel admits of no compromise with the world, it requires of us that we give all to Christ, that when we have laid our poor sinful hearts at the foot of His cross, that there they might be washed and renewed; we consecrate their entire affections and impulses to the service of Him who died that we might live. The sight of that cross should forever annihilate all thoughts of self, and all desire for any pleasures which do not spring from the love and grace of Christ. Resolve then in His strength that you will forsake all to follow Him, and that you will renounce everything that may interfere with His service. You have a glorious vocation. Look over the sacred oracles and see with what dignity and honor the Christian is invested, linked as he is with the sovereign and eternal purposes of God. The apostle says, "ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should shew forth the praise of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvelous light."

A BEGINNING.

BY J. D. LADD.

ALL created beings have a beginning. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," and in this beginning God created man—Adam and Eve, and from them all the multiplied millions of human beings have originated. From this beginning the courts of heaven are made to sing with praise to the Creator, and from the same beginning, are filled, the pits of hell, and the cries of lamentation are heard from the regions of the damned.

"Little beginnings sometimes make big endings." For instance, a stone in a stream sometimes is the cause of an island; the stone breaks the force of the current, and the sand begins to gather between it; and it continues to accumulate until an island is formed. The large Dunes on the Baltic are formed in this way, any little object that is placed on the wave-beaten shore may cause great dunes, it may only hold a small measure of sand at the first wave, but each succeeding wave leaves its portion behind the small heaps, and though it may take years to build it, the gradual deposit of sand there by the waves, grows higher and higher, until it becomes a mountain of sand, and the fern, sand outs, pine and spruce take hold, and the consequence is that the one flat wave-beaten shore, now is a mountain covered with large trees, brush and grasses. So little beginnings have often made mountains that are able to breast the fierce storm and the mighty beating waves.

Just so with the seeker after truth, at first his mind may be as barren as the wave-beaten shore; but finally he lays hold of one of God's promises, this holds some sand or proves an incentive to lay hold on other promises—every wave leaves its portion, or every thought adds strength to the cause, and so he goes on growing stronger and stronger, until he becomes able to resist the beating waves of temptation,—every word of God's truth has been as a grain of sand to add to, and strengthen the now ponderous mountain that is able to resist every besetment of a fierce enemy.

A break in the levee of the Mississippi widens and grows larger until a great volume of water is let out, and thousands of acres are overflowed. Just so with the good designed persons, if they yield to one temptation, however small it may seem, it is a break in men's moral character, and one temptation will succeed another, once they yield one time after another, until they become engulfed in the very pit of despair before they are aware of it. Many other little beginnings often make great bad endings. As for instance one sip of ardent spirits sometimes is not only the cause of premature death, but sinks the soul lower than the grave. One bad word sometimes makes a very great sweener, and even worse, it sometimes is the introduction of blasphemy. One bad act sometimes takes a man to prison, penitentiary, and even the gallows. Hence we see that one drink, one bad word, or one bad act, often results in the worst of misery, the greatest of crimes, besides sinking the soul to a miserable hell.

GUIDES

LEISURE is sweet to those who have earned it, but burthenome to those who get it for nothing.

If you ever promise at all, take care, at least, that it be to nobody that tony suffer by trusting you.

He who wishes to reap a harvest of the tears of sincerity, must first sow the true love in his bosom.

God accepts man's hearty desire, and the will instead of the deed, when they have not the power to fulfill it.

He that does good for good's sake, seeks neither praise nor reward, though sure of both.

JEHOVAH'S DWELLING PLACE.

WHERE is a truth so great
Nature dare not deny,
Yet foolish man sits in debate,
And doubts a God on high.

"In ray warm rays he dwells,"
Said the uprising sun,
And crimson sky at twilight tells
Who hath its tinting done.

Gently the falling dew
Frothens the suburban sod,
And whispers sweetly, "Unto you
I am Jehovah, God."

"In me," the thunder roars;
"In me," the rain-drop cry;
"In our pavilion upward soar,"
The gathering clouds reply.

"And on my speedy wings Rebelle," the whirlwind saith;
The portland air, obeying, brings
His even-qualified breath.

The garners full of grain,
The beaming earth and sea,
Sing evermore, the glad refrain,
"Jehovah dwells in me."

The insect chirps his thanks,
And drinks his drop of dew;
While violets on mossy banks,
How sweet God maketh you!

An old, old Book I turn,
Scanning its leaves all o'er,
Jehovah's dwelling-place I learn,
Is fixed forevermore.

Yet a more powerful voice
Than all combined can be,
Sings me this song, and I rejoice,
"Jehovah dwells in me."

— Scherbel.

INFIDELITY.

BY DR. FAIRBANKS.

A MUSCULAR man may boastingly lift just one ounce too much and become disabled for life. An intellectual man, religiously inclined, may investigate more than he can comprehend, and thus get his imagination inflamed. Jealousy is reversed love. Infidelity is reversed piety. A tearless eye, is oftentimes a symptom or indication of congestion of the brain. When a prominent lawyer of this city stood by the death-bed of the wife he professed to love, without shedding a single tear, and afterward issued invitation cards, asking his friends to attend the funeral, and "come with a cheerful countenance," and then read to them a discourse written by himself, denouncing Christianity and the clergy, would it not in this case be charitable to suppose him to be the victim of a mental delusion or hallucination?

If infidelity is a disease, then it is acute and chronic, endemic and epidemic, and very frequently contagious. The causes are various; but not infrequently persons meeting with church troubles become separated, if not in fact then in sympathy from the body. Such characters are to be compared to a meteor in space attracted by nothing else, it gravitates first slowly, then more rapidly, and finally with the greatest velocity strikes the center of attraction in the solar system. So with the individual who is deprived of religious society, he will eventually land in a moral hell, unless attracted as he passes some religious body or planet.

That kind of unbelief which is contagious and epidemic is only met with in times of great moral commotion, and among the people more than one hundred years ago, those belonging to the American colonies became restless and the spirit of insubordination had full sway, not only in this country, but in France and other parts of the world. A very small tax on tea was grasped as a pretext and revolt against the king causing eight years of revolution. Paine the son of a Quaker who had endeared himself to the Americans, went to France in time to find a worse state of society, here he witnessed the evils of priestcraft. The constant excitement as a political writer in America diluted and distorted his ideas to an abnormal degree; it was while intoxicated with this spirit, and while a political prisoner without a Bible, at hand that he wrote a portion of his work against the priests, and what he supposed to be their religion and his "Age of Reason," is one relic of his productions during the political cyclone through which he passed.

A hundred years have passed and what do we see? His cry will yet record the events of the last five centuries—the most remarkable of any period known to the world—the spirit of communism radiating from Paris in 1870, has spread all over the world, the cry is not, down with the king, but down with the capitalist and the capitalist—cities and corporations are threatened with the touch, insubordination is rampant everywhere, business has become prostrated and the supposed rich men are discovered to be poor. The honest officials are proven to be corrupt, those standing high in the church have debarred themselves by gross immoralities—our whole financial system has been rotten, and men distrust and fear each other. While the Moody's of Christendom are converting infidels, the Ingersols of America and Bradlaugh's of Europe are spreading their contagion among Christians—surely men's hearts fail them. How long this condition of society shall continue no one can say, but when the clouds are dispersed, and the dead buried, then it is time to give attention to the disabled, and Christ's method of teaching should be adopted, when He says, "He that provideth not for his own household is worse than an infidel." It would seem that this class of people is not considered hopeless. Here improvidence is a greater sin than infidelity. When Christ drove the money changers out of the temple He handled them rather roughly; they doubtless were considered among the most pious of the Jews, who have ever counted acquisitiveness a virtue. What a contrast in His treatment of Zaccheus the skeptic, he was a man for his work. So with many skeptics of this generation, kind and winning words are more effectual than abuse and misrepresentation.

PRIDE AND HUMILITY.

BY R. F. MESSLER.

"HEAR ye, and give ear; be not proud; for the Lord hath spoken" (Jer. 13: 15). "Be not highminded, but fear" (Rom. 11: 20). Pride and humility are correlative or opposite terms; and the Scriptures as forcibly condemn the one as they commend the other. "Pride goeth before destruction," and "before honor is humility." And again it is said, "God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble." The popular teaching, that a man to be a man must possess some degree of pride, is not sustained by the Word. With the same logic, as well contend that, to be a man, he must be intemperate to some degree. For intemperance bears the same relation to temperance, or sobriety that pride bears to humility. They are both defined as excesses; the term intemperance not being applicable to the use of anything until the point of excess is reached, neither the term pride until the point of inordinate self-esteem is reached. Hence we contend that "Every one that is proud at heart is an abomination to the Lord." Humility is an essential trait of the Christian character.

The pious of every age, patriarchs and prophets, apostles and evangelists, in walk and precept, attest the truth of it. The Master Himself in His grandest efforts taught the importance of it, for it was His greatest theme. Witness Him calling the chosen from the lowest walks of life; making Himself of no reputation by forbidding His disciples to tell His fame abroad; showing them in the example of a little child what it cost to attain to honor in the kingdom of heaven; and finally bowing down to the lowest degree of humility and grasping, as it were, in one embrace, the extreme height and depth of glory and humiliation. He ascends to the right hand of "the majesty on high," leaving the footprints in the valley of humiliation, and signifying thereby that we, too, must tread the self-same road.

Pride, on the other hand, is a trait of the unregenerate; for it cannot dwell in the heart of the Christian. It is the sinner's vital spirit, the main spring of his actions. Acknowledging no God, but the gratification of his carnal appetite, he bows at every shrine that promises perishing wealth or worldly honor. Pride was Satan's condemnation—the weapon of his suicidal action when he fell from his exalted position. He therefore knows its power, and knows, that if it could drag angels down to hell, how much more effectually it can be used to hunt down a weak and already fallen race. Hence he is so eager to plant the seeds of highmindedness, early in the hearts of the children of men and make that the leading motive of their lives, that it may so effectually occupy the ground of the mind as to exclude the "good seed" and drag his victims down to the abode of demons and spirits damned.

A careful observer would probably attribute the evils of the day to many causes and rightly too. But the most frightful source of evil is pride. It is as some one said, the first begotten of the devil and was implanted in the heart of our ancient mother while she was looking upon that fascinating tree and listening to the unhallowed suggestions and false reasonings of Satan. Her mind becoming inflated with the idea of becoming a goddess in wisdom, she, no doubt, adopted the devil's subterfuge that, "Whatever is, is right," and reasoning from such premises, she probably concluded that as the Lord had made the fruit good to the taste and pleasant to the eye, and had placed it in such a conspicuous place, he intended it for enjoyment. Having silenced her conscience, she raised her hand and plucked the fruit. The rankling poison shot through her moral system and brought shame and woe upon herself and the myriads of her offspring.

Why is there such an array of opposition to the plain teachings of the Bible? Why are the Scriptures so criminally wrested from their true meaning and made to bend to the whims and carnal inclinations of so many of the professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus? Why is infidelity raising her ulcerous form and swelling her blasphemous ranks daily, yea hourly, with recruits from the rising generation? Are there not some of the same causes working to-day that operated eighteen hundred years ago? Does Satan lay aside a weapon because it has become old with using? Nay, verily. The blessed Master came to His own and His own received Him not, because He came not in that pomp and splendor so congenial to the highminded Jews. And when convinced of His Messiahship, many, like the young man whom Jesus loved, turned away from Him when they heard that "humility was the price of glory." Multitudes procrastinate their time to-day by listening to the wiles of Satan which he plays upon their proud hearts—magnifying every sacrifice to double proportions through the instrumentality of pride. So, that instead of falling in with the children of God, they turn away "sorrowing," and openly oppose the message of truth or flee to some faith in which the valley of humility is bridged over. Many churches have filled up that valley which abound with so many blessed promises, by changing or discontinuing the ordinances of the house of God, and rejecting the doctrine of non-conformity. Such churches have become leprous with sin and spotted with the world. Infidels point to them as the crowning argument of the falsity of Christianity. The Christian world stands shocked, and the faith of many is shaken by the impious conduct of leading professors of all churches. Enslaved by fashion and being "lovers of pleasure," they seek the haunts of wickedness to gratify the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life.

Many again, bring the standard of Christianity so low that they can the more easily draw in the multitudes and swell their membership, and thus gratify the spiritual pride of those who care less for souls than for imposing edifices and thronged congregations. And why all this? Yea, and more! What gnawing canker has eaten to the hearts of many of the old church organizations throughout the world, and made them wither as under some blighting curse, so that they now stand only as monuments of human folly, or perhaps, are bearing and shedding the deadly fruits of blasphemy to the destruction of many precious souls? What is it that renders it impossible to recognize many professors in society, on the street or even in the sacred assembly, unless it be, perhaps, by their mocking efforts to have the world believe that they have a shining light somewhere by lifting the bushel a little, or throwing a few chips into the fire upon the hill on Sabbath days, and on Monday morning kicking them far down in the valley that the burning and smoking faggots may not interfere with the carnal pursuits of the meek?

Go yonder and read the answer to these questions in those gaudy edifices, with their lofty pinnacles, their flashy trappings, their gorgeous pulpit and five-thousand-a-year occupants. Read it in the rustling silks, the downy plumes and the jeweled bosoms that gather around their polluted altars. Read it in the unhallowed walk, the haughty bearing and the inordinate ambition of the ministry and the laity. Ho, read ye, as ye run! For it is written all over, within and without, with the devil's own pen: Dial of highmindedness, ambition and pride!

"But fear," says the apostle. Fear implies watchfulness and an unceasing effort to subdue all selfishness and vanity. Not by becoming indifferent to all the needs of the body and mind, and thereby inducing sloth and slovenliness to the shame of the church; but by a proper comprehension of the precept, "Be not conformed to this world," and "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." We should find our true relation and dependence upon God in the dust of repentance, and then by prayerful vigilance, maintain that state through the grace of God promised unto us. Our eyes shall then see, as we are seen. Our nothingness will then loom up as a great something, making us to feel humble, shamefaced and dependent. Our weaknesses being constantly before our eyes, stimulate us to renewed exertions to become strong in the power of Christ, and withdraw all dependence upon self, and the things that weigh us down. Being thus buried in Christ, we are able to fight the battle of the Lord to a triumphant ending—save our souls and gain the end of our being.

THE UNGRATEFUL MAN.

BY JOHN H. PECK.

THERE was a certain poor man, who had a very rich neighbor; unlike most rich men, this neighbor of his was very good and kind; so much so that he would regularly administer to the wants of this poor neighbor of his; and so liberal and profuse was he in his administrations that the poor man actually grew rich. Unlike the rich man however, this poor man as he increased in riches also grew selfish; he would look around him and see others poor like he once was, and wonder why they are not better off; he forgot that had it not been for his generous neighbor he would not be where he now is; he even went as far as to accuse those that are poor of being so through their own bad management, and to attribute his accumulations to his own smartness, instead of thanking his benevolent neighbor for what he had. He was naturally avaricious and began to look around him for bargains, and he was not very scrupulous about making just bargains, his main object was to make paying bargains; even if in his dealings he would oppress the poor, as long as he did not make himself liable to the law, he claimed that he was doing a square and upright business.

He would employ poor men to labor for him, and when the labor was done would sit up half a night trying to persuade the poor laborer, whose wife and children were dependent on the labor of his hands and the blessings of God for support, that he did not owe him as much as he claimed. Though his rich neighbor would often remind him how he helped him along, and point out to him how he should now treat other poor, he would make all kinds of excuses, and utterly ignore the advice of his good friend. He would not even loan money to a poor man for fear he might break up and he would lose it, but always had money to loan to those who were rich like himself, and not in actual need, but simply wanted it to speculate upon. He professed to be a Christian, and made long prayers, but brotherly love was not one of his most prominent characteristics; he would not hesitate to rob a poor man out of an honest contract just to gratify one of his own peculiar whims, and perhaps replenish his pocket book a little. He never considered it his duty to patronize a brother in his business transactions, in fact he preferred to deal with outsiders, because he could take the advantage of them with less danger of being exposed and subjected to reproof. He was always needed at home about the time the brethren began to talk about raising money for missionary or other charitable purposes.

He had a great deal to say about secret societies, and was loud in his denun-ciations of ministers of the Gospel and others who belong to secret orders, it never even occurred to him that he is exercising a greater influence over others to induce them to join these orders than any preacher ever did by joining himself. It just takes such members as he in the church to drive the poorer ones to the sad alternative of joining secret societies, in the hope of procuring support for their widows and orphans when they have passed away.

I do not refer to any particular one as representing the ungrateful man in this narrative, but there are too many that would fill the bill. And to them I will say, Jesus Christ is your rich neighbor, through His goodness and mercy you have what you have; don't forget that the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, and the time is coming when you will have to answer for the disposition you made of your wealth; and please don't accuse the poor of being poor through their own bad management, that may have considerable to do with it, but I dare say most people do as well as they know how, but all cannot be rich, and many poor people might get along much better if the rich were not continually keeping them down.

And you who have been blessed with this world's goods, though your superior judgment and judicious management may have had much to do with your prosperity, for God's sake do not attribute it wholly to this cause, but stop and reflect. May God help each of us to see ourselves as others see us, and learn to know that unto whom much is given, of him will much be required.

RELIGIOUS LIVING.

BY J. S. FLORY.

IT is said the only way to reach some men's hearts, is through their stomach; likewise is the broad road and wide gate through which Satan makes his way to many precious souls. The outside of the platter may be clean, and the breathings of the soul long, solemn and sometimes while the stomach is full of rebellion and transgression, the wardrobe and altar may have every appearance and essential becoming, humility and genuine piety, while the ladder and table are full of all iniquity!

Is there any greater sin in superfluity of bodily apparel than in superfluity of eating and drinking? The unwholesome tit-bits, pastry and condiments of the table, stand alongside the ribbons, feathers and fol-de-rols worn by Miss Flora McFlimsey.

"Every disobedience receives a just recompense of reward." No marvel then if to disobey the laws of God in eating and drinking, one has to endure punishment in way of sickness, aches and pains. God hath given laws and requirements necessary for the growth and health of the body as well as for the health and growth of our spiritual natures. To disobey in either case is to sin, and to sin is to die—in part or totally. Intemperance in drinking is the theme that is moving the world, whilst intemperance in eating lies slumbering in peace and quietness. "Be temperate in all things," is the Alpha and Omega of divine Revelation. Without this text ingrafted into our very being—body, soul and spirit, we can never rise to the standard of true morality and religion. To be temperate in all things, is a subject requiring our most sincere and earnest thoughts. In a thorough digest of the subject, we will notice it rightfully belongs to our actions and motives as well as our eating and drinking. Intemperate desires lead us into the most absurd inconsistencies. Such as preaching temperance and practicing intemperance, talking loudly of the things upon the body that are highly esteemed among men, hence an abomination in the sight of God, and at the same time possess table ware and ornaments that are "highly esteemed among men;" are they any less abominable in the sight of God? Think of it you who spend your money (which the Lord loaned you) for the gilded ornaments so common to a gay and proud world. Better, yea, a thousand times better spend it to the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

Be ye temperate in all things and thus fulfill the great design of God in giving us existence. How careful many are of the outward adornment of the body, devoting hours of care and thought to them, while the food for the nourishment and growth of the temple in which should dwell the Holy Spirit, is a matter of but little concern, other than to satisfy the cravings of a morbid or perverted appetite. The question is not, will this or that do me good, but it is, does it taste good? Taste is the governing principle, most generally, in what we shall eat, and what we shall wear. This principle would be all right, if our tastes were not unnatural or contrary to God's Laws. Taste for what we should wear, is after the outgrowth of a sin-polluted mind. Rules necessary to our health and comfort are ignored. So it is with taste for food and drink. Not being satisfied with the dictates of simplicity in nature's laws and provisions, we are inclined to be led and governed by the adulterations of men—virtually acknowledging that men are superior to God in providing for the wants of humanity, so far as food and drink are concerned. Just as it is with those who are not satisfied with the simplicity of the Gospel, but clamor for a better religion—something human and palatable to a perverted spiritual appetite.

We hear a great deal about religion in business, which is a good thing, but we want to have a theology brought to the notice of all men that will ingraft itself into what we shall eat and what we shall drink, and what we shall put on, as well as what we shall do in business, and how we shall live mentally.

The Gospel is just that kind of a religion. It lays the ax at the root of the tree. It was not hung in the branches with the idea that the fruit only has to be transformed from a wild fruit to a tame. But the idea is, make the tree healthy and the fruit will be correspondingly healthy.

The soul cannot make progress in divine life, while the body is a daily sacrifice to sin and inordinate desires. What! expect the Holy Spirit to have free intercourse with God, while it is hampered on every side by the clanking chains of carnal propensities reveling in all manner of sensual pleasures? No! never. Give tone and temper to the body according to the requirements of religious living, and see how harmoniously will every incentive of the whole being harmonize with the "inner man," then there will be fear and joy in the Holy Ghost.

BEHIND TIME.

BY J. M. RIDENOUR.

TIME is a measured portion of duration. It is divided into hours, minutes, seconds, and on up to centuries. It is always passing away before you have time to think it is gone. Dear reader, did you ever think how fast it is hurrying you on to your final end, and did you never think that you sometimes get behind it, or that you are not up to time? Yes, such is very often the case. Let us illustrate: "A railroad train was rushing along at almost lightning speed. A curve was just ahead, beyond which was a station, where two trains usually met. The conductor was late, so late that the period during which the up-train was to wait had nearly elapsed; but he hoped yet to pass the curve safely. Suddenly a locomotive dashed into sight right ahead. In an instant there was a collision. A shriek, a shock and numbers of human souls were in eternity; and all because an engineer was behind time." Just so it is with all of us through the journey of life; we are continually getting behind time. It is natural for man, to be looking into the future for a more convenient time to accomplish what he might do at the present; hence he is sometimes behind time. It is the same way in a spiritual point of view. We put off serving Christ from time to time until it is too late, and we are behind time; behind so far that we are forever lost.

O sinner, do not delay any longer, but arouse from that lethargic sleep and come to the Savior, and find peace to your soul; for "He is able to save, and willing to deliver, and that to the uttermost." Do not put it off until you are upon the bed of affliction, then you will realize when it is too late that you are behind time and forever lost. Do not delay, for now is the accepted time! God will accept thee now; He nowhere promised to accept thee to-morrow. Think, O, think of thy soul and its value; think of Jehovah and His love; think of Christ and His precious blood; think of heaven and its eternal blessedness; of hell and its terrible torments! Upon thy present conduct rests thy eternal destiny. What art thou sowing? What art thou working? What art thou treasuring up? Let conscience answer. Think of the past and all its guilt—of the future, and its uncertainty—of the present as thine. Now is the day of salvation; now thou mayest wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord, inspire a new life, rejoice in the glorious hope, enroll your name among the children of God, and become a glorious citizen of immortality in heaven. Do not delay, for the hours are quickly passing. Improve the present. Now is the accepted time. The Gospel car is starting, step on before it is everlastingly "too late," and improve "a moment you may wish when worlds want wealth to buy."

THE SOUL'S REST.

YOU want contentment, and you want rest. You want something to fill you and make you feel that it is well with you. Money won't do it; praise from friends won't do it; high standing won't do it. There will be a turning and sickening of the soul, and if you do not feel it this moment it will come. It stands to the law of truth that men made like God cannot be satisfied with less than God. And at every heart of the poorest man and the richest man, God is standing knocking and asking to be taken in, that it may be well with them, so that the child of the Divine shall be made glorious by the Divine, that the child of the Father may become, throughout the world, the sharer of the glory of the Most High. What a scheme of salvation! Less than this will not do. Less than this will not call you to glory.

BROTHER E. L. YODER says: "Elder George Irvin is confined to his home at present, waiting on his sick wife and daughter. The Lord be present with them in their affliction as well as with all others who are similarly afflicted. As a church we are prospering and feel that the Lord is with us."

It is said that a large number of pulpits are now vacant within a hundred miles of Chicago. This is the result of the non-working ministerial system. Men who have to preach but once or twice a week would derive much benefit from some useful employment, and then it would relieve a heavily taxed people from a severe burden.

BROTHER Christenson and wife, from Denmark, reached Lanark, May 6th. He cannot talk English, though he can write it, hence we have to do our talking with pencil and paper. He is a good book-binder, and is working at his trade here, and can accommodate those who have anything to be done in his line. His work is well and neatly done. He seems well posted on the Brethren's doctrine, and is in full faith with our people.

We learn that the contemplated discussion between Bro. Bashor and the Lutheran minister of Wauqueshara has now fallen through with the Lutheran refusing to affirm propositions involving his own practice. He seems to lack confidence in his own doctrine, especially on baptism, as that was the subject that he refused to affirm a proposition on. His articles in the Wauqueshara Record do not display that fairness that one man should manifest toward another.

SOME one, who fails to give his name, has sent in a query, asking what ought to be done with a brother who fails to take his wife to meeting, and yet can always find a team and time to go to other places? We do not, as a rule, notice queries unless accompanied by the sender's name, and then in regard to questions of this kind the wisdom of any well trained congregation is sufficient to guarantee a gospel decision upon their part. It is well to see that members walk orderly before the world, letting their light shine in a becoming manner.

ELDER J. H. WAGGONER, an Adventist, in a series of articles published in one of our exchanges, is trying his hand on history and true immersion. We wonder if he will agree with Miles Grant, another Adventist, who concluded that true immersion was invented by Marcion, about thirty years after the close of the Apostolic age? The subject is just now receiving a good deal of attention among the learned, and will likely be pretty thoroughly discussed during the next few years. Single immersionists are working hard to find an instance of single immersion beyond the time of Marcion. So far their efforts have proved fruitless.

THE Central Illinois Mission field is becoming quite interesting. The Lord is doing here, so far, a real work, and we believe will be more so if the work is properly continued. We much regret that there are probabilities of brother Hilbery leaving the field and going to other parts, for it is evident that he has worked hard and done a good work, that if kept moving, may result in the building up of several large and flourishing congregations in that part of the State. It is therefore hoped that he may be induced to continue his missionary labors under the directions of the Northern District of Illinois, for it is certain that he is well adapted to that kind of work, and one man's continued effort in a mission field will accomplish vastly more than the popular idea of continually changing preachers to suit the people. When we find a man is adapted to a certain kind of useful work, it is wisdom to keep him at it.

THE WRITTEN DISCUSSION.

WE are now pretty certain that the written discussion between brother Stein and Dr. Ray will come off. A few more preliminaries to be arranged yet, and then it will commence. It will likely continue through the entire year, there being but one speech each week. The entire discussion, that is, both sides—will be published in the BRETHREN AT WORK and the Baptist Battle Flog, brother Stein's article one week and Ray's reply the next. The discussion will evidently be an interesting one and the Baptist claims thoroughly examined. By this arrangement brother Stein will be able to reach a host of Baptist readers through the Baptist paper, and our members get the benefit of his careful researches and arguments. No member in the church, we think, can afford to be without the BRETHREN AT WORK while this discussion is going on.

FEATHERS VS. HISTORY.

ON Baptist history, Ray was driven to the wall; and, at the end of the fourth day's discussion, declared that he would not give a feather for the evidence of such historians as Orchard, Judson and Robinson."

So reports one of the editors of the Dunkard paper, who attended the debate between Bro. Ray and Mr. Stein, who was, a few years ago, a Baptist minister of the Cold Water Association of Mississippi. We do not believe Bro. Ray ever disparaged these histories. If they are valueless, what is his own worth?—The Baptist.

Mr. Moore's statement is without foundation. He was evidently so excited that he could not report correctly.—Baptist Battle Flog.

If any body was excited it was Mr. Ray when he made the assertion. We were careful in taking it down, as we thought he would one day want to deny it. Excitement, when in public, is something that we know very little about. The gentleman should not judge others by himself. But as the written discussion is to come off, we will see how he gets along with his "Baptist Martyrs," who practiced true immersion; would not go to war, nor take oaths. He may have to apologize for them yet, or more, perhaps, for his own church. J. W. M.

CAUTION TO FATHERS.

A WRITER tells of a cool-headed father who was one day climbing a dangerous precipice, and when he had reached one especially perilous point, his heart grew cold when he heard from below the voice of his little son, and looking down, saw the little fellow clambering along the same path. The purpose which was leading him up that rugged cliff was not so important as the life of his son, and he promptly retraced his steps, and his heart did not cease to throb with alarm until he had led his little one back to a place of safety.

How many parents are there to-day who are traveling dangerous roads, and their children following closely in their footsteps. We would to God that they pause a few moments and behold the dangers to which they, by bad examples, are subjecting their off-spring. Could each father remember that the footsteps of their boys are just behind them, how many a sinful habit would be forsaken, and how much better it would be for the rising generation.

SYRIA.

THE continual commotion among Eastern powers and provinces indicate a coming eruption of some kind. According to travel-writers, a storm is coming, although no one can exactly say what it has broken out, making cities of the East, like Aleppo, Acon, and other places, Damascus, Aleppo, and Beyrout, have petitioned to the local authorities against the signature of the treaty of peace, by which all Turkey in Europe is to be; and the Syrians express their inability to support the heavy obligations which the Porte has assumed to the Russians. It is stated that secret committees are at work at Damascus, Beyrout and Jerusalem, and that their object is the annexation of Syria to Egypt."

Should this contemplated change take place, the land of Palestine will, in all probability, fall into the hands of England, and then pass to the Rothschilds who already hold heavy mortgages on it. This once accomplished, the land will be delivered from the hands of the Gentiles, and may then be repossessed by the Jews. At all events, the contemplation of the subject as a fulfillment of prophecy is interesting and profitable.

FROM JERUSALEM.

WE clip the following from the Jewish Times, showing the present and painful condition of things in the city of Jerusalem:

Heer Luncz, under date of March 14th, gives a most deplorable account of the ravages made by the scarcity, almost amounting to famine, among the poor. There has been no rain, he writes, for the last three weeks. The roads are dry, yet no provisions come in. Cereals are still rising in price, and there is now no chance of a fall before the harvest. The harvest, however, it is expected, will be most abundant. There was lately a meeting of the heads of the Ashkenazim of all congregations to deliberate on the step to be taken for the relief of the poor. An appeal was issued for a collection, which produced about 11,000 piastres. Two delegates were then sent to Jaffa to purchase flour, rice and beans. The flour will be to the poor two piastres under price. But only half a measure will be sold per head. Now that the port of Odessa is again open, some persons who can afford to bear the expenses will go to that town. Flour imported from Russia, we learn, will likewise be dear. Altogether, the prospects are most distressing. Help, help is wanting."

THE CHINA FAMINE.

THE effects of the famine in Northern China are increasing to an alarming extent. Dr. Williams' letter to the Christian Union says: "Two and a half million persons requiring relief; people eating the sorghum from the thatch of their houses, and others stone from the hill-sides; still others digging up roots and stripping trees of their bark to provide themselves with another meal; parents selling their children to eke out the means of subsistence—these are some of the features in this terrible picture. In the single city of Tsi-Nanfu 15,000 are reported to have perished from hunger and disease, and to these deaths must be added others from suicide." An American missionary in Peking writes to the Independent:

"The accounts from the Province of Shansi are horrible beyond the imagination of those who in distant lands only hear of famine. The stories in the Books of Kings about the famine are realized in this province. Children boiled and eaten and multitudes dying by the wayside. One of our church members told me that out of about seventy families in his village thirty people had starved, although there is a relief-yard within a few miles, where, however, they have far more applications than they have accommodations—some 15,000, it is said. A subscription has been taken up among the foreign residents in Tientsin and in Peking for the relief of Shansi. The missionaries are making tours—one or two together—with a view to relief; but means are wanting to carry on the work."

LUTHER AND TRINE IMMERSION.

BROTHER Moore:—While holding a series of meetings in Secor, Illinois, I met with an ex-Lutheran of the old stamp, but now a Campbellite preacher. He had read, or perused, in your issue, an article headed "The Apostle," and, as he believed you told a falsehood on the 14th page, where you quote Luther's instructions how to baptize a converted Jewess. He said he had read Luther's work, and that was not so. Now, you know, who do not his words, it can be kept up, and let us have it. Yours for the truth, J. W. M.

The gentleman is not very well posted. When he accuses me of writing a falsehood he needs to be a little careful, or the charge may fall back onto one of his own preachers, as the following will show:

The quotation which I gave, is found in Quinter and McConnell's debate, p. 129, is from Luther's works; ed. Welch, Part 10, page 2637. It was translated for the Disciples by C. L. Loos, one of the leading preachers and writers of the Campbellite church. If there is anything wrong about the passage, it lays with C. L. Loos, a member and preacher of his own church, and certainly he will not accuse his own brother and preacher of telling a falsehood. The passage in which Luther is giving directions how to baptize a converted Jewess, reads as follows:

"As to the public act of baptism, let her be dressed in a garment usually worn by females in baths, and be placed in a bathing tub, up to the neck in water; then let the baptist dip her head three times in the water, with the usual words: 'I baptize you in the name of the Father,' etc. (Quinter and McConnell's Debate, p. 129). J. W. M.

THE GOOD EXAMPLE.

THE commendable conduct of Daniel furnishes a noble example for young men, and some older ones too. While away from the land of his nativity, and in a strange country he did not forget his religious principles, nor his good training of earlier days. He was carried away captive, and placed among strangers. He was not afraid to let his light shine, but dared to do right if he would thereby become a little singular. His was a noble character—his conduct even gained the esteem of those who were at first his enemies.

We would that all professors of Christianity were as true to their religion as Daniel was to his, and show by their daily walk that they are not ashamed of their religion. Act right, because it is right, and stand up for the self-denial principles of the Gospel. Be bright examples to others, and by chaste conversation and upright walk, gain the esteem of all around you.

Christians ought to excel the world in that which is good and useful, and show the effect of their superior religious claims. If members have the reputation of superior honesty, benevolence and industry in any community they wield an untold amount of influence. But if, in these respects, they are greatly inferior to those around them, their influence is small, and there is no likelihood of them accomplishing much. Christians ought to be more manly than the world—more charitable, and show a greater zeal for their Master's cause than the world does for worldly interests. They should be more chaste and guarded in their conversation, and more upright in their dealings. The object of their religion is to place them above the world, not below it. A true Christian will always be better than the world in that which is to elevate him above the base things of earth. Let Daniel, in these respects, be your model, and dare to do right.

BONNETS.

THE following sensible article is clipped from one of our exchanges, and was written by one who makes no pretensions to belonging to a church that advocates plainness in dress, yet there are members belonging to a church professing plainness, who actually are opposed to the use of plain bonnets as advocated by the article below. If it should become fashionable to wear a plain Quaker bonnet to meeting, our people will have no more trouble about fine hats and fashionable bonnets on some would-be fashionable sisters. It will no more be a cross to wear a plain, neat bonnet. There are some strange things in this:

If the vast sisterhood of New England women should speak what they know, a large majority of these would say that Sunday bonnets have given them more pain than pleasure. This would be the testimony of many who live in the pursuit of pleasure as their chief good. But what is true in the case of those who are not Christians, is deplorable in the case of those who are, because a new bonnet, one of the agents which the devil uses to draw an inquiring Christian away from the light and joy and blessedness of communion with God, into the darkness and sorrow and care-dunes which these will depart from in most instances.

In the late Spring fashions place many a Christian woman in a condition as precarious as was that of the strongest man when Delilah seduced him. The Philistines, he upon them, Samson! And is there no strength or skill or device by which these seven green withes can be broken? Are we so enslaved that we cannot be emancipated?

We would not tolerate soiled, faded or unseasonable hats in the house of God on His day, but suppose that the Christian women who, in these times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, are sitting together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, should adopt a fashion not very unlike a Quaker bonnet?

Let this be done from Christian principle as a means of benefiting others as well as themselves. Uniformity in shape does not necessarily involve uniformity in color or texture, and Mrs. Adrian whose means are ample, might consult her preferences, and Mrs. Abrian whose means are not ample might wear such as she could afford without looking odd or old-fashioned, or feeling so, so long as the shape of her bonnet is very nearly if not exactly the shape of the wealthy Mrs. Adrian's.

Let some one shape become a permanent fashion, and bonnets will be vastly more comfortable, and no less becoming than the fluctuating fashions that are the occasion of so much disquietude. In ferreting out the reason why so many women of mental and moral worth stay away from the house of God, we find it closely wrapped up and hidden away in this bonnet question. If it is true that 'Women may as well be out of the world as out of the fashion,' then those whose position in the community gives them great influence, cannot fail to see that on them rest great responsibilities. These women who are kept away from the house of God need the blessings which others find there, and the sooner this hindrance is taken out of the way the better.

THE NEW MOVEMENT.

I HAVE before me an eight page document, written and published by James Crystal, setting forth the grounds and principles of the reformatory movement that he proposes to set on foot. The world has seen many reformers of almost every grade and order, yet few of them have taken that broad, comprehensive view of the world's wants that should characterize all similar movements.

Among other things, Mr. Crystal proposes to restore the ancient practice of trine immersion, claiming that he has the successional mode through one of the Eastern Churches, he having formerly been a member of the church of England, whose early practice in baptism was the dipping of the candidate three times. It is due Mr. Crystal to say, that his "History of the Modes of Baptism" is the most scholarly work yet published in defense of the primitive practice, and has been the means of supplying some of our brethren with no small amount of aid in support of their practice in baptism, though it, in one education, contains some erroneous doctrine—infant baptism, and infant communion—yet as a treatise on trine immersion, it is valuable.

He proposes that the government of the society shall be episcopal—the church to be governed by Synods * * * in which bishops alone may sit and vote." "All elders and deacons to be placed and removed by the bishops alone," and the bishops to have "supreme control" This virtually places the power of all church government in the hands of a few bishops, who can deal out liberties as their inclinations may dictate. The laity to be the next thing to passive save the fooling of the bill. They can have no say so as to who shall preach for them, for this little tract says, that all the appointments are to be made by the bishops.

The laity will be expected to be at all the expenses when it comes to holding the "Synods," but not one of them to have anything to say. They will be allowed no vote, no voice in the matter. They must, in all things, submit to what a few bishops may have to say, and of course if the bishops become corrupt, and introduce a doctrine, the laity must submit, for they have no power nor say so in the government of the church. But here is something curious.

"There will be two classes of members: those of the old class who are baptized, and are full members." Those of the second who favor the "new" and do not desire to become full members. They are called Well-wishers, and are "members of other denominations, or of no denomination." If baptism is a "saving thing" (as the new-wishers say), where is the salvation of the well-wishers? Were there "two classes of members" in the Apostolic church? Who were the "well-wishers" in the first century?

What relation do they sustain to the kingdom? They must come under the head of "lukewarm" members—"neither cold nor hot." A truly pious and devoted Christian will not unite with another society as a well-wisher or anything of the kind; it requires a lukewarm person for that purpose.

The plan provides that no minister can "spend more than two consecutive years in any one congregation," and he is to be moved before the congregation gets tired of him. Our impression is, that the longer a faithful minister remains with a congregation the more influence for good he will have, and if he is not a faithful minister, he is in the wrong business. This thing of changing preachers every year, is as ruinous to religion as the habit of changing teachers is detrimental to the cause of education. An occasional change of labor may be advisable, but a change in the overseers every year is about as logical as making a change in the head of the family that often. In the ministry should be none but faithful men, who are able to teach others also, and these as they continue to reside with, and labor for a congregation, will improve in influence and usefulness. The theory is of modern invention, and evidently unsustained by either the New Testament or great Christian antiquity. Its origin is human and its tendency evil.

The project further provides that "All bishops, elders and deacons must have full liberty, without interference from the people, to fulfill the command of Christ to baptize and to administer all the other rites to all whom they deem fit."

This throws all the power of receiving members into the church, into the hands of a few officials, while the laity can have no say so in the matter. It makes no difference how well they are acquainted with the applicant, nor how much they know about his motives, they have no say so in it. This is taking the power out of the hands of the people and putting it into the hands of a few officials, thus virtually taking away the religious liberties and privileges belonging to the church of Christ.

The position on Feet-washing seems rather loose: "And though men differ us to the permanent obligation of Feet-washing and anointing the sick, nevertheless we deem it safest to retain these usages. We must retain them for those who desire to observe them, though we do not define them." The reader will understand that the washing of the saint's feet is retained for those who desire to observe it. Of course when they, some of the members, cease desiring to observe it, it will be unnecessary to retain it in the church any longer. This is the legitimate conclusion.

The movement is intended to oppose the plain and uniform garb usually worn by our members, and give them full liberty to drift out into all the foolish and vain fashions of a corrupt world, laying no restraint whatever.

This movement provides that all infants shall be baptized and ever after addressed and treated as Christians—full members of the church, and also to partake of the communion. Nothing is said about them taking part in the Lord's Supper and the washing of the saint's feet, but if foot-washing is only retained in the church for those who desire it, it follows that it is not for infants, for they do not desire it. This is another anti-Gospel practice, unsustained by the general practice of antiquity. The Apostles confined their baptizing to believers only—such as could bring forth fruits meet for repentance, and infants can neither believe nor repent. Christ commanded that the bread and wine should be taken in remembrance of Him, and how infants can do this is a little mysterious.

Taking Mr. Crystal's movement all in all, it seems a kind of a lodging place about half way between Christianity and the world—it is a little of both, and perhaps not much of either. It contains just about enough of popular religion to make it safe well among certain classes, and not much of the Bible order to entitle it to much, if any notice. We think it will gain very little, if any respect from our people, and perhaps not much from others. As for the good there is in it, we have all of that in our church, while the evils can be found among the popular nominations of the day. A. R. M.

DAUGHTERS PROPHESYING.

Please explain, through the paper, the Scripture found in Acts 2: 17, 18, concerning the prophesying of daughters. Also reconcile what Paul says in 1 Cor. 14: 34. S. BARNSTON.

PROPHESYING has considerable latitude of meaning. The Greek for prophesying is Prophateuousin, from Prophatena, (present indicative) defined, "to foretell future events; predict; to speak from the impulse of divine inspiration." We are inclined to think that this last meaning, is the one referred to by the apostle Paul.

We read in the Gospel that Philip, the evangelist, had four daughters who did prophesy (being virgins), Acts 21: 9. But the apostle Paul forbids women speaking in the church 1 Cor. 14: 34. Now then, the difficulty seems to be: How can daughters or women, prophesy without speaking in the church? Some take the position that "daughters" means unmarried women, like Philip's virgins. There is no doubt but the term daughters does refer to unmarried women, but it refers with equal propriety to married ones. Women are as much the daughters of their parents after marriage as they were previously. The Prophet expressly says, their sons and their daughters, not their virgins, shall prophesy; and the apostle applies it to the church. Paul, however, admits service in the church by Christian women, when he says, "I commend unto you Phoebe, our sister, which is a servant of the church" &c. (Rom. 16: 1). Again, "Greet Priscilla and Aquilla my helpers in Christ Jesus" (Rom. 16: 3). Here the apostle acknowledges Priscilla as being a helper in Christ, as well as Aquilla. Again, "Greet Mary, who bestowed much labor on us" (Rom. 16: 6). Unto women the joyful news of Christ's resurrection was first made known, and they were commanded to tell it to the apostles. It was evident that in the apostolic age of the church, women took an active part in the local affairs of the church in some way or other, or perhaps in various ways. They were workers—helpers. They prophesied.

To reconcile Paul's language, where he forbids women speaking in the churches, with the privilege daughters have to prophesy, it is necessary to understand the meaning of the term church, or rather Ecclesia. The Greek for church, means, "To convocate any public assembly, a congregation; a Christian assembly; a church." Hence, Ecclesia may mean an assembly of unbelievers, as well as believers, or a mixed assembly of both; this is doubtless what the apostle had in view in forbidding women to speak in the church, i. e., in those large, public assemblies made up of all classes of people, where women, in attempting to speak in all probability would have been disrespectfully treated. We, however, use the term Ecclesia in its restricted sense. In fact the term church, is but one of four definitions of the word Ecclesia.

We do not conceive that the apostle forbids women speaking in the church strictly, i. e., an assembly of believers only. If so, no woman would have the right to say even a word in church council. There are times in church council, especially in things pertaining to sisters, when women can speak more advisably than men. Again, in a great many places, especially in the West where the members are scattered about in little groups, and are destitute of a minister, sometimes for years, under such circumstances it would, we think, be right for such members to meet in a religious capacity, read, sing, pray, and exhort one another to steadfastness in the faith. If, under such circumstances, a sister had the gift to exhort, we think she would have Gospel liberty to do so, when the exercises are, in the main, intended only for believers. In this way they would be helpers, as well as in speaking a word for Christ, more privately.

We further believe that if members of the church would meet often in a more private capacity, to sing, pray and exhort, even where they have regular, public preaching, that it would result in advantage to the church; and in such meetings, sisters might participate in prophesying as well as in praying to the edification of the church. We know that we are getting on delicate ground, and perhaps have tramped on some one's toes already, but if our explanation is not satisfactory, we ask, What did these women do who helped Paul, and bestowed much labor on them, and were servants to the church? How did they help? In what way did they labor?

We do not believe in women prophesying on any, and every occasion, whether public or private, but we do think there are times when it might be done to edification. For this reason, I think liberty is given sisters to pray at our communions, and I am sorry to say, is seldom engaged in, there by them.

IN BRIEF.

OUR readers are beginning to roll in new subscribers pretty lively. Brother J. S. Flory says: "Enclosed find 50 cents for one subscriber to B. at W. I got you one as my quota to help raise your list to 10,000." — Another brother says, he was not well, hence could not get around much, yet he sends in three new names. — One brother writes, he cannot do much, as everybody there takes the paper. He is certainly excusable. — One agent was determined to send in six new names, and to do it paid for part of them himself. — And another who had already sent in a large list, sends in eight more new subscribers. That is good. — Many are sending in for sample copies and prospectuses as an outfit to canvass for more new names. — A few business letters must go unanswered a few days. — Though we have nearly one hundred papers going to Goshen, Ind., yet our agent sends in four more new names; a few more and there will be one hundred. — In consequence of his written discussion, Bro. Stein will not take his contemplated trip among the Brethren this season. — A few more arrangements to be made and the written debate will commence. It will be interesting. Now let us have a few thousand more new subscribers. Your neighbors will want to read the debate. — We are now prepared to do book-binding at this office. — Who has a full set of the Gospel Visitor that they want to sell? — Brother Eshelman is expected home this week. — Those who have read Reason and Revelation speak well of the book. — Those who have sent in articles for publication will please be a little patient, we will get through with the pile as soon as possible. — Those who copy Bro. Balsbaugh's letters for publication, should do it with the utmost care. The better way is to send the original and retain copy. — Please send us the names of those in your neighborhood who are not taking the BRETHREN AT WORK. We will send them sample copy. — Answers to queries should be brief and to the point. Boil them down well. Two or three boilings will not hurt. — When writing for publication use narrow sheets of paper, say not over five inches wide. Write with pen and ink; do not use a pencil, please. It is hard to read, and worse yet for the compositors. — Keep us posted on church news. As the love-feast season will soon be here we ought to have a number of reports. The entire trip from Launk, Shannon and Freeport, to North Manchester, Ind., and return, will be not over $9.85, may be a little less, though not much. — A gentleman of this town has shown us new peaches, about the size of hickory nuts, taken from trees in Solomon Valley, Kan., May 6th. — For some time we have been out of "Family Rules and Regulations." Will print more as soon as we can get time to do so.

GOD BLESS PAPA.

GOD bless our darling papa
Wherever he may roam,
Protect him from all danger,
And bring him safely home;
May angel guards be near him
In dark temptation's hour,
To rescue him from falling
Within the tempter's power.

When faint with weary toiling
And sad with many a care,
Give him new strength and courage
This heavy load to bear;
Should sickness come or sorrow,
To cloud his life to-day,
God send a bright to-morrow
To drive a cloud away.

His arm is our protection,
His smile is our reward,
And may we never forfeit
His kindness and regard;
And as the years roll o'er him,
And his bright eyes grow dim,
For all his love and goodness
Our care shall comfort him.

The evening meal is waiting,
The lights are all aglow,
The lullaby is being sung
A welcome, soft and low;
We hear his steps approaching,
We see him nearer come,
Thank God, for bringing papa,
Dear papa, safely home.

SUNDAY MORNING.

Leaning.

NEAR Shady Grove, Pa., is a small piece of timber, and there I saw something that suggested our lesson this morning. This grove consists mainly of large trees, sparsely scattered over about twenty acres of ground. Near the road is a tree, quite large and somewhat bent, leaning against another only about half as large. Now it was evident that before the larger tree began to lean on the smaller one, that the smaller was a straight, thrifty tree, but now, with its load, it too had become a little crooked. You see it had a promising future before it, before the larger one threw its weight upon it, but now it must yield more or less to the weight of the larger.

This made me think, and think; and I shall here let you have a little of the thinking. In the church are some who ought to bear their own burdens, ought to stand erect and let the dews of heaven water them thoroughly, but they will lean on others, and that, too, upon those who are smaller than themselves. They will ask those to carry a load for them, who are barely able to carry their own. They will lean on some one. If a smaller "tree" has about all it can do to stand erect, the larger one, to keep himself in the grove (church), will lean on the smaller one. Of course such work must more or less crook the smaller one, too. Better lean on Jesus, who is strong and able to bear up all our griefs and sorrow.

Then it sometimes happens that we lean upon each other, when we ought to be leaning on Jesus. O, lean upon Jesus! He is full of power to bear us up. To lean this way, then that, and have no "fixedness," is to fall, finally as utterly worthless in the sight of God. The tree reminded me of those who want to lean upon the world—have no desire to grow up straight in the Master's kingdom, but all the time want to rest against the world. Poor mortals! Come lean upon the arm of Jesus. Do not think that the devices and sins of the world will bear you up and carry you into eternal bliss. They are unsafe. Do not lean against them; for ere you know it, they will give way, and down you will go with them.

And you, parents, do not lean upon your children and crook them. Do not press them with your own weight, but first let them grow up strong, and then when you get old and feeble, you may safely lean on them for help and comfort in this life. First let their minds grow straight and strong in the truth. Show them how to lean on Jesus; and in showing them, do not forget to lean on Him yourself. It will not do to lean on this man or that man, but it will pay to lean on Jesus.

Nor must we forget that, the tendency of popular religion is to lean on the sayings of this or that great man. The great mass of professors are prone to lean upon the sensationalists of the day, and soon both trees will be yielding, bending under the displeasure of God. Lean on our blessed Master instead. God be thanked that we have One who is strong and mighty to uphold. Young man, do not lean upon father and mother for life eternal, but lean on our Lord. Lean not on the world, lean not on old associates, lean not on friends for the water of life, but on Him who has it to give in abundance. Young woman, lean not on the fashions of the day, lean not on your own naughty heart, but lean on the ever precious Jesus. Lean on Jesus, Jesus! Children, learn to lean on your Savior, your good Friend. Lean on Him early, lean on Him through life, and you shall lean on Him in eternity. Lean on Jesus now and forever.

M. M. ESHelman.

TO THE CHILDREN.

GOD bless you, dear little friends. I know that He loves you, and will do you all good, if you will be kind to Him and all of those whom you meet. I am so far from home that I cannot read your words of love as they are sent in, but when I get home, I hope to find a large pile for me to read. And then, if God spares me to reach home, I shall have so much to tell you of what I saw. I think you all want to hear of the great things of God, of His vast works, of the host of things which are His, and of the works of man, whom He has made. But when you read these, and learn what is in this great world which God made, I hope it will make you feel to thank the Lord that He has thus shown how good He is to all men, and even to all the small folks. Be good and kind to your pa and ma, as well as to all that you meet, so that God's love and care may be with you all through life. Read God's good Book. In it you will find the way of life. In it you will learn the road to peace and joy. I write this to you, so that you may know that I still think of you. Yes, you are in my mind all the time. I think soon you must take the place of those who are now old, and I want you to be fit to do the great work that will fall on you. Then be good; read what God has put in your hands—His Word of Truth; and then pray to God to bless you.

FROM MARCUS MISHLER.

JESUS was born at Bethlehem, about six miles from Jerusalem. The same night God sent an angel to tell the shepherds, who were watching their sheep in the neighboring fields. The shepherds were afraid at first, but the angel said, "Fear not; for behold I bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people, for unto you is born, this day, in the city of David, a Savior." And the angel said, they would find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. The shepherds went and found the child as the angel had told them. About this time a star appeared in the East and the wise men from the East came in search of Christ. Herod asked the wise men to inform him where he might find the child, so he might worship Him; but the wise men were warned in a dream and went home without letting Herod know where Jesus was. Herod became angry when he saw that he was mocked by the wise men, and sent forth and slew all the children under the age of two years, that were in Bethlehem. Joseph fled to the land of Egypt.

While Jesus was on the earth, he spent most of His time preaching and performing miracles, such as healing the sick, giving the blind their sight, commanding unclean spirits to come out, raising the dead, feeding the hungry. Finally He was taken before Pilate to be tried, but He would not answer the questions the council asked, and they could not prove anything against Him, until two persons said that He had said he would overthrow the temple and rebuild it in three days. To this He made no direct answer, but when asked, "Art thou the Son of God?" he answered, "Ye say I am," for which they said He should be put to death. After this they spat on Him and a crown of thorns was put on His head. He was dressed in a robe like a king, and the king's servants mocked Him; after this, He was compelled to carry His cross to the place of crucifixion. He was then nailed to the cross with two men, one on each side of Him. After He was nailed to the cross, a sponge was filled with vinegar and placed to His lips. He said, "It is finished," bowed His head and died.

BOY'S RIGHTS.

I WONDER now if any one
In this broad land has heard,
In favor of down-trodden boys
One solitary word?
We hear enough of 'women's rights,'
And 'rights of working men,'
Of 'equal rights,' and 'nation's rights,'
But pray just tell us when Boy's rights were ever spoken of?
Why we've become so used
To being snubbed by every one,
And slighted and abused,
That when one is polite to us,
We open wide our eyes,
And stretch them in astonishment
To nearly twice their size!
Boys seldom dare to ask their friends
To venture in the house!
It don't come natural at all
To creep round like a mouse.
And if we should forget ourselves
And make a little noise!
Then ma or ammie sure would say,
'Oh, my! those dreadful boys.'
The girls bang on the piano,
In peace, but if the boys
Attempt a tune with fife and drum,
It's 'Stop that horrid noise!'
'That horrid noise!' just think of it:
When sister never fails
To make a noise three times as bad
With everlasting 'scodes,'
Insulted thus, we lose no time
In beating a retreat;
So off we go to romp and tear,
And scamper in the street.
No wonder that so many boys
Such wickel men become,
'Twere better far to let them have
Their games and play at home.
Perhaps that text the teacher quotes
Sometimes—'Train up a child'—
Means only train the girls,
And let the boys run wild.
But patience, and the time shall come
When we will all be men,
And when it does, I rather think Wrongs will be made right then.

THE MYSTERIOUS BEING.

A Pointed Lesson for the Old as well as Young.

ONE of the best writers in America makes a good picture of a popular old lady. Will our young readers tell us what her name is?

How different people appear at different times, as when we are sick or well, rejoicing or mourning, laughing or weeping. A few days since I met an old lady, who nodded very familiarly to me, and yet I hesitated to call her by name, lest I should miscall it. She looked old and yet young, soft and smiling, and yet wore stern frowns. She was fair in face, yet her hands were iron. It seemed as if the wind would blow her away, and yet she moved with the strength of an elephant.

"Why, sir," said she, "you seem to stare at me, though you have seen me a thousand times before."

"That may be madam; but I never saw you loaded down with all sorts of things. I am curious to know about them. Would it be rude to ask you a few questions?"

"Not at all. Ask away."

"Well, what are you going to do with those small, thin, ladies' shoes?"

"Why, make the ladies wear them, to be sure."

"Not in the cold, wet season? Why I can hardly keep my feet warm in these thick, double-soled boots. I must have over-shoes. How can they wear such thin, cold-catching shoes?"

"Oh, sir, I have only to bring them to them, and the dear creatures put them on, and never hesitate a moment. They know me!"

"And those little half-dresses hanging on your arm?"

"They are to put on little children in cold weather, or to walk out in—naked at the knees, naked at the neck, and hardly covering half the body. You can't think how eager parents are for these dresses."

"What have you in that little tin box?"

"Lozenges, sir; troches, hoarhound candy—things that always go with thin shoes and thin dresses. And this bright red box, sir, contains what is called conscience salve, which I always keep on hand to rub on the conscience when any one sees he has done wrong in obeying me. It's in great demand, sir, and a certain cure."

"What have you in that bundle, madam?"

"This? Why a few knick-knacks, which I sometimes distribute in Sabbath-schools, in the shape of dialogues, speeches—things to make people laugh and to prevent the schools from feeling too serious, or thinking too much about religion. You must understand, sir, that I continually have to attend church to regulate things there—to see that the bonnets are right, the rings are bright, and the dresses complete; yet religion itself I hate as poison! And here is a box of the finest—what shall I call it? It is a sort of wit and smartness which I deal out to preachers, with which they spice their sermons and become popular. I sell them by the gross. They are growing in demand, and they are a real saving of conscience and headache. Warranted to keep in all climates—a kind of sensation powder."

"Pray, madam, what are those screws for?"

"Why, to pinch the feet and make them look small, without regard to corns or bunions. They can't wear those dear little shoes except you have pinchers to go with them."

"And that great heap of books in your arms?"

"Those? They are the latest, most exciting, and the weakest, most silly novels. But I hand them out, and shake my head with a smile, and crowds read them."

"Well, madam, I am very inquisitive, I know, but I do want to know what you have in that great bag thrown over your shoulder?"

"A great variety of valuables, such as 'late suppers,' in great demand, and which send people to the grave early, and thus make room for more. Here are 'late hours,' and 'late rising,' and all manner of hair-dressing, and expensive dressing—things that ladies must have, even if their husbands fail. Here are diamond pins and rings—just the things to stir up envy and create extravagance. Here are gold watches, cigars, meerschaum pipes, gold-headed canes, eye-glasses, and all manner of things to suit all kinds of people. And I laugh and coax, and frown and command, till I get them to wear and use them, and do just what I please. Now, I have stopped to talk with you a few moments; don't you see what a crowd have gathered round me—low necks, thin shoes, muslin dresses, tight boots; some on crutches, some coughing, some breathing short, all crowding to get near me; and when I move you will see how they all run and rush and crowd after me. O, sir, I am the great power of the world. I rule kings and queens, beggars and philosophers. Don't you see?"

"Truly, madam, truly. And now may I ask you your name?"

"Name? Fashion, sir; my name is Mrs. Prevailing Fashion! I thought everybody knew me."

We wonder if any of our readers patronize this Mrs. Prevailing Fashion? She travels extensively, is found in every city and village in the land, and does not hesitate to visit the rural districts. She is highly esteemed in fashionable circles, and is therefore an abomination in the sight of the Lord. Do not patronize her; do not even admit her into your houses; she is a dangerous tramp of world-wide reputation—acquainted with every nation, kindred and tongue, and familiar with the ways of public and private life of every grade and order. Her business is to ruin health, squander your money, ruin families and churches, and people the regions of despair with myriads of unhappy and eternally tormented beings.

CHILDREN AT WORK.

From Ida Cripe:—

Jesus, cleanse my soul from sin,
Let Thy Spirit dwell within;
 mould me to Thy will divine,—
 May I in Thy likeness shine.

From Katie A. W. Reber.—Dear Editor:

—I am pleased to see the children at work. I am only twelve years old. Was baptized when I was eleven, and I am trying to work for Jesus, for He has done so much for us. He gave His life for us, that we, through Him, can be the children of God. Dear young workers, as we grow in days and years, let us try and grow in grace and the knowledge of Jesus. In this letter I will send twenty-five cents for the paper for the poor.

Waterloo, Iowa.

From Mary A. Tyson.—I was just reading the eleventh chapter of John, about Lazarus and his sisters. How sorrowful they must have felt when their dear brother died! but oh, what joy when Jesus came and called him to life again. My little brother Willie, thought if Jesus had been here three years ago when my papa died, He could have made him alive again. I read in the BRETHREN AT WORK to-day, how poor brother Hansen's are. It made my heart feel sad, and I hope they will soon have enough.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Last Appeal.

Dear Brethren:—

WE will make one more appeal to the brethren and sisters for help to build our meeting-house, and to feel that it will be our last appeal to you for that purpose. Other brethren and sisters have also urged upon the Brethren to send in their donations, yet the donations have almost ceased coming in.

Last Spring we postponed building until Fall for want of means. Fall came and we were yet without the means any nearer. We then put off building until this Spring, hoping them to be able to go on with the building. We got out little money during the Winter, consequently we had to abandon the idea of building this Spring. We will commence the building now as soon as we get the necessary means. Unless we get about three hundred dollars from the church, we cannot build. That will be less than one-half the amount we asked for.

One sister in Philadelphia, after collecting from the members what they were willing to give, says, that the amount asked for was so small, that many did not think it worth while doing, and further remarks that had we asked some great thing or amount of the church, it would have been noticed and responded to much more readily. We, in offering our penny proposition, thought, that it would give the rich and poor a chance, and all could have a share in the enterprise. So far the poor churches, composed of but few members and them poor, have been leading far in advance.

By request I wrote to one brother in the East, said to be worth about a half a million of dollars, making a special request of him for a little help. He was so much surprised about it, that it took him sometime to be composed enough to answer, and when he answered, how much do you think he sent. Instead of means to help us, it was a sharp reproof for our impudence.

Such a rebuke we never got before, intimating very plainly that he did not use his money in that way. We had the addresses of several other rich brethren, but rest assured we did not write to them.

In Vol. 2, No. 12 of P. C., sister A. H. of Marlboro, Ohio, makes an appeal to the sisters to make an effort to collect means under the penny proposition. Will you heed the call to your duty, dear sisters? Rest assured, sisters, if you make an effort you will succeed. Some have collected from five to eight dollars from small congregations; none refuse to give. Dear sisters, will you make the effort? This is our last call to the church for means to help to build our house.

We feel much discouraged and almost ashamed to ask so many times for so little and yet that little would be of so much help to us, and no one would be any poorer. All donations will be reported in the Brethren's papers. Money may be sent in Registered letters to Sciota, or P. O. orders on Villisca or Red Oak.

We hope that all that are not opposed to helping us, will send in their donations inside of three months. As soon as we get means to buy the material, we will go to work and put up the building. Brethren and sisters, shall we have the means? Time will tell.

From the City of Rome.

Dear Sisters:—

YOUR letter of the 18th of March with the accompanying journal arrived at Rome on the 5th of April. The Post Office which is ignorant of our distinctions, sent your letter and paper to some one else, there being here American Baptists and Episcopal Methodists also. At last it reached me on the 15th. You will therefore pardon the delay of my answer.

I thank the Lord who has sent you, the inhabitants of a State of the New World, the tidings of our testimony in Rome, which is one of extreme simplicity in face of the extreme worldly power of the Papacy. How we thank the Lord for having apprized you of the line of conduct followed by many here for the manifestation of their faith in the Gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

In Rome we are as yet but few, because Satan contends with Christ with all his forces gathered together in the papacy, and in so many other enemies of the Cross, but we are very sure that Christ will bruise Satan under our feet shortly (Rom. 12: 20).

To say a word on the principle expressed by you in the circular of your periodical, I would inform you that we receive the teaching of the Word of God with much simplicity and humility in submission to the Holy Spirit, seeking above all the sanctification of our spirit, soul, heart, mind and body in the Lord, and therefore as Paul enjoins us, we gladly avoid the disputed questions on God's Word, commonly raised by men, rather beseeching the Lord to enlighten those who are of a contrary mind. In those things which are not absolutely necessary to salvation, we act in the liberty and charity of Christ.

I hope therefore that the love of God will move you to pray fervently for us here in Rome, and for the Brethren scattered in all Italy, even as we pray for all the children of God scattered throughout the world, and now we shall make special mention of you all before the throne of Supreme Grace in Jesus Christ.

Since to my great regret I have not the advantage of the knowledge of English, our dear brother in Christ, J. W. Bell has translated for me what you have written, and now also translated this, my humble letter.

I hope that some other brother will write to you in English more at length, respecting the work of God in Italy. I send you a copy of our journal. God be with you all!

With my salutations in the Lord to yourselves and all who love him, with incorruptible purity of heart, I remain,

Your Servant,

CARLO LUNINI.

Another Letter from Rome.

Dear Sir:—

THE congregation at Rome, spoken of in your periodical, is, I believe not the same denomination as yours, but they belong to what are called the "Plymouth Brethren." (See Appleton's Encyclopedia under that title) of whom there is a small church here, and one or two at Phenix. I cannot state the name of any members, but if you choose to send me communications or pamphlets, I will see that they are put in the right hand.

You will find account of the Vaudois or Waldenses in Appleton's. May number 39,000; more in the valleys near the source of the Po; small numbers scattered over all Italy. Their congregation in Rome numbers about one hundred souls.

Yours Respectfully,

GEO. P. MARSH.

Description of Oliver's Prairie.

Dear Brethren:—

THIS beautiful prairie is lying in the Eastern part of Newton Co., Missouri. Newtonia is a town located about three miles from the center of the prairie.

Now about the size of the prairie. It is from four to eight miles wide and about eighteen or twenty miles long, lying somewhat in a circle.

Newtonia is four miles South of Ritchey, the nearest railroad point. It is a very well watered village of some six hundred inhabitants, and an excellent graded school and good school-house. Grubby is a considerable mining town, situated on the North side of the prairie. It has several thousand inhabitants and a fair market. The prairie lays well, about as level as the farmer would wish it. The prairie is principally clear of stone, soil fair, well watered; though mostly well water, a large spring can be seen in Newtonia, sufficient to water a city. The Brethren have built a commodious meeting-house quite near the town, nearly completed; for the payment of which we still solicit some more aid from our well-wishing brethren.

The price of the land on this prairie is from five to twelve dollars raw, and from ten to twenty dollars for improved land. Timber is plenty, handy and cheap, as the prairie is surrounded with timber on all sides. Excellent building rock can also be found here, plenty and of the best quality. Good schools are here as well as elsewhere.

The prospects are good for abundant crops of everything planted and especially fruit. At this writing we have peaches nearly one inch in diameter. Wheat is waist high. The Spring so far has been seasonable.

This is also an excellent grass and stock country, and both the timber and prairie are well adapted to stock raising. The most copious springs in great number issue from the earth in the timber, and round about the prairie. The country is healthy, generally good morals. I hope what I have written, will satisfy numerous inquiries.

Memoir of Elizabeth Bowers.

Dear Brethren:—

THE 12th of April, died Elizabeth Bowers, consort of John Bowers, aged 72 years, 2 months and 27 days.

She was a pioneer veteran of what is now known as the Sugar Ridge church, Hancock Co., Ohio. She was born, raised and warmly attached to the Lutheran faith, in Lancaster Co., Pa. About thirty-five years ago, the above pair identified themselves with the people known by the term "United Brethren," where our deceased sister continued faithful and active nearly fifteen years; when her defective practices became apparent to her. Her doubts became so great that she could no longer erase them, nor destroy their unhappy effects. To share the Communion service in this doubtful frame of mind, she remembered that the apostle says, in Rom. 14: 23, "He that doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith." Per- ant me to enquire here, How can any Bible readers take the bread and wine in the middle of the day, calling it the Lord's Supper, without doubting, when the Bible emphatically tells us they were taken after Supper?

After a severe struggle with her former, pre-conceived notions, she gained complete victory, entered the church of the Brethren, living as a faithful member until the close of her day. Her suffering was great, distressing to those that stood at her bed-side; but she bore it all with the patience of an ancient Christian martyr.

She expressed herself anxious and impatient to go to Him, who alone can give relief to those who have made themselves white in the blood of the Lamb. By the energy of our deceased sister, and the few members living there, especially her faithful husband, when their number was but few and scattered, they erected a house for worship, at which time we came among them. When she came to leave, she had the pleasure of witnessing about one hundred and twenty-five members under our care; for whom she felt a warm attachment. Many of our ministering brethren will remember sharing their hospitalities.

Although our departed sister had such pleasant enjoyment in the church, yet her joy was much alloyed to find that she was unable to induce but two out of ten of her children to sit with her at the Lord's table, they having found homes in different branches of the fashionable religion of the day. Many parents have to mourn the same unhappy experience.

Services by the writer from Heb. 9: 27, to a very large assemblage.

I. J. ROSENBERGER.

To the Ministering Brethren in Southern Illinois.

Dear Brethren:—

MY object, in writing these lines, is to call your attention to the needy and almost helpless condition of a little band of members, living in Henderson Co., Ky., only some three or four miles south of the City of Henderson on the Ohio River. Henderson is about ten miles below Evansville. That would be the point to go to, then to Henderson. There are some fourteen or fifteen members there; all young in the cause, and when last heard from, the young brother that was elected to the ministry, was sick and had not been able to preach for a long time.

They have now been two years without any assistance. Brethren, you that live towards the Southern part of the District, try and go and see them, and arrange to stay two or three weeks and help them, and have a Communion with them, and I think that the Southern District of Illinois will help to bear the burden. However I can say this much, if it will not, I will. So go, and the Lord be with you.

You may ask, Why don't you go? Because many brethren live much nearer than we do, so the expenses will be much less. I don't think that the Brethren from the Allison Prairie church can be over fifty or sixty miles from them. Address: John P. Gish, Henderson, Ky.

Thomas Paine.

Few men of modern times have done more harm than Tom Paine. Having endeared himself to the American people by the assistance he rendered during the Revolutionary war, gave him much influence over many lovers of liberty, and thus enabled him to reach hearts that otherwise would have remained firm. His sins still follow after him.

The Lauds (Pa.) Republican thus describes the character and closing career of the author of the "Age of Reason."

Of the moral character of Paine, we have said specifically little. But we now come to that juncture of his history, where no amount of charity is able to cover up his vices. We use the term vices, considered, because the evil habits of Paine had firmly fixed themselves in his character.

Looking at him, as he was during the last years in France, when he wrote also part of his "Age of Reason," we find that a long habit of intemperance had made him a confirmed drunkard. Nor is this all, but with it were coupled also the kindred vices of lewdness and adultery.

We are told, that on account of his gross immorality, he was a very disagreeable guest at the house of our Minister in Paris, to which he had been invited out of compassion.

But Paine played his role in foreign countries, and having finished that, he found himself alone and almost forsaken. He had accomplished nothing to establish an attachment. His desire was to leave.

In America there were those who had not forgotten the services he had once rendered, and were ready to acknowledge them.

By letters from Jefferson, he was invited to return to America. In 1802 he came. It is easy to imagine what his reception and remaining year would have been, if the man's character would not have been nearly blasted.

Paine brought with him, not his wife, but a woman with three children, the wife of one of his Parisian friends. Poor woman! whatever became of her and her children, history is silent; doubtless she met the fate of all those who tread the path of vice.

The simoniacal and affectionate friendship which had been promised in the letter from Jefferson, vanishingly cooled down, when Paine presented himself, and was found to be, as several contemporary accounts tell us, a revolting compound of filth and indecency.

Paine passed from Washington to New York,

(which he once said, was not fit for a gentleman to live in) and from there to his farm at New Rochelle. As he passed along, the people were ready to greet the author of "Common Sense," but every demonstration soon lost its enthusiasm, and finally died away. Estimating them properly, they were more sad than joyous.

The short time he yet lived, he passed between his place and New York. During this time he made several appeals to Congress for money, but no attention was given them. He led a wretched life. In his person he was ragged, unclean and filthy. He drank to great excess, suffered great bodily pain. In his conduct and language he was so, that no decent person was found long in his company.

It was only by the self-sacrificing power of Christian charity, that a few kind hands ministered to his wants, as he tattered to the grave.

As to his last hours, taking the only account given, they were shocking indeed, and the account fills one with terror and pity. He is to have said, "If ever the devil had an agent on earth, I have been one." He would call out, during his paroxysms of distress, without intermission, "O Lord, help me, God help me. Jesus Christ help me, O Lord help me, etc.," repeating the same expressions without the least variation, in a tone of voice that would alarm the house. (For a full description of this dark, dark scene, see Chelburn's Life of Paine; Stephen Grellet's Autobiography.)

GLEANINGS.

From Walnut, Ill.—As the Lord has spared me, I take the privilege to inform you, how our little band here is prospering. We all feel sorry to say that Bro. Lemuel Hillery has preached his farewell sermon on the 28th of April. He preached with such force, that he had the pleasure of seeing two more sisters return to the fold of Christ. We number eleven in this little arm of the church. Bro. Lemuel has preached here about a year, and through the grace of God has accomplished much good. We hope the Lord will bless him for his labors. Much good could be done here, if some minister would come and settle among us. We feel like lost sheep, having no one to preach for us; but hope the Brethren will not forget us. P. VOIGHT.

From Washington, Iowa.—We have one more applicant for baptism, so that we still have something to encourage us. Others are counting the cost; hope they will come soon. On the 14th of April the Brethren organized a Sabbath-school; this being the first Sunday-school ever conducted by the Brethren here. Hope it may be a success, although we organized under rather embarrassing circumstances, there being another Sunday-school within a mile of ours, which had been conducted Summer and Winter for some years. On the Sunday that we organized, there were only thirty-two present, the following Sunday fifty-five, the last Sunday eighty. The purpose of the school is to do good, and we hope all will labor in that direction. A. WOLF.

From New Bedford, Ill.—By request of the Brethren in this branch of the church, I will give you a short sketch of Bro. Hillery's labors here. When he commenced preaching in Bureau Co., there was but one member here. Now a great interest has been awakened, ten have been baptized by Bro. Hillery, and one by Bro. George Strohacker. There are prospects of many more uniting with us, if we are not forgotten. C. R. CONANT.

From Danbury, Neb.—In looking over the columns of your paper, we are made to rejoice to hear of so many sinners being brought back to the fold of God, but we are deprived of hearing the Brethren preach. There are no members here, but myself and wife; all the comfort that we have, is when the paper comes to hand; it always brings glad tidings of great joy. It is as the head of life to the hungry soul. It is a source of great comfort to us that the Lord is at work among the brethren, that they are getting more zealous in the missionary cause. We hope the day is not far distant that we will be permitted to hear the Brethren preach again. We have a very good country here, plenty of vacant land for homesteads. B. R. GERHART.

From Bethel Church, Neb.—The Brethren of the Bethel church held their quarterly council, March 16th. Found the church in love and union. Elected two delegates to the District Meeting, to be held at Beatrice, Gage Co. On Saturday following Bro. Thomas VanBuren and myself went to York Co., to hold a few meetings, but on account of their not receiving the intelligence of our coming, no appointments were made for us.—However we had meeting Sunday afternoon at one o'clock and also at five. Had council at half past 7 o'clock, P. M. Found all the members in harmony.

The church in York Co. is known as the Beaver Creek church. There are seventeen or eighteen members living here, with an imperfect organization; have no speakers, have two deacons, one of which has sold out lately, and will thus leave them with but one deacon. I would say to any ministering brother who contemplates coming West, that he would do well to visit York Co.—The church is much in need of a minister and the members much desire it. True, the speakers of Bethel church visit them once in a month, but sometimes not so often. J. E. BRYANT.

From Buffalo, Mo.—We have a small church here, with but one preacher, namely Bro. John Hoover. He commenced a series of meetings on the tenth of March and preached five sermons.—He shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God. We had no additions at that time, but the eleventh of this month at our regular appointment, we had the pleasure of seeing three precious souls unite with the church. Two were buried with Christ in baptism, and one reclaimed. S. DUNCAN.

From Bristol, O.—I am holding a meeting at this place and expect to remain here until the 29th inst. Eld. S. S. Stoeckey and Bro. J. Huffman were with us a few days. We had many pleasant meetings, good attendance; may God's blessings rest upon them. The Lord willing, I expect, according to previous arrangements, to commence a meeting on the 25th of May, with the Brethren in the Mawmee church, Defiance Co., Ohio, on my way to yearly meeting. Also intend stopping a few days near Bryan, where Bro. Simon Long resides. J. NICHOLSON.

Inquiry from S. E. Cornelius.—I have seen two or three letters written by Bro. David Brower of the Willamette Valley church, Oregon, and I would like to know if there is any Cornelius's living near there, as I had a great-uncle by the name of Absalom Cornelius, who moved to the Willamette Valley a good many years ago.—We have written to them but received no answer, so we don't know whether he is living or not. He was a member of the church. SAMUEL E. CORNELIUS.

Arcadia, Ind.

From J. E. Laycock.—Through the kindness of some, I have been receiving your very valuable paper, and must say that I am much pleased with it. I have heard some of your ministers preach in that State near Decatur, Macon Co., Ill. I have been reading your paper pretty attentively, and shown it to some neighbors, among the number to a Baptist minister. He did not know the existence of such a denomination; he seems to be very much delighted with the doctrine set forth in the paper. Generally he wants me to lend him the papers, when I am through with them.

I see among your special correspondents, J. W. Stein, whom I once knew while in this State; he being at that time a Missourian Baptist minister. I would like to get this written debate in full. Please inform me through your paper, where I can obtain it. Parrana, Cal.

[If the debate comes off, both sides of it will appear in the BRETHREN AT WORK.—EDS.]

THE CROSS.

BY OAS. SHALLHAUSE.

Blest they who seek
While in their youth,
With spirits meek,
The way of truth.

To them the sacred volume doth display,
Christ as the only true and living way,
His precious Blood on Calvary given, —
To make them heirs of endless bliss in heaven.
And 'e'en on earth the child of God can trace
The glorious blessings of His sovereign grace.

For them He bore
His Father's frown,
For them He wore
The thorny crown,
Nailed to the cross,
Endured its pain,
That His life's loss
Might be their gain.
Then haste to choose
The better part, —
Nor dare refuse —
The Lord your heart,
Lest He declare; —
"I know you not,"
Then deep despair
Will be your lot; —
REFLECTION.

The past, where is it? It has fled.

The future? It may never come

Our friends departed? With the dead;

Ourselves? Fast hastening to the tomb.

What are earth's joys? The dews of morn.

Its honors? Ocean's wreathing foam —

Where's peace? In trials meekly borne,

And joy? In heaven the Christian's home.

THE FAITHFULNESS OF GOD.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Elder David Bosserman, of Gittysburg,
Penn:—

MAY the honey-dew of Heaven lie refreshingly on your almond-blossoms. Ps. 133;
Eccl. 12: 5. "Once you were 'like a green fir tree,' now you are like a tree stripped of its foliage, and ready to yield to the last strokes of the 'holy watchers.'" Hos. 14: 8. Job. 14: 7. Dan.
4: 13, 14. Mutation is written on everything earthly. God in "Christ is the same yesterday, and to-day and forever." But for the "immortality brought to light in the Gos-pel" we "would be of all men most miserable." "HE IS FAITH-FUL THAT PROMISED." To know this is wisdom, and to this the most illiterate may attain.

"And even to your old age I am He; and even to your hoar hairs will I carry you; I have made, and I will bear; even I will carry you, and will deliver you" Is. 46: 4. What an anchor is this for the tempest-tossed soul! What an assurance for the aged saint on which to pillow his drooping head, and repose his aching heart!
In reviewing the eighty years you have spent on earth, you cannot find the least occasion for suspecting the Divine faithfulness. "The wings of the Almighty" have ever overshadowed you, and you were ever encircled and upheld by "the Everlasting Arms." In contemplating the Infinite tenderness of God in the past, you can strike your harp to the Te Deum of the ecclesial Apostle, O "the riches of His goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering" Rom. 2: 4.
Standing on the brink of the bottomless Ocean of yet unfulfilled promises, you exclaim in subdued rapture with the same Apostle, "O THE DEPTH" Rom. 11: 33. "Three failed not ought of any good thing which the Lord had spoken unto the house of Israel; all came to pass" Josh.

21: 45. The "JERUVAH-BUILD" of Abraham is still the motto of the Heaven-bound pilgrim.
"O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good;
for His mercy endureth forever," is a jubilation of faith repeated twenty-six times in as many successive verses. Ps. 136. Holiness and faith and joy are God-born triplets. Nothing dark or mysterious or ghastly ever issued from the matrix of Deity. He generated man in His own image, and when sin drew the drapery of Hell over the glorious Genesis of God, a new, transcendent, all-relieving manifestation of grace broke forth in the veritable Incarnation of the Incarnate. After such a Heaven-and-earth-and-Hell amazing proof of love, what soul has reason to doubt the ability and readiness of God to "save to the uttermost?" If any problem has ever been solved beyond refutation, it is the Divine Fatherhood and Motherhood. "Take us a FATHER pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him" Ps. 103: 13. "As one whom his MOTHER comforteth, so will I comfort you" Is. 66: 13.

The past is a pledge for the future. Jesus is both "First-sheaf and Harvest." "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things" Rom. 8: 32. The whole heart of God lies open to the saint, and Almighty Power is at the command of the weakest heir of Heaven. Omnipotent Love has spent itself for our eternal security. The loving Vicar on the Cross is the All-prevailing Pleader on the Throne.

I heartily wish you a cloudless Saturday afternoon, and a golden sunset, and an "abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

MISSIONARY WORK.

BY C. WINE.

TO do good is the duty of all. Those who profess to be followers of the blessed Master cannot consistently be contented simply by being members of the church, (thinking themselves safe, and hence care nothing for the safety of others), but they should have that concern for fallen humanity, which will prompt them to put forth all reasonable efforts to bring others into the fold of Christ. It is true they exert a good influence by their examples—that is by coming into the church, and by their godly walk and conversation, but there are various other ways in which they may be instrumental in doing good.

"We are many members in one body, and all have not the same office." It follows that some can do good in one way, others in a different way. One very efficient way of promoting the Master's cause, is by contributing means for supporting home and foreign missions. The vices, follies and evil practices of this sinful world, may be seen on every hand. Everywhere wickedness abounds, which betokens the indifference and ignorance of the masses, concerning their duties to themselves and to God. Here a vast field of labor is open to all who would work for the salvation of souls. Much has already been done by those who have entered earnestly into this noble work. The work should be continued; for I verily believe, that thousands of intelligent men and women residing in places remote from the organized churches of the Brethren, would gladly unite with the church, if they could only be made acquainted with its practices.

The command of Him who came to save sinners is "GO YEAVIL." This seems obligatory, and we have the promise, "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love" (John 15: 10).
It is necessary, then, that ministering brethren be sent out to declare the whole counsel of God, to preach the Word as we understand it, to explain all the practices of the Brethren, and give the Bible reasons for the same; and to receive such as may be induced to become true followers of the Savior. Books, pamphlets and tracts should also be distributed. These may exert a valuable influence. Would it not be well to place our best publications, books, pamphlets &c., in various public libraries and reading rooms throughout the United States, and also distribute them to some extent in foreign lands? To accomplish these ends, funds are required. In making up these, all can assist; each can give something. If it be only a "mite" it will help to increase the amount. Thus by a united effort large sums may be accumulated; and these if wisely apportioned, and rightly applied, would undoubtedly be the means of accomplishing an incalculable amount of good. How should we give? Answer: "Every man according as he purposeth in his own heart, so let him give, not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver" (2 Cor. 9: 7). Again, "He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity" (Rom.

12: 8).

We infer from this, that we should not boast of what we thus bestow. "Do not sound a trumpet as the hypocrites do; for they have their reward." Surely no one will boast of the little sacrifices he thus makes, when he remembers the great sacrifice made by our Savior on Calvary to atone for our sins. We should rather deplore our weakness, our inability to do more to aid in the good cause. Bear in mind that a little sum, that one may donate, may be the means of bringing the light of truth to some benighted mortal, "save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins." Who can estimate the value, even of one immortal soul? It is beyond price. For ought we know its worth is infinitely greater than all the wealth of earth.
"For what is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" (Mark 16: 26). If then by our feeble efforts, we can be instrumental in saving souls, which are of such great value, we should certainly improve our opportunities. The prophet Daniel says, "they that turn many to righteousness, shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

WHAT IS THE ORDER?

S. H. BASHOR:—

IF we are strangers in the flesh, I think we are one in Christ Jesus our Lord. Now dear brother as you have been over the brotherhood a great deal, it is the request of some almost fallen members to hear from you, whether it is the order of the Brethren for sisters to wear plain bonnets or hats; and if it is the order of the church for sisters to wear a cap or veil? Give it through the BRETHREN AT WORK and Principle Christian. SUSAN FURK.

RESPONSE.

Dear Sister:—

Among the first churches of our Brethren in America and for many years, even in the present century, it was customary among the sisters to wear plain fur hats, with broad brims, and I am informed that some of them were occasionally worn until within the last few years.
Though I have never seen one worn by a sister, yet have often seen the hats, and judging from their appearance, they would be more serviceable than fashionable, if worn to-day.

As the fashion changes to different styles, the churches in a few places, have departed from the general order of the brotherhood, and wore plain hats, but formed after the order of the world, that is shaped like fashionable hats; the kind of trimmings used, I believe is supposed to make the hat fashionable or plain. In 76 at Annual council a query was presented as to whether it was admissible for sisters to wear fashionable hats, and the way the council decided some conceived the idea of it granting the wearing of hats if they were plain. To correct this error, A. M. last year decided, sisters should wear no hats at all, and all who now wear hats, do so upon their own responsibility, whether they be plain or otherwise, and throw themselves liable to the censure of the church. Notwithstanding this advice, some still persist in the wearing of hats, and consequently have fallen into the judgment of the church. No sister has yet to my knowledge been reproved for the wearing of a plain bonnet, and hence it follows that it must be the general order as held forth by our old Brethren.

Some of the bonnets now worn are not fashionable, but very immodest and foolishly trimmed, and display more vanity than become the god-liness, or should be allowed of the pure in heart.
It is not a bonnet simply that is required, but one of modest appearance. As to the covering in Paul's day I presume a veil was in general use; later it was changed by all Christians to a cap, which was discontinued by the popular denominations within sixty years past, but our church, with some others, still retain the plain cap, especially at church-meetings and Communions. Just why some make these seasons a special time for parading their caps, and fail to honor God at other seasons, has been a question in my mind of long standing; probably some of them could explain satisfactorily; I cannot. The general order is to wear caps. Some too, in this display a certain degree of vanity by using red, blue and white strings. I never could see the virtue or honor to God there was in putting great red and blue strings to a plain white cap.
Now I believe I have answered your questions in full, and about all contained in your letter.

If all our people could see and practice alike, it would do away with many difficulties, with which we now have to contend. Most all the churches in our brotherhood that have walked out of order have been subjected to adversities, and many have gone almost entirely to nothing, being reprimanded by A. M., for disobedience, and by the world for professing to be of us when they were different in practice, and had many internal troubles, but these we have everywhere.

Without further remarks I leave the matter as it stands, offering the editors the liberty of making any corrections or remarks they may deem prudent. May the blessing of God attend all His people on the Pacific coast, and grant you grace to overcome all obstacles, and finally save you above with all the washed and redeemed. Yours Fraturnally,

S. H. BASHOR.

THE FIRST APOSTLE.

THE word Apostle has the same meaning as the word missionary, a person having a message. Like the word missionary, it is used generally in a religious sense; and is commonly applied to those twelve persons whom our Lord selected to accompany Him, and to go about Judea, and elsewhere, to preach His doctrine.
These apostles were generally poor men. At least four of them were fishermen.

Jesus was walking by the sea of Galilee, when He saw two brothers, Simon and Andrew, casting their nets into the sea. Simon was afterwards called Peter, and the same who wrote the Epistles, or Letters, which bear his name. The Savior said to the two brothers, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." Having heard of and known Jesus before, they had confidence in Him, and immediately left their nets and went with Him.

Going a little farther on, Jesus saw two sons of Zebedee, James and John, in a vessel with their father, mending their nets. These two brothers were also acquainted with Him; and when He had called them, they too, left their father with his hired men, and accompanied Jesus. This James is not he who wrote the Epistle bearing his name; but the John is the beloved disciple who wrote all the books of that name in the New Testament, as also the Book of Revelation.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

BY JAS. Y. HECKLER.

YES, we see the twilight coming,
Of that bright millennial morn.
Signs of promise drawing nearer,
Rays of light the sky adorn.

Many, to and fro are running,
"But the wise shall understand,"
That the time is fast approaching,
And the Lord is nigh at hand.

Signs He told us would betoken
The events that passed before—
Light of truth and Bible knowledge
Show that Christ is near the door.

Famines rage with devastation,
Where the heathen temples stand,
Pestilences walk in darkness
In the Moslem pilgrim's land.

And the cry of war is sounding,
Great commotions wait the earth,
Thrones will tremble, crowns be falling,
Wonders soon may take their birth.

See the fig tree, cursed and withered,
Putting forth again its leaves;
Summer surely must be coming,
For the tree new strength receives.

Hasten, Lord, the church extension;
Bless the missionary cause;
Gather in thy congregation,
Precious souls to hear the cross.

'Tis a sign of Thine appearing,
That the Electoren hasten so,
To build up thy precious temple
In thy Zion here below.

Watchmen see, the morning cometh,
Sound the trumpet through the land,
Preach the gospel to the nations,
Is the Saviour's great command.

Hasten, Lord, Thy coming kingdom,
Whene'er the time may be;
Let the earth be full of knowledge,
As the waters of the sea.

SALVATION. ITS AUTHOR AND CONDITION.

BY J. W. STEIN.

"He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him" (Heb. 5: 9).

IN our last we called your attention to the literal meaning of the inspired precept—our only safe guide in our religious faith and practice. We now invite your serious attention to salvation, its author and conditions as set forth therein. No subject involves questions of greater moment to each of us, than this. Our text clearly intimates that by nature we are undone. The proposition to save indicates that its subjects are lost, which solemn truth is abundantly taught in the Word. "Sin entered into the world and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. 5: 12). Man's lost condition includes:

His present, moral and spiritual alienation from God. His understanding is darkened; his judgment perverted; his conscience "soured" and polluted; his affections earthly, sensual, sordid and grovelling; and his will insubordinate and rebellious. Every faculty of his intelligent being is prostituted to the purposes of sin, and all have continued to render him obnoxious to God and loathsome in eyes of pure and holy intelligence. He is but a mass of spiritual putrefaction. "Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, is only evil continually" (Gen. 6: 5). "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds and bruises, and putrifying sores" (Is. 1: 5, 6). Hence man is a stranger to life and peace. His lost condition also includes:

The tendency of his body to dissolution and corruption. However unwelcome this thought, it is a solemn truth that very soon we must become the occupants of the grave, and it will be said of us, "Earth to earth, dust to dust and ashes to ashes." Every falling tree, every withering leaf, every fading flower repeats the story of human destiny, and man though "Lord of the animal and inanimate creation," must bow his head and die. Again, man's lost condition includes:

His exposure to the bitter pangs of the second death. "It is appointed unto man once to die, but after this the judgment" (Heb. 9: 27). "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both the just and unjust" (Acts 24: 15). And while the subjects of salvation shall "awake to everlasting life," the lost must come forth "to shame and everlasting contempt" (Dan. 12: 2). "For the hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation" (John 5: 28, 29). Salvation then involves a present, thorough renovation and transformation of man's moral and spiritual nature; a resurrection from death in the likeness of Jesus (Phil. 3: 20, 21; 1 John 3: 2), and participation of "life and immortality" beyond the grave. But how is this attained? Just here I remark that:

1. Man cannot be the author of his own salvation. This appears when we reflect upon the relation of man, as a transgressing subject, to God's just and good and holy and righteous law, and here we speak not of the law of the Gospel, but of that law by which comes "a knowledge of sin," and which serves as a "school-master to bring us to Christ." Death is the penalty of its transgression (Ezek. 18: 4). Man cannot plead guiltless, for he has sinned. The Law requires spotless purity of character. Man does not possess it. It requires perfect obedience to all its commands. It demands ample satisfaction and atonement for sins committed. Man cannot make satisfaction without suffering its penalty. The Law makes no provision for repentance, it is, "do and live, or transgress and die," which certainly harmonizes with every principle of justice. See that criminal standing at the bar of civil justice, the victim of condemnation. He purposes to be a better man. He prostrates himself before the court, judge and jury and implores their clemency. He melts them, and the spectators into tears of sympathy, and sighs of heaviness, but what can they do? As faithful administrators of justice, they are compelled to execute its penalties. So no repentance under the Law of God can evade the inexorable demands of divine justice. Some have been so blind even as to suppose that they can keep accounts with God. They have introduced the science of book-keeping into their religion, and every evil deed they do, they put to God's credit and every good deed they do, they put to their own credit and suppose if at last they will only have done as much good as evil, that they will square accounts with God and bring Him under obligations to save them, such is the madness of sin. "It first infatuates, and then destroys." I have seen where read of a little boy whose father once said to him, "My son for every bad deed you do I am going to drive a nail into a certain post, and for every good deed you do I will draw a nail out of it." At length the post was full of nails and the boy resolved to do better. One by one the nails disappeared until the last was out, but on examining his post a new fact became apparent to him, and overwhelmed with grief he sought his father exclaiming, "O father, the nails are all gone, but the prints are there yet." So, whatever the sinner may do to reform an immoral life and restore himself to the confidence and favor of society, he cannot efface the dark and deep and damning effects of sin already committed. Its early impressions upon himself, upon society, upon the church and the world, may have been small like the first impressions of the falling pebble upon the bosom of the placid lake, but in its communicative influence it extends until it lashes the distant shores of eternity, and none but Omnipotence with the blood of mercy shed by the hand of divine justice, can wipe it out and counteract its awful effects, for the law cannot repeal a solitary decree in order to spare a sinner.

The act by which any sovereign would repeal a single edict in order to exercise clemency toward a transgressor, would at once impeach his righteousness in making the law, his purity in hating the transgression and his truth in the administration of justice. He would forfeit at once the confidence, respect and obedience of every subject of his government, and all might say, "If this man has sinned with impunity, we can do the same, and if the king has annulled the law to spare him, he will probably do so for us." So with God. Could the Sovereign of the universe repeal one edict of divine justice in order to save a sinner, that one act would impeach the divine righteousness, purity and truth; would thwart the purposes of immutability, subvert the scepter and throne of Omnipotence and involve the universe in hopeless anarchy and ruin. But not so. "Heaven and earth shall pass away," but "not one jot or tittle shall pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." One sin then committed, though the smallest, of word, thought or deed, without atonement, is enough to destroy a soul. Hence it is clear that, "By the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified in God's sight, for by the law is the knowledge of sin" (Rom. 3: 20). "For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curse; for it is written, cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them" (Deut. 27: 26; Gal. 3: 10).

This is a proposition however at which the carnal and unrenewed mind often stumbles. "What?" says one, "destroy me for one sin when my life has been habitually good and upright?" Mr. Lempolt, a missionary to India, was once preaching on human corruption, when one of his hearers surprised at his assertions, exclaimed, "How can this be true? that 'whoso ever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, is guilty of all'" (Jas. 2: 10). How can this be? If I keep six of the commandments and break four, have I not kept the majority? And is not God in justice bound to save me because I have kept more than I have broken?" The missionary answered him by supposing a vessel to be dashed along in the midst of a furious storm upon the Ganges, threatened with destruction. The shrieks of the passenger attract the attention of friends on shore, who immediately fasten a rope to one end of the rope, and the other end of the rope to a large chain and succeed in casting the stone on board, by which the chain is drawn out, one end of which is laid hold on by the passengers, and the other held by the friends on shore. But now while they are drawing the vessel shoreward where they hope it may survive the storm, when it is only yet a few yards off, just one link breaks. There may be a thousand sound links left, but one is gone. Now he asks, "What shall these distressed people do? Shall they cling to the unbroken links?" "No, no," exclaimed one of the hearers, "overboard with the chain, or it will sink them the sooner" (Power of Illustration pp. 50—52), then unless some other remedy is available it is a gone case. So beloved readers, with us.

The convict of civil justice may plead a life of habitual innocence and virtue, to exempt him from the awful penalty of one transgression, but it is all in vain. The law is broken and he is undone. So, if we have broken just one command of the divine Law, we need not cling to the unbroken ones, for the Law is violated and by it we cannot be justified in God's sight. This part of our proposition, then I trust is clearly understood. That man cannot be the author of his own salvation, appears further in that, no human rite or penance which he may invent, observe or suffer, and no offerings which can render to God, who professes all the essentials of happiness and glory independent of human service, can avail to compensate for sin or secure for him the divine favor. The important question then arises again, whence come salvation? Our text answers the query. Though man is lost and cannot be the author of his own salvation, referring to the authority and efficiency of Christ as our great high Priest, it declares that, "He became the author of salvation." Taking our law-place, being "made of a woman, made under the law," He came "to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons" (Gal. 4: 4). He "came not to destroy the law and the prophets, but to fulfill" (Matt. 5: 17), to magnify the law and as our substitution, in our stead to satisfy whatever claims it made at our hands. Did it demand spotless purity? He possessed it. Did it require perfect obedience? He rendered it. Did it exact satisfaction for sin, granting no repentance and allowing no repeal of its righteous claims? He made satisfaction, unbosoming Himself to receive its divine penalty, and "bore our sins in His own body" upon the cross. He suffered for sin, the just for the unjust that He might bring us to God" (1 Pet. 3: 18). "Though He was rich, yet for our sakes He became poor, that we through His poverty might be rich" (2 Cor. 8: 9). Though He "knew no sin," He was made "to be sin for us," that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him (2 Cor. 5: 21). "He was wounded for our transgressions," and "bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with His stripes we are healed" (Isaiah 53: 5). Man was an insolvent debtor to the claims of divine justice. He had not wherewith to pay, but Christ as our kind surety discharged the liabilities, and took the law into His own hands, so that our sins might be imputed to Him and His righteousness to us, "not His personal righteousness" as man "for that could not be transmitted to another," "not His essential righteousness" as God, for that could not be transferred to man, but His "surety-ship-righteousness," as the God-man, Mediator between God and man.

When a debt is canceled by a surety, the original creditor has no more claims upon the principal than if his own money had paid the debt, it only remains for the principal to satisfy the surety, and if he chooses to make the principal a present of the whole, on conditions easy, honorable and safe, no one else has a right to complain. So Christ as our Surety has taken the whole thing into His own hands. Standing between us and the law which has no more demands upon us. He has become the sole disposal of life and death, and we can be saved by becoming reconciled to Him on conditions which He Himself stipulates. "He became the author of salvation," and it becomes possible for God to be just, and yet the justifier of the believer in Christ. "But asks" one "wherein is the justice of all this?" I answer, there would be no justice in laying the penalty due the transgressor upon the head of another innocent subject, but when the king, whose will is the law, than which there is no higher appeal to justice designs to humble himself and suffer instead of his subject, no one else can complain.

BLOWING THE TRUMPET.

BY M. D. FOWLER.

BLLOWING the trumpet has become the watchword of the day, or nearly so, not altogether the Gospel Trumpet, but a trumpet of our own. It is true the Gospel Trumpet should sound out with a clearness from the door of every professor, yea, from every corner of the street, from every high place, and in every vale, until every ear is saluted with the glorious sound.

The clear notes of the trumpet of God is music of the most majestic kind to the soul of the saint, and a warning voice to the sinner. The true trumpeter of God seeks not his own glory, but the Lord's. He blows the trumpet in Zion and sounds an alarm in the holy mountain, and when the inhabitants of the Lord are made to tremble and give heed to the warning sound, and seek refuge in the ranks of the army of the Lord, the faithful trumpeter of God bows his head in humble reverence and gives God the glory, and rejoices in soul that sinners are converted. But ah, there were those in ancient days who had a trumpet of their own, and when they done a charitable act, their horn was brought into use and blowed a terrible blast, sounding it long and loud that all could know what they had done, that they might have the glory, and by some means the odd pharisaic trumpet has found its way down to the present, and it is brought into frequent use; we hear the sound thereof from the housetops and in the market, from the corner of the streets, through the columns of religious papers, in the social circle, from hill and dale comes the sound. See what I have done. See what I have done, too often precedes what the Lord has done. We have heard that ugly sound so much that it has become obnoxious. Hardly a week passes, we hear that some one has to give the odd trumpet a blast. "I," held a series of meetings, and three, six, ten, twenty were added to the church. But "I," precedes the Lord. Oh that "I" could in some way be killed, that the Lord could live more in us, and be in all our actions. Then we will find no more use for the odd pharisaic horn.

Is not this true my brethren? The Lord Jesus did not blaze abroad His doings Himself. But we frequently hear Him say, "see that thou tell no man." Although He was Lord of all, He never sought to make Himself conspicuous in the eyes of men. The humbleness and meekness of His character, forbade that He should blaze abroad His doings Himself, there were others that done that, neither the apostles. In view of these facts, can we do it and be blameless?

I do not think that it is required of God's ministers to keep an account of how many souls were brought into the church through our instrumentality, and then sound the trumpet to the world what "I" have done; God is to have the glory, "I" am not. If we have been willing instruments in the Lord's hands to perform a good work, He is to have the glory, not man. If we do our duty, God will keep an account of it; He is not forgetful. God's people do not need the praise of men in this world to add to their glory in the world to come. The Lord takes notice of all our acts, and there is no danger that He will forget them. How is it, if we do anything that is not so commendable, we are willing to keep those things perfectly quiet; we are not very apt to make them publicly known. Why not? Because we love the praise of men. Why not give publicity to both good and bad alike? I mean why do not we ourselves blaze abroad our own evil as well as the good.

I leave this question for each one to answer for himself. How natural, — (not very spiritual), if we have preached a good sermon, or written a spicy article to the public, or done any good act, and some one is presumptuous enough to tell us that was very good; we want everybody to know what "I" have done, hence the old horn is caught up and we get a blast; if no other way, it comes through the newspapers. Is not this true? We have been drawn into this by degrees, and perhaps do not think how obnoxious it is to the Lord. Therefore let us all wake up to a true sense of our obligations to God, and seek His glory and not our own.

Then the Gospel Trumpet will sound with a clearness, and with its soul-stirring notes, and then saints will rejoice, sinners will be saved, and then we can rejoice together in a full hope of eternal life.

LOVE.

BY NGAR H. SHUTE.

A REGARD for, or an affection to, any object whether real or imaginary, is the substance of our subject. How easy it is for us to follow that which we love, and have an affection for. It is easy for a follower of God to love him. Love is a cause for which an effect will generally follow. The adversary of souls loves to cast his snares to deceive the nations of the earth, and his snares are many.

With all his pernicious ways he throws his heinous and satanic snares around like the spider casts his web to catch the fly, he is very busy going about like a roaring lion, seeking the souls whom he may devour, and if possible, will deceive the very elect; this is what he loves to do, and oh! how his followers love to follow him in his tread; the fornicator, idolater, adulterers, love to follow his evil vices (1 Cor. 6: 9, 10). What will be the consequence of these? They will be banished from the presence of God, from immortal bliss, from the celestial shores of ceaseless ages, where Christ and his holy angels dwell forever on the right hand of the eternal Father, and be cast into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched (Matt. 8: 12).

God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, for a ransom for our sins, and not for our sins only, but for the sins of the whole world, and how his followers love to do his will; they love to be around the family altar in prayer, in the sanctuaries of God, where his Word is preached and any place where any good can be accomplished.

God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him (1 John 4: 16). True and holy love will make the whole heart of man and his soul rejoice and delight in God and obey his commandments; such a love will meet and fulfill all the ends of the Divine Law (Matt. 22: 37-40).

The love of unrepented hearts, is mixed with sin and loves that which is forbidden, and abhors that which it should love, we must be "born again" in order to see God (John 3: 3). In the three Persons of the Godhead, love is towards holy angels and Christians, unspeakably full, perfect and blissful. God's love is an infinite satisfaction and an immeasurable compassion towards sinners.

The love that can be enjoyed is almost incomprehensible. The lovely scenes around the fireside, in God's sanctuaries, and in our visitations to our friends and brethren and sisters in Christ, and at the parting hour will cause the tear to roll, and joy will be mingled with sorrow, and at the time of interment of our friends and neighbors will be around the silent tomb of the departed one, take the last view on this side of eternity, will mourn and weep, the love and affections so strong sometimes that it almost causes broken hearts (Matt. 22: 37-38). Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself (Matt 22: 40). On these two hang all the law and the prophets.

LIFE AND DEATH.

BY F. DEAGOROFF.

Mr. Infidel:—
TAKE away Jesus and the resurrection from the dead through him, and what have you left? Thomas Paine (a kind of modern Jesus to you), the declaration of independence (as you claim he wrote that) and a long and endless dark future in which not even the faintest gleam of light appears to cheer and console the weary and troubled soul. And while you prefer the one side of the picture, we take the other; and throw ourselves into the hands of God a "living sacrifice," and resolve with Paul, "by the grace of God I am what I am." For to me the burden of life is heavy enough with all the bright prospects of the future, let alone having the soul weighed down with the thought, that after this life, all is done, and we go down into the grave, without any hope of coming forth to enjoy those who have gone before, which to me would be worth ten thousand worlds like this to again embrace those three little ones at the right hand of God.

But you may say, we believe in a future state of existence. But if you deny Jesus and the resurrection, how are you to prove it? Who made you so wise? For this is something I have yet to learn; for I have never yet been able to even hope in life beyond the grave outside of Jesus. Neither do I wish to; for it seems as if those who have ventured to disbelieve the Bible, have got themselves into a very bad condition. For even the great American teacher, although a very strong man (or weak man I should perhaps say, for he has "sworn by all that is sacred, never to worship the devil, though he should appear dressed in royal robes, and seated on the throne of Jehovah,") has gotten himself into a great dilemma, for he will neither worship the devil, nor believe God (the Bible).

PRAYER.

BY ANNIE E. RUPERT.

HOW delightful is the thought, that those who cannot be influenced by our example, may be reached by our prayers. Perhaps there are friends who are separated from us by thousands of miles, or some dear one in our home. Perhaps a dear father or mother, brother, or sister, who repels every effort which we make to arouse him or her to a sense of danger.

How impossible it seems to do such a one good. But is it really impossible when there is a throne of grace, where we are encouraged to ask what we will in the name of Christ, and it shall be done unto us? Impossible when we know that the fervent effectual prayer of a righteous one availeth much? We have every encouragement to hope that earnest and persevering prayers will be heard and answered.

Call to mind the records of our Savior's ministry upon earth, and mark the numerous instances in which his favor was besought, and never besought in vain for friends and relations. The Syrophenician women, the ruler Jarius, the centurion, and others are sufficient proof that prayer was not unwelcome in a Savior's ear. Oh let us intercede with him who answers prayer for dear ones who are not in the church of Christ; pray for the heathen at home and for the heathen abroad; pray for the ministers of Christ, and for the missionaries of the cross. You are perhaps timid, you cannot say much for the cause of Christ, that Savior whom you love and desire to serve, but you can pray that his kingdom may come and that his will may be done on earth as it is in heaven. You can remind his promises which he has made respecting the world, being filled with his knowledge, and nations being blessed in him.

How truly noble is a useful life. Let the example of our Savior prove a powerful incentive to increase exertion. Birth and elevated rank may satisfy the earthly mind; but the Christian is a co-worker with the eternal and shall shine as the stars forever and ever.

THE COURAGE TO LIVE.

WE need not preach the courage to die—that is common enough—but the courage to live, to be honest in spite of poverty and neglect; to be true, though all is dark except where God shines in; to be faithful, though heavens fall and hearts break, and friendships turn to gall. Yes we must teach men to dare to be unpopular, to be misapprehended, to be ahead of the times, to follow the voice of God though it leads into the wilderness, to tell the devil to his very face that he lies, and also to give him his dues—an act which requires the supremest courage at times.

I wouldn't give a farthing for the triumphant faith of the death hour, unless it comes from that triumphant faith that makes our life full of noblest daring, that is ready to fling aside honor, wealth the praise of friends, rather than impair for one moment the soul's integrity. Oh, for such a courage—the courage to think, to act, to tell the harsh truths, to overthrow splendid falsehoods, to disown sweet lies and to banish tenderest associations rather than check the least, the free movement of the sovereign soul. We all must die with more or less equanimity, but we cannot live in the full splendor of our being except by courage and determined exertion.—The Guide.

LANARK, ILL., MAY 23, 1878.

From the Primitive Christian we learn that the school building at Huntingdon, Pa., is now commenced; the ground having been broken May 6th. They expect to have the building ready by the commencement of the Winter term.

The feast in our congregation last week—May 15th—was an enjoyable one. The weather was beautiful and the congregation large. About 400 commended—the house being nearly full of members. The feast is one that will long be remembered.

"Fine copy of the Bible which Martin Luther used daily, and the leaves of which are covered with annotations made with his own hand, is now in the Brandenburg museum, which gave for it about $150. The Bible was printed in Basle, in 1509, and is bound in leather, and is in good preservation."

"An Egyptian papyrus, twenty-eight feet long by seventeen inches broad, has recently been purchased by the French Director of Fine Arts. The document dates back to the year 2,000 B. C., and relates to the death and funeral of the queen mother of Kor-Hor, of the first Egyptian dynasty."

From a quotation, taken from the writings of Elder Henry Kurtz, and published some weeks ago, the impression has gone forth that we have in contemplation the publishing of a complete history of the Brethren. We at this time have no project of the kind in view, but would be glad to see Abram Cassel and a few others take hold of the work.

Some years ago the editor of the Baptist Bethel Flag wrote that, "Dunkardism is a local disease and must be treated locally," but now he says it "is a growing heresy and must be met." It is rapidly becoming the "sect every-where spoken against," and to certain worshippers of the goddess Diana, is becoming alarming and endangering their craft.

That all we have never been opposed to using lightning rods, yet we must confess that the following, clipped from a leading journal, does not speak very encouragingly for them, and has a tendency to shake one's faith in the virtue of lightning rods: "Eight out of every ten houses and barns in Illinois, struck by lightning last year, had rods on them."

During the past thirty-seven years 56 Atlantic vessels have been lost. The number of British vessels was 42; American, 5; French, 4; German, 4; Belgian, 1. The causes of disaster are given as follows: Wrecked, 30; burned, 1; collision with icebergs, 2; foundered, 2; lost in fog, 2; never heard from, 3. Not less than 4,000 persons lost their lives in consequence of these disasters."

At present preachers are much perplexed and annoyed by the increasing demand of their converts to be immersed. It is generally ascertained that this class of converts have been reading the New Testament. All who honestly and faithfully read the New Testament go down into the water. When the Bible is intelligently understood, these morning benches, as a physiological magnet, has lost all its magnetic virtue. Christian Review.

The correspondence between Bro. Bashor and a Lutheran preacher at Waynesboro, Pa., regarding a public discussion, has resulted quite favorably, as it has already induced one man to leave the Lutherans and to come out a non-conformist to the ways and customs of the world.

The correspondence was carried on through the Waynesboro Record, and was quite interesting. Were it not for the great length of the correspondence, we would like to republish it in the BRETHREN AT WORK.

It was a pleasure to us to meet and converse with brother Daniel Fry at our Love-feast. He seems none the worse by his trip to Denmark, but if any difference is improved in health. He looks hale and hearty, though a man of seventy years of age. He stood the trip well—the best of any, not once being sick while on the ocean. Brother Fry has great hopes for the Dames, and feels confident that the mission, if properly conducted, will be a success, as the Brethren's humble and self-denial doctrine is just the kind to take among a depressed and priest-ridden people. He told us much about the country and the peculiar customs and ways of the Dames.

We hope the members in Lancaster county Pa., will pardon us for making mention of the small number of papers going to that county. We have since learned that nearly all of them speak the German language, and hence cannot get much satisfaction from reading English, and for that reason do not take our paper. They are certainly excusable, and may the Lord bless them in their efforts at doing good, for they are reported worthy of brotherly respect. Though we cannot use the same language here, yet doubtless when we meet on the other shore we will be able to converse with each other in the same tongue.

From the following it would seem that the Reformed Episcopal church is learning something for this is what they have been doing, and it would be better for the cause of our holy religion if a few thousand Protestant congregations would follow their example: "The committee on Popular Amusement, reported against theatrical amusements, games and dancing in all entertainments sanctioned by the Church and discouraging frivolous and worldly modes of raising funds; also, requesting communicants to abstain from such entertainments."

A merchant in Philadelphia soon after his marriage, said to his wife: "I use no tobacco, hence I shall chum a certain sum of money each year for books. I have inquired of those who use it, as to their expenditure for the wood each year. Some said $10, some $20, some $25, and one said it cost him $500 a year. I then thought that if I would use it, I should perhaps spend $25 a year, hence I have chosen this for good books." It is scarcely needful to say that that brother has a large collection of interesting works, and certainly he need not be ashamed of his wise and prudent course. Will our young men accept this as an important lesson for them?

Mr. Carmel is said to be the richest and most diversified in all Palestine, as it unites the products of the mountain with those of the valley and seacoast. A writer enumerates forty-seven different kinds of flowers found there, and then did not complete the list. Says Van de Velde, "There is not a flower that I have seen in Galilee, or on the plains along the coast, that I do not find here on Carmel." When the glorious Millennium shall roll on, during which time Christ shall reign on earth one thousand years, and the saints go up to Jerusalem once a year to worship, it will be refreshing to visit Mt. Carmel, and pluck from her brow some beautiful fragrant flowers.

It is painful to hear sister Fry, who has just returned from Denmark, relate the sufferings and privations endured by the people there. Their dwellings are rude, mainly covered with straw—though they do not leak—while their diet is of the simplest character—being such as the American people would not use, yet they are a good-hearted and industrious people. The sister has great sympathies for the Dames, and thinks that our people ought to deprive themselves of a few luxuries for the benefit of the poor saint, and the Master's cause in Denmark. Christ's rich men for us can we not now make some sacrifice for His cause?—Read Matt. 25: 30.

Sister Christ has said: "Go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark. 16: 15) but it is worse than useless to talk or write against our slavery work. Christ has sent us a missionary sent from heaven to earth, and all his apostles were missionaries sent by the head of the church to reach all nations. If there were less parrying over missionary labor, and more work, it would be much better for the cause. "But," says one, "I see no place to take hold." Look around and find a place to take hold. Instead of waiting for something to turn up, go to work and turn something up. Better do a little than nothing. Every lawfully installed minister is a divinely appointed missionary, and in his work as a minister, is backed up by the highest authority in the universe.

GOOD SUGGESTIONS.

HERE is something that every young man and woman should cut out, preserve and heed: "It is not what people eat, but what they digest, that makes them strong. It is not what they gain, but what they save, that makes them rich. It is not what they read, but what they remember, that makes them learned. It is not what they profess, but what they practice, that makes them good. It is not what they appear to be, but what they really are, that fits them properly for life's mission and destiny."

The person that strictly follows these suggestions will certainly prosper in whatever lawful calling he may chance to engage.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SPENT two days in Philadelphia; met with the brethren one evening in prayer-meeting. Here, for the first time in my life, I met a colored brother and sister. They are very zealous in the work of the Lord, and on the "first day of the week" teach a number of colored persons the Word of God, in their own house. This is commendable, and hope the Lord, who notices even the sparrows, will not fail to abundantly reward them for their concern for their fellow-men. Also visited our esteemed and aged brother, Elder Fox who is now upwards of ninety years of age. What changes have occurred on this vast globe in even that short period! Though more than four score and ten, his digestive organs retain their youthful activity, and his mind quite well preserved. He is a living witness of proper care of the digestive organs and may be profitably imitated by many young persons. He is, however, confined almost entirely to his room on account of the frailty of his limbs. I felt the solemnity of the occasion as we bowed in prayer with one who had seen so many years, and had been intimate with those of our brethren who first came from Europe. The Lord grant his last days to be peaceful and full of hope for eternal life.

On the evening of the 4th, met with the brethren and sisters of the Hatfield church, in public worship, and on Sunday with those of the Indian Creek church. The latter is among the oldest organizations in this country. I am now writing in the library of brother Abram H. Cassel who is closely related to those who first organized the church in America. He is one of the foremost anticipations of this country, and his vast collection of rare and valuable works strikes one with wonder and amazement. Nor has he brought all these works together without trial and severe struggles—many of which would have discouraged and prevented most men in such labor.

Here I had the pleasure of hearing read the memoranda of brother Christopher Saur, some of which I here give, simply as matter of history, which shows how the first churches in America earned on their work: "On the 9th of August 1780, brother Martin Urner and I visited the little Swatara church on the Schuylkill. On the 12th, ordained brethren Martin Gady and Michael Frantz to the bishopric by the laying on of hands. Also ordained to the ministry by the imposition of hands, brethren David Lutzky, Bro. Bashor and Jacob Moyer. On the 15th went to Big Swatara, where brother Geo. Miller was ordained or confirmed to the bishopric. August 16th, visited the White Oak church, where brother John Zieg was ordained in hope under the following provisions: He is to be subordinate to elder Christian Longmacker, except in the absence, sickness or death of elder Longmacker, who by shall exercise full power of the bishopric. Otherwise he shall do nothing of importance without the consent of Elder Christian Longmacker." This shows the care and concern that the fathers were among the first in the great cause of our Lord.

I also give as an item of historical interest, the calling of C. Saur and A. Mack to the ministry. On the 7th of June, 1778, they were called to the work and the church given into their charge. This was at Germantown, and on the 3rd of November they did their first baptizing. They conducted the work assigned them with such ability that on the 10th of June 1783, five years and three days after being called to the ministry, they received the imposition of hands. On the same day, brother Henry Slingluff, who had been chosen overseer of the poor, was also confirmed by the laying on of hands. This brother kept the records of the church, which are now in the hands of brother Cassel. They not only kept an accurate account of the receipts and expenditures of the church in a neat and simple manner, but noted the proceedings of their council-meetings in a brief way. Here may be seen the names of those who contributed to the church treasury and amount given by each. It seems they were not afraid of hurting each other by keeping a clear record of their business, but like men of method and carefulness were cautious. On the 13th of December, 1761, Bro. G. Schriver was chosen, according to the apostolic order, as overseer of the poor, or deacon, and on the 15th of May, 1766, he received the imposition of hands in confirmation. He was the assistant of brother Henry Slingluff, already mentioned, and as such his name appears on the record. In support of their practice of first trying a man in office before confirming him, they cite us to 1 Timothy 5: 22-25.

Here give an extract from an article written by brother A. H. Cassel and published in the Christian Family Companion of Sep. 1st, 1868, showing the work of those who bravely stood in defense of primitive Christianity in the early settlement of America.

"Their first meeting was published to be on the following Sunday in October 1722, at the house of Peter Becker. The next Sunday they had it at brother Johan Gomery's, and thus they continued alternately until the inclemency of the weather obliged them to stop. But early in the following Spring they resumed them again, and held them weekly at the house of Peter Becker, without anything of note occurring until about September, when a revival took place along the banks of the Schuylkill, occasioned, as it was supposed, by the Hermits of the Ridge, (which were the remains of a defunct sect called the "Woman of the Wilderness"). They heard the Brethren, and visited their meetings occasionally. Several of them were soon so deeply impressed with the truth that they heard, that they applied as candidates for baptism." * * * * Peter Becker baptized them "in the stream called Wisahicon, a tributary of the Schuylkill and not far from its banks. While these were the "first fruits" of the Brethren in America, it might, perhaps, be a satisfaction, (to some at least), to know their names. They were Martin Urner and wife, Heinrich Landes and wife, Frederick Long and John Mayle." * * * * We find that after the Brethren had thus united themselves, their meetings were crowned with peculiar blessings, and tended to the edification of many, and still increased in numbers as well as in power, so that the whole region soon became alive—especially the young and rising generation, who, to the great joy of their parents, began to walk in the fear of the Lord, and the love of the Brethren."

I would love to give the entire article, for it is truly interesting, and to many who have recently been added to the flock, no doubt new. I will just add that the church at Germantown, Pa., was the first organized church of the Brethren in America. Covenant church was organized Nov. 7; 1724. Ephrata, Nov. 12th, or five days later. Then followed Oley church 1732. Great Swamp, 1733. Amwell, N. J., 1733. Coatesburg, 1735. White Oak, 1736. Little Conowingo, 1738. Big Conowingo, 1741. For all these interesting facts I am indebted to brother A. H. Cassel whose indefatigable researches and collections have brought to light facts pertaining to the planting of the pure Gospel in America. These collections are truly valuable, and as a people we should not be indifferent as to their worth. The truth of God suffers none by their existence, for they greatly testify to the holy and self-denying principles of the Christian religion. And I believe if many of the members of the various denominations of this country could see and learn how some of those pioneers whose name they have loved to revere as reformers and teachers, they would be compelled to confess that there is vast difference in the practices. In my next I hope to be able to give our readers some facts concerning the printing business among our "old brethren."

The above was written in brother Cassel's library, but was unavoidably delayed. Since writing it I have arrived home safely and feel much improved in health. Thanks to our Lord for His blessings.

BAPTISM.

SOME one has sent us a copy of the Forrester Herald, containing an article on baptism. The article contains but little new matter, but reiterates old arguments that have been met and refuted scores of times. The following, however, is decidedly new:

"We could quote from scores of distinguished scholars, all declaring positively that 'baptizo' means to sprinkle as well as to immerse."

"Scores" means not less than forty, and we think the gentleman will have a lively time finding forty "distinguished scholars, all declaring positively that baptizo means to sprinkle as well as to immerse." We knew that there were scores of distinguished scholars who affirm that baptizo means to immerse, and also, that all distinguished Greek lexicographers define baptizo to immerse or dip, but never before did we know that "scores of distinguished scholars" affirmed to the contrary, and we are a little doubtful whether the gentleman knows it. If he does, he is certainly far in advance of the champion Pedo-baptist debaters and writers of modern and ancient times.

His own authors are against him, for in his article he quotes Schrevelius and Schlessner, two Greek lexicographers and both of them define baptizo to immerse, not once giving sprinkling as the first definition, but our Forrester writer has the audacity to place sprinkling before immersion, something that no good Greek scholar of reputation in the world would venture to do. Here is something that is remarkable:

"We believe that sprinkling or pouring was the apostolic mode of baptism for this further reason viz—that, in all the cases of baptism mentioned in Scripture, the attendant circumstances accord perfectly with this mode [sprinkling] of administering this ordinance—while in many cases, they utterly preclude the idea of immersion."

When Philip and the eunuch both went down into the water that would utterly preclude the idea of immersion, would it? And when the Saviour came up straightway out of the water that, too, would preclude the idea of immersion? When they baptized at Emou, because there was much water there, would that preclude the idea of immersion? Would that favor sprinkling? When the people were baptized of John at Jordan, would that also preclude the idea of immersion? No further comments are needed to refute such illogical and far-fetched conclusions.

But he believes "that sprinkling or pouring was the Apostolic mode of baptism." If sprinkling or pouring was the Apostolic mode, where does he get his authority for immersion? These men will preach and write that immersion is baptism, was neither taught nor practiced by the Apostles, and then turn right around and administer it. If this is not inconsistency then we do not know the meaning of words.

A JEWISH TRAVELER.

HERE Juda Czerny, a learned Jew from Wilna, in Russian Poland, has returned from his journey of exploration in Caucasia, on which he set out eight years ago. The principal object of this journey was an historical and ethnographical inquiry; further, the desire to ascertain the origin of the Jews settled in Caucasia. Here Czerny inclines in his investigation to the opinion, repeatedly expressed, that we are one with the ten lost tribes. Carried away from their country by the Assyrian King Sardanapalus, they took up their abode in the Caucasus about 700 years before the common era. Here Czerny has collected numerous interesting data on the Jews in Persia and India from the Assyrian Nestorians, and mentions also his special data on many Caucasian and Arabian tribes, as yet little known.—J. Honesty and not pride, zeal and not fanaticism is what is wanted.

QUERIST'S DEPARTMENT.

Questions touching the meaning of Scripture, relating to History and practical subjects of religious interest will come in place. The querist's name must accompany all communications. We shall labor to avoid giving any just occasion for strife and contention over unimportant questions.

1. Give an explanation of 1 Tim. 5: 9, 24, "Let not a widow be taken into the number, under three score years old, having been the wife of one man."

2. "Some men's sins are open before hand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after."

GEO. C. STUMP.

1. It is evident from 1 Tim. 5: 9, that there was an order of widows among the apostles and early Christians. We are inclined to the following: 1. They were so classed, because they were widows "indeed." 2. The young females who came to the church, both Jews and Gentiles, needed instruction in the Gospel, and the widows indeed were especially qualified for this work. We here quote from the Apostolic Constitution, showing that there was still a widow's order among the Christians, some time after the Apostles had all departed:

"Choose your widows not under sixty years of age, that in a measure the suspicion of a second marriage may be prevented. But if you admit one younger into the order of widows, and she cannot bear her widowhood in her youth, and marries, she will procure indecent reflections on the glory of the order of widows, and shall give an account to God; not because she married a second time, but because she waxed wanton against Christ, and not kept her promise."

But the true widows are those which have had only one husband, having a good report among the generality for good works; widows indeed, sober, chaste, faithful, pious, who have brought up children well, and have entertained strangers unblameably, which are to be supported as devoted to God. Besides deacon, O bishop, be mindful of the needy, both reaching out the helping hand and making provisions for them as the steward of God, distributing seasonably the oblations to every one of them, to the widows, the orphans, the friendless and those tried with affliction." B. 2, pp. 93, 94.

Among the early Christians, as well as among the heathen, the widow who had had but one man, was held in very high esteem. It was supposed such would take a great interest in the doctrine of Christ, and more especially if she had arrived at the age of sixty. Such a one would not likely "wax wanton," be a busy-body, nor fatter; but sober, grave, well-established in the faith. This is how the early Christians reasoned with respect to their widows.

2. Some men's sins are open before hand, going before to judgment." We incline to the opinion that Paul has reference to the appointment of men to office in the church. He formed three classes in the church. 1. Those of whom he knows nothing, except that they professed Jesus. 2. Some he knew who were well established in the doctrine. 3. Those whose lives indicated that they were only partially reformed. The sins of these were open to all, going before to judgment—condemnation.—Such could not deceive the church, for their lives shewed just where they stood; such they need not choose to oblige. Those of the first class would be more difficult to handle.—Under the disguise of piety, they might creep into office, and then their sins would follow after, condemnation would come afterwards.—"Lay hands suddenly on no man," should be well heeded here. We draw these conclusions from the twenty-fifth verse. The good works of all true followers of Jesus, are manifest before hand, not simply some. You do not see that these two verses can have no allusion to believers and unbelievers in general, but, as they evidently have to do with men chosen to office. We would then conclude that the good works of those men chosen to office, are manifest before hand, and that they that are otherwise, cannot be fit. Some need to be brought forward, however, to do "good work," are well known—offices who have done much in a private way, yet are not so well known, cannot be led, and they, too, must be brought forward.

3. Please explain the latter clause of the 6th verse of the third chapter of 2 Corinthians. JACOB BIRKENSTAYE.

The clause referred to, is as follows: "For the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."—Paul declares that "our sufficiency is of God." Our competency, our ability to work comes alone from God. With this view, Paul further declared that God made him and others not only ministers, but able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter of the New Testament, but of the spirit of the New Testament. Not that they were not to use the letter, for that is necessary to the putting off and keeping off the "old man with his deeds," while the spirit is essential to the new man, and his eternal welfare. The letter destroys sin, and the spirit gives life. It is a fact that every institution in God's house, is of an humbling nature. All are directed against the carnal mind, which is not subject to the law of God, hence must be crucified. In being baptized in water, we deal with the letter; and while this act in the letter denotes death to sin, the spirit gives life. Bread and wine cannot give life, but remind us that we are not yet in the land of promise; but the spirit connected with the bread and wine, gives life. Faith, hope, charity—these are spirit life. O that we may all have the spirit of the New Testament continually dwelling in our hearts! Let no man build his hopes on the letter, but on the spirit. Obey God because God demands it. Practice all His teachings, not because others do, but because God requires it. Get into the spirit, live in it.

WHITERS should not fail to sign their names to articles sent here for publication.— Brother David A. Noverson of Shoals, Ind., says: "I would not be without your paper for ten dollars a year." He thinks of moving to the West.— Brother Daniel Vaniman says: "I have not been able to find time to spare lately to write for the paper, neither did I think it necessary, as it is always brimful of good matter by others."— The Brethren of Coshocton county district, Ohio, are building a meeting-house which they expect to have finished by the first of July next.— Sister Susan B. Gift says: "Our church, the Upper Conowago, Adams Co., Pa., is in a prosperous condition."— A subscriber writes: "I am not a member of your church, but I think your paper is good."— We have in this office a piece of Olive wood taken from Mt. Every person should be responsible for what he writes.— Brother George Wolfe of California, writes: "My son, J. P. He is said to be a minister of good ability.— Who will volunteer to give us a good article on close communion? Let us have good, solid arguments well bodied down.— No peace yet among the warring nations on the East.— One brother writes that the "railer and shambler have been at work" in their congregation. It is some consolation to know that there will be no such characters in heaven.— The Brethren organized a Sunday school at Laramie last Sunday with excellent prospects. The attendance will be very large.— It is said that Darwin's father and grandfather were atheists.— No wonder Darwin opposes the Bible.— The Protestant Christian has in the 4th of the Department, edited by Elder John Wise of Waterloo, Iowa.— The trouble with the English cotton operatives still continues. Thousands have struck, and much violence is feared.— Congress is grappling with some threatening difficulties, an effort being made to remove President Hayes. Much corruption abounds.— Among those lately baptized by brother

B. F. Stump, in Neb., were two, formerly belonging to the Methodist church, and a Campbellite elder. The Russians have moved two miles nearer Constantinople.— An artesian well in Hungary has reached a depth of over 3,000 feet.— In an artesian well in Paris over 2,500 feet deep, the water reaches a temperature of 161 degrees Fahr., and increases in heat with the depth of the well.— One more has been baptized in Denmark.— Do not send any more money to Denmark till you hear from us next week, as there has been a law passed that confiscates one fifth of all money not sent in the right way.— A petrified crocodile forty feet long has lately been found at Como, on the Union Pacific railroad.— We are in receipt of a twenty page pamphlet on Feet-washing, by J. F. Ebersole, of McComb county, Ohio, but have not yet had time to read it.— The boy who said that hell was any where outside of heaven, got more solid truth in a few words than is found in many sermons.— A good-hearted brother, who is in much sympathy with our movement, writes us "not to burn the candle of life at both ends." We fear many preachers, who break down in the prime of age have, too, been burning the candle of life at both ends.— Some of our people, who attend Annual Meetings are not sufficiently watchful about pickpockets. Many brethren have had their pockets picked by cunning wolves in sheep's clothing.— The famine in North China is expected to continue six months longer.— The noted "B. F. Leonard" who has, during the last several years, written so extensively for the J. C. Review, and is noted as one of the ablest Campbellite writers of the East, is said to be L. (Cornard) F. Bittle, of Somerset, Pa.— In spite of numerous accidents resulting therefrom, people will persist in lighting fires with coal oil. The horrible burning of those who kindle fires in this way, should be a warning to all.— The crops in Texas are reported as the best since the war.— The communists have strong organizations in different parts of the country. Their movement is threatening. One extreme produces another.— Pope Len is sick.— The city of Dallas, Texas, has bought a farm near by, and tramps who come that way, and want to board a few days, are sent out there and put to work and made to earn their board and lodging.

In addition to Henry Ward Beecher being a preacher, and almost if not quite a Universalist, he is also a chaplain of a regiment of soldiers. This is the way he displayed himself one Sunday night in his church: The pew-holders resigned their pews for the occasion, and the regiment marched in full uniform. Mr. Beecher appeared in his dark blue chaplain's uniform, but omitted the shoulderstraps and gilt buttons. He preached from the text:—"Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand." The preacher who can do all this, has very little respect for the Gospel of peace. His text ought to have been this: "Lord have mercy on me, a poor sinner."

UNANSWERED QUESTIONS.

Having on hand a number of queries which we have not time to answer, we call some of them below, hoping our correspondents will take notice of this department. Let your answers be short, and to the point.— A man claiming to be a minister of the Gospel, in a sermon against feet-washing, shamed the world to show, from its long and glorious history, that the Gentile church ever practiced the ordinance of feet-washing. And W. C. Thurman, in his book on feet-washing, page 79, 80, says it might be shown from church history, that feet-washing has, from the night of its institution, been to the present day, always been observed as an ordinance of the church. Now, can it be shown that it was not observed through your 14 centuries?— Did Elder J. C. Goddard's statement, according to the following Scripture: "Why hast thou forsaken me?" Mark 15: 34.— J. J. The Home Circle.

READ AND OBEY.

"Husbands, love your wives."
 "Wives, obey your husbands."
 "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath."
 "Children, obey your parents in all things."

HAVING arrived home too late to give the "Home Circle" special attention, we ask our readers to bear with us a little, and especially ask the children to be patient. By the blessings of God we hope to resume our Sunday Morning next week. Let the tender hearts and humble spirits not forget to indite good matter for this page, for we all need words of comfort, and the sweetness of divine truth. M. M. E.

BELIEVETH.

MOST of the young readers of the BRETHERN AT WORK have probably heard or read of the little family that lived in Bethany.—Mary, Martha and Lazarus; how that Lazarus took sick and died. Dear Martha and Mary, how sad and lonely they must have been! But they loved Jesus, and He also loved them. At the time of Lazarus' death, Jesus was beyond Jordan, but when He heard of it, He went again into Judaea, and when Martha heard that He was coming, she went and met Him and said unto Him, "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." She still adds, "But I know, that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee." Jesus told her that her brother should rise again. Says she, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day."

Just see what great faith she had. Jesus said, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die. Believest thou this?" She said, "You Lord, I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world" (John 11: 6; 47). Jesus says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to my Father." How strange it seems that some people will say, "I believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," and not do the works that He has done, and commanded us to do; but turn round and do something He has not commanded us to do. Oh! that each and every one would take the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, for

The Savior has said so very plain,
 If thou wouldst My disciple be,
 Repent, believe, be born again,
 "Take up thy cross and follow me."

TO THE CHILDREN.

I AM very glad to see that you keep up an interest in your department. It causes us old veterans to rejoice to hear now and then one say, "I expect to belong to the church sometime." You sometimes go to meeting and hear the Gospel preached; perhaps you sometimes have explained to you, such passages as Mark 4: 28. Last Sunday, a week ago, we read that passage in presence of some children, and older persons, and at the close of services we sang that beautiful hymn, No. 109. Please take the Brethren's Hymn Book and sing it. After dismissing the meeting we were amazed that the thoughts of this beautiful hymn were treasured by one of the children and quite ten years old, and she requested to be baptized, but was willing, on account of inconveniences, to postpone the matter one week. She kept her purpose, and the good Lord favored her with the opportunity to accomplish her desire. Last Sunday we questioned her in the presence of a large congregation, and her answers were far beyond her years. She was baptized and submitted so beautifully that it called forth the exclamation from the mothers in Israel, "What a beautiful baptism!"

Hope the Lord will enable her to be a model, safe for many of my young friends to pattern after; and hope that you will give this subject a thought and sing the beautiful lines again.

UNCLE JOSEPH.

HINTS TO YOUNG CHRISTIANS.

DON'T be afraid to "show your colors." A cowardly Christian is a misnomer. Shrink from no declaration, from no duty that Christ desires of you. The timid, vacillating course, is the hardest and most barren. The brave, outspoken, faithful life is the happiest and most effective. There are many things you do not understand as yet; but let no doubts or uncertainties prevent you from acting on what you do know. There are some spiritual facts clear enough, plenty of Christian duties plain enough to you; act immediately on those. Do faithfully all you know you ought to do, and the larger knowledge will follow in due time. Use earnestly every means that will enlarge and strengthen your Christian life. Study the Bible. Pray without ceasing. Don't neglect the prayer-meeting or the Sunday-school. Stir up your Sunday-school teacher and get your doubts explained. Go to the minister with your questions, and find out the best he knows on things that perplex you. Keep your heart warm by doing good. Make your life beautiful in the sight of men, and show them the sweetness and power of Christianity. Be conscientious in little things. Let the Master's Spirit shine through every hour of your life. In school, in shop, or field, in society, the young Christian ought to be the most faithful, the most courteous, the most generous and kindly, the noblest person there.

Follow Christ. Seek to reproduce His traits in your life. Do always as you would believe He would if He were in your place; so you will have a growing, joyful, successful, Christian career. —Selected.

IS THERE ROOM IN ANGEL-LAND?

A SHORT time since, the author of the following lines listened to an interesting discourse by a preacher, in which he related the following touching incident: A mother who was preparing some flour to bake into bread, left it for a few minutes, when little Mary—with childish curiosity to see what it was—took hold of the dish, which fell to the floor, spilling its contents. The mother struck the child a severe blow, saying that she was always in the way! Two weeks after, little Mary sickened and died. On her death-bed, while delirious, she asked her mother if there would be room for her among the angels—"I was always in your way, mother, you had no room for little Mary! And will I be in the angels' way? Will they have no room for me?" The broken-hearted mother then felt that no sacrifice would be too great, could she have saved her child.

Is there room among the angels
 For the spirit of your child?
 Will they take your little Mary
 In their loving arms so mild?
 Will they ever love me fondly,
 As my story books have said?
 Will they find a home for Mary—
 Mary numbered with the dead?
 Tell me truly, darling mother!
 Is there room for such as me?
 Will I gain the home of spirits,
 And the shining angels see?

I have sorely tried you, mother—
 Been to you a constant care!
 And you will not miss me, mother,
 When I dwell among the fair!
 For you have no room for Mary—
 She was ever in your way,
 And she fears the good will shun her!
 Will they, darling mother, say?
 Tell me—tell me truly, mother!
 Ere life's closing hour doth come!
 Do you think that they will keep me,
 In the shining angels' home?

I was not so wayward, mother!
 Not so very—very bad,
 But that tender love would nourish,
 And make Mary's heart so glad!
 Oh! I yearned for pure affection,
 In this world of bitter woe!
 And I long for bliss immortal,
 In that land where I must go!
 Tell me, once again, dear mother,
 Ere you take the parting kiss!
 Will the angels bid me welcome
 To that world of perfect bliss?

TO PARENTS.

"And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord"—Eph. 6: 4

THESE words were spoken to parents. "Provoke not your children to wrath." Fathers and mothers, those of you who have children under your control, do not provoke them. No child has a temper that does not need more or less cultivation; and instead of cultivating that temper in the proper manner, some children are teased and provoked to such an extent that they become naturally fretful and spiteful; and as they grow up in this way, being provoked from time to time, home is unpleasant to them. They are not taught love, peace and happiness;

hence they become quarrelsome with those around them.

"Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," then they become ornaments in society. This places a great responsibility upon parents, and at this age of the world, and in these perilous times, the work is a task, but should be commended when children are small. Pride is one of the severest things we have to overcome; and it is one thing that is too much cultivated in children. Innocent little children, those of whom Jesus said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," are dressed in all the fashions of the world, and I am sorry to say, by our dear brethren and sisters. Now brethren, if we put these unnecessary things upon children when small, what will be the consequence when they grow up. If we put on our children, things we would be ashamed to wear, who will have to answer for it? I will leave that for the reader to judge.

When we give children the means to go to worldly amusements, and help them to satisfy their carnal wishes, lusts and desires, are we fulfilling the commands of Jehovah? Are we trying to gather them into the fold, or are we encouraging them on the downward road to everlasting destruction? Brethren, I wish to impress it upon all our minds, to be engaged in bringing up the children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, for when they once have strayed away, how many tears their parents shed for them? How many prayers ascend to heaven in their behalf? Is it reasonable, is it consistent for parents to help their children into the degradations of sin and folly, and then try to get them back? I assert upon the truths of heaven, that if children are brought up in the admonition of the Lord, nine cases out of ten, they will be where Jesus wants them, and that is in His service.

May God help us all to be more engaged for the conversion of sinners, and for the welfare of one another. May we live so that when the Master says, "It is enough; come up higher," we may gladly drop this robe of flesh, and mount above the skies, where we can be continually engaged in singing praises to His almighty name throughout all eternity.

HOLD ON!

HOLD ON! It is dark and you are weak! but life depends on your holding fast to your religious profession, your character, and your Christ. Many a man has waited for the Lord a little, when long waiting was required. He despaired early, when he should not have despaired at all. The trials you bear, cut into your flesh. You say you could stand that, but they also cut into your resolution. Hold on! Nothing else will answer. It is a time of trial.—Men lose money, and there is danger of losing reputation with it. Men defame them, curse them, laugh at their Christianity. Hold on! Pay all you can now, and pay the rest hereafter. Be sweet, patient, forgiving. You want men to forgive your mistakes; forgive also their reproaches.—Get all the helps you can. And where can you get the most? The closet, the prayer-meeting, the Sunday-school—all these will help you to hold on. Increase your diligence, your watchfulness, your zeal for God, and through His service find His helping hand. It is there; so near you though you may not see it; so strong and willing, though Satan may tempt you to doubt it. It is only a little longer. Hold on in darkness, doubt, affliction. The day will dawn, the doubts will fly away, and your bright affliction will work out for you a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." —Selected.

A THRILLING TEMPERANCE APPEAL.

AT a certain town meeting in Pennsylvania, the question came up whether any person should be licensed to sell rum. The clergyman, the deacon, the physician, strange as it may now appear, all favored it. One man only spoke against it because of the mischief it did. The question was about to be put, when there arose from one corner of the room, a miserable woman. She was thin and old, and her appearance indicated the utmost wretchedness, and that her mortal career was almost closed. After a moment's silence, and all eyes being fixed on her, she stretched her attenuated body to its utmost height, and then her long arms to their greatest length, and then raising her voice to a shrill pitch, she called all to look upon her.

"Yes," she said, "look upon me, and then hear me. All that the last speaker has said relative to temperate drinking, as being the father of drunkards, is true. All practice, all experience declare its truth. All drinking of alcoholic poison, as a beverage in health, is excess. Look upon me! You all know me, or once did. You all know that I was once mistress of the best farm in town; you all know, too, I had one of the best—the most devoted of husbands. You all know that I had five noble-hearted, industrious boys. Where are they now? Doctor, where are they now? You all know. You all know they lie in a row, side by side, in yonder church-yard; all—every one of them, filling the drunkard's grave! They were all taught to believe that temperate drinking was safe—that excess alone ought to be avoided; and they never acknowledged excess. They quoted you, and you, and you," pointing with her shred of a finger to the minister, deacon, and doctor, "as authority. They thought themselves safe under such teachers. But I saw the gradual change coming over my family and its prospects, with dismay and horror. I felt we were all to be overwhelmed in one common ruin. I tried to ward off the blow; I tried to break the spell, in which the idea of the benefits of temperate drinking had involved my husband and sons. I begged, I prayed; but the odds were against me. The minister said the poison that was destroying my husband and boys was a good creature of God; the deacon who sits under the pulpit there, and took our farm to pay his rum bills, sold them the poison; the doctor said a little was good and the excess only ought to be avoided. My poor husband and my dear boys fell into the snare, and they could not escape; and one after another were conveyed to the sorrowful grave of the drunkard.

Now look at me again. You probably see me for the last time. My sands have almost run. I have dragged my exhausted frame from my present home—your poor-house—to warn you all, to warn you, deacon, to warn you, 'false teacher of God's Word!' and with her arms flung high, and her tall form stretched to its utmost, and her voice raised to an unearthly pitch, she exclaimed, "I shall soon stand before the judgment seat of God. I shall meet you there, you false guides, and be a witness against you all!"

The miserable woman vanished. A dead silence pervaded the assembly; the minister, the deacon, and physician hung their heads; and when the president of the meeting put the question, "Shall any licenses be granted for the sale of spirituous liquors?" the unanimous response was "NO!"—Selected.

MOCKING.—No mocking in this world ever sounds to me so hollow as that of being told to cultivate happiness. What does such advice mean? Happiness is not a potato to be planted in mold and tilled with manure.—Happiness is a glory shining far down upon us out of heaven. She is a divine dew, which the soul, on certain of its summer evenings, feels dropped upon it from the anaranth bloom and golden fruitage of Paradise.—Selected.

Call for Labor.

Dear Brethren: —

THE following is one of a number of such calls as we have received during the past year. A friend from Round Grove, Lawrence Co., Mo., writes me, "The people have requested me to write you to come here, and preach the doctrine of your church clear through. —

You can have the Baptist meeting-house. It will hold 400 and will be full."

Some such calls as the above have had to be neglected by our brethren here, from the simple pressure of home necessities. A few of us here alone, amid the imploring people of the surrounding country for many miles, are utterly unable to meet the demands upon our energies. We need an arrangement in South-west Mo., by which at least two brethren at a time can be kept moving. The interests of the truth, and precious, starving souls demand it. If the few of us in South-west Mo., attempt it, to meet these calls unassisted, our families must go without the comforts of life, for want of home providence. Dear Brethren, our country is getting to be one vast missionary field. The fields are white for the harvest, and we are imploring God to send forth laborers. Can't you help us?

"Our country's voice is pleading, Ye men of God arise! His providence is leading, The land before you lies, Day-glenns are o'er it brightening, And promise clothes the soil, White fields, for harvest whitening, Invite the reaper's toil."

It seems that the home demand and duties with the other claims upon our time will render our contemplated Annual Meeting trip, (during which I had hoped to spend a few weeks in Indiana) an entire failure.

Your Brother, J. W. STAN.

Report of Meetings.

Dear Brethren: — I COMMENCED a meeting in the Huntington district, Huntington Co., Ind., on the evening of the 13th of April; preached five discourses. As it rained two evenings in course of the week, we could not get to church, which checked the meeting and interest to some extent. Yet the interest was quite good, three precious souls rose in favor of Christ, to unite with the church.

On Saturday forenoon, the 20th, we had a church-meeting, where Bro. Sumers was advanced to the second degree of the ministry. I then left for the Salomony district, where I preached on Lord's day, the 21st. Bro. Leedy remained over Lord's day, preached three discourses, but had no more additions, so those three who had come out on the Lord's side, were baptized. On Monday Bro. Chick took me to Huntington, where I got aboard the train for Antioch. Staid one night with Bro. Leedy, and next morning took the train for Peru. — Then to Bomker Hill, and was met by Bro. J. Fog, who took me to the meeting-house, where I preached.

Next day attended the District Meeting of the Middle District of Ind. Some ten queries were presented, as usual not of much importance; hence were soon decided. Done some visiting at Bomker Hill, then went to Cass Co., preached Friday evening, Saturday evening, Sunday and Sunday evening. Had good attendance and attention, and quite an interesting meeting. I might have continued, but as none of the ministers in that arm of the church attended the meeting, and on the whole, not in favor of protracted meetings, I thought best to discontinue.

We expect to go North of Logansport, day after to-morrow to commence meeting on Friday evening and to continue over Lord's day, or perhaps longer. S. MURRAY.

A Good and Noble Suggestion.

Dear Brethren: — WE find a very good example and suggestion in No. 17 of your worthy paper. Bro. Harliberger of Mo., gives an example which it would do well to follow. Some good and zealous brethren in every congregation ought to initiate this. Bro. Hanson's circumstances should be presented to the congregation and what funds could be collected, should be immediately sent to the Danish Mission Contribution Box.

I have often had cause to wonder why such a move is not adopted in every congregation, where such calls are made, and immediately supply the want of the needy. Many mites might be obtained in this way from liberal hands and noble hearts, which otherwise are not collected. Dear brethren and sisters do not bear that too much will be collected for our dear, suffering brethren and sisters in Denmark.

If you press meaning enough into Bro. Hansen's article, to realize half his sufferings and deprivation, you cannot help but loose your purse-strings and drop a mite for his benefit.

Just think for a moment, if God were to withhold His blessings from us. Just as we deal with God's saints, either temporally or spiritually, so will He deal with us. As we mete to others, so it shall be meted to us. Do not let this matter pass by unheeded. Do not say, Let the dear brother be warmed and filled, but send him the necessary funds for that purpose.

"Love us you would if the angels, Waited for it at the door; Give us you would if to-morrow, Found you where all alms are o'er, Give us you would to the Master, If you met His searching look, Give us you would of your substance, If His hand your offering took."

Now, brethren and sisters, send your mites along at once. Do not delay because your mite is small. If you have but five cents to give, do so with a willing heart, and God will abundantly reward you for it. But I trust the one who gives five cents, will not be a brother or sister blessed with an abundance of perishable material, while a poor brother or widowed sister, cast a much greater amount into the Lord's treasury for His suffering saints.

God bless the donors to this noble purpose! Your well-wishing Sister, EMILY R. STIPLER.

GLEANINGS.

From Lost Nation, Ia. — The brethren and sisters and delegates coming to our East on the 23th of May, should remember that the time for the train to leave Marion, is at 7 A. M. — This is the only train that day coming East to our place of meeting. Brethren please notice the time, as there will be no train until Monday morning the 27th. L. BARTO.

From Maria, Pa. — The Woodbury congregation is still prospering. Bro. Silas Hoover commenced a series of meetings on the 15th of March, and preached in all fifteen sermons in this district. Twenty-one precious souls came out on the Lord's side and were baptized. I learned that two more were added since. May God receive all the praise forevermore. LOTTIE KETRING.

The Danish Mission. — This mission is assuming a new phase. The brotherhood has just been taking a look at Denmark, through the eyes of elders Fry and Ely. These brethren have just returned, and are spreading that missionary field before the entire church. To some this is not necessary, but to the great majority it is a necessary step. Brethren generally want to inspect things closely and now since the facts are made so plain, the liberality of the brotherhood will be largely increased. Read 1 John 3: 17. S. Z. STARR.

From Geneva, Ind. — The cry for help in Bro. Hansen's letter is too loud and heart-melting to be cast aside without one tear of sympathy. Hope the brethren and sisters will cheerfully respond to the call. God loves a cheerful giver, one who gives out of a heart of love to Him and his fellow-men. Satan is very apt to whisper in our ears: "You are not able to give but a small mite, so don't give any, and let others give who are able." But what does Christ say about a certain poor widow that only cast in two mites? "O let us adhere to the injunction of Christ, to watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation. I am glad you do not publish the mites given. Jesus says, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." E. WATSON.

From Lechaville, Ind. — On the second Sunday of last month at Dura (Antioch district) three were baptized according to Christ's commission and rose to walk in newness of life, and we tried to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints.

On Easter Sunday, at the above-named place, the brethren and friends met and re-organized a Sabbath-school, which at present bids fair for success. In No. 19 of B. AT W., in the article, Come to Jesus, it should read, "Many of the Corinthians came to Jesus," instead of "many of the Christians, etc." J. W. SOUTHWOOD.

From Winfield, Kansas.—The other time I wrote you, I could give no news from this, the Silver Creek congregation, but now we can. Our elder, Jacob Buck, gave us a call, preached three discourses. The result was, that one was made willing to forsake sin, take up the cross and follow the Savior. E. HOOVER.

From Sidney, Ohio.—Bro. Oliver Yount has just closed a series of meetings at our place, eight miles West of Sidney. It commenced the 27th of April. He preached eighteen sermons; during that time, there were eighteen precious souls that felt it their duty to go down to the liquid stream, and there be baptized for the remission of their sins; the youngest being about twelve years old, and among them there was one young man who is deprived of hearing and speaking, when he felt it his duty to obey the blessed Savior, why should not those who are blessed with hearing and the utterance of speech, feel it their duty to obey their blessed Master in all His appointed ways? May the Lord bless our brother's labors here and elsewhere, and may the words spoken by our brother, sink deeply into the hearts of those who sat beneath the sound of his voice. May the good seed sown, spring up and bear fruit an hundred-fold.—May the Lord bless us all and guide us by the divine Spirit, into all truth, while we live and when time shall be with us no more, save us all, without the loss of one, is the prayer of your sister in Christ. MARY A. WRIGHT.

From John H. Miller.—I would say to the readers of your worthy paper, that we the Brethren of the Brooklyn congregation intend holding a Love-feast, June 8th and 9th, commencing at 10 o'clock, at Bro. Alabam Miller's, three and a half miles North-east of Brooklyn, Iowa. J. J. MILLER.

From Milford, Ind.—I write to let you know of a sad occurrence. On the 7th inst., friend J. Pinkerton's boy, Wm. Edward, aged 4 years, 6 months and 7 days old, was struck by lightning, while lying on the floor, and killed instantly. The lightning struck the mother of the child, and at this time is suffering much by the effects of the lightning. Her clothes were on fire, but not burnt much until they were torn off. The boy's clothes were set on fire, but he was saved from burning up, by taking his clothes off. The lightning struck through the floor into the cellar and set some straw on fire, but it was discovered in time to save the building. Funeral by the Brethren from Job 19: 21. "Have pity upon me, O ye my friends, for the hand of God has touched me." Surely the hand of God has touched this family. J. H. MILLER.

From Maple River Junction.—The Lord willing we intend to hold a Love-feast at the Maple River Junction in Carroll Co., Iowa, on the 15th and 16th of June. D. W. SMER.

From Laramie, W. —I feel a deep interest in the cause of Christ, though I am, as yet, one of the weakest members. I love the cause of Christ, and feel to thank God for all his goodness towards me. I love to see the good work prosper and I think if there were a ministering brother to come here, that there could be a gain of good souls. It is the request of all the members that Bro. L. Hillery should come back, and labor with us. He is well liked by both saint and sinner and has made many good impressions here. If he is permitted to come back, we are sure that several could be gained for the kingdom of God. O may he come back to help poor sinners to Christ.

We still hold our social meetings, which our dear brother started for us before leaving. We enjoy ourselves very much in them and our prayer is that we may never fall from grace, but stay close to the cross of Christ and there learn of Him who is able to save. Now if I am not asking too much, I would say, send us back our dear Bro. Lemuel. We are poor in this world's goods, but will do all we can for the spreading of the truth. H. C. LONG.

From Orville, O. —The Brethren of the Wooster church will hold a Love-feast the 31st of May, 1878, commencing at 10 o'clock. The meeting will be held near Smithville Summit, and those wishing to come by rail, can be met at that place or at Orville, by giving notice to D. M. Irvin. D. M. IRVIN.

From I. W. Andrews.—Your paper makes its welcome visits regularly, and is a welcome guest. I would feel lost if it would cease to visit me. It is very pleasant to get news from the whole brotherhood. O how I rejoice to read of the success of the different churches. We had a pleasant meeting on Sunday; met by the water's side, and saw four precious souls baptized into the kingdom of God. The church here is increasing very fast. May the Lord go on with the good work!

Yellow Creek, Ill. From C. H. Balshugh.—There is nothing in the world without relations; and it is in the entire circle of relations that things must be judged of. The majority go by fragments and sections, and hence reach erroneous conclusions. It is one of the most lamentable facts of the Church, that persons judge hastily, before they acquire the data for reliable conclusions. Narrow-mindedness is the universal penalty of sin. Holiness brings divine illumination, in which we see the right position and relation of things. Brain work, isolated from the indwelling Christ, is surface work. The greatest unsanctified minds see not to the depths reached by the shallowest intellect in which the Holy Ghost is enshrined. How much is given to the press, which is no more than a plumed, taunting the attainments of the writer. Not infrequently it is unadvised, brazen-faced plagiarism. Better five simple, Spirit-begotten words, than ten thousand stolen, unflashing gems from another's brain. There is but one college course that makes us truly wise, and that is the in-breath of the Great Teacher, "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and of knowledge."

From John H. Perk. —Whereas the article, entitled "The Ungrateful Man," published in No. 20, has caused some offence, I embrace this opportunity of saying that in the writing of that article I did not intend to cast any personal reflection upon any one; but since it has caused some offence, I now regret that it was written, for in my writings I do not wish to say that which will in any way hurt the feelings of my brethren. The motives that prompted the article, on my part, were pure and not personal; but since it has caused some unpleasant feelings, I hereby ask the forgiveness of all those whose feelings have been affected and hope that hereafter I may use that caution and regard for the welfare of my Master's cause, that becometh every devoted child of God.

Trouble Brewing.

"Can ye not discern the Signs of the Times?" —Mat 16:3. A long talk with one of the leaders of the Socialists in the city of Chicago. Said he, "There is trouble brewing."

The reporter asked why, and he replied that times are not improving. "You will see something terrible in a short time; something that will open your eyes, and will compel you, as well as all wage-workers, to go with us."

"Do you mean to say that you will attempt a revolution?"

I mean to say, sir, that a hatred has been engendered between the capitalists and laboring classes, and the time is ripe for a change. The capitalists are divided against themselves, and that is what will help us. I hate to see it coming, but there are going to be terrible times. I am afraid we can get reform in no other way."

"What do you mean?" asked the reporter.

"I mean, sir, that our rights are denied us at the ballot-box, and we propose to have them by force of arms;—have them we will."

"Do you mean to say that there will be bloodshed?"

"I say, that there will be a change within the next ninety days, and we will bring it about."

"How?"

"By revolution. The mines are laid. We have the trains ready, and the firing will be commenced all along the line at once. Capitalists will meet the laborer on the street, and the capitalists will be hanging from every lamp-post. The laboring men have been kept down long enough.—What we want is a co-operative State, in which all rights of property shall be vested, and each man shall be recompensed according to his power of production. That is the object of the Socialistic party."

This conversation took place in the presence of a well-known local contractor, whom the Socialistic leader was not acquainted with.

The leader who was interviewed also stated that the Socialist party was working now under the instructions of the National Executive Committee whose headquarters are at Cincinnati. A circular issued to the different sections of the country, some four months ago, advised the various committees to organize companies in each city, town and hamlet, where it was possible, throughout the United States. In this State, Wisconsin, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New York, California and Massachusetts, this has been carried out to the letter. To every company there is appointed a Captain by the Central Section, and the two Lieutenants are elected after the organization is effected. Every ten companies constitute a battalion, which is in command of a colonel, appointed by the Executive Committee. It is claimed that in New York City there are twenty battalions organized, having an enrolled membership of over 16,000 men, largely composed of Poles, Bohemians, Scandinavians, Frenchmen, and a few Irish, under the lead of the notorious Megy and Schwab.

In this city there are claimed to be enrolled upwards of 14,000 men. Of these, it has been stated that 18,000 belong to the military organization. In California the best organization exists. Pittsburgh is the armory for the party. The guns and ammunition that they possess, it is claimed, are stored there, because the leaders hold, "that the boys there know how to use them."

It is still claimed that the riots of last Summer were started prematurely, but this time there is to be no failure. The work is to commence in Chicago at a given signal, when simultaneously Schwab and Kearney and the other leaders will gather their hosts together, and the work of carnage and destruction commence. —Chicago Tribune.

A Baptism of Hundreds.

ON Sunday morning the roads and lanes leading across Climbhorazo Park, were filled with persons, white and black, male and female, from the gray-haired sire to the infant in arms, all hurrying in the direction of Gillic's Creek to witness the great baptizing.

By 10 o'clock at least 4,000 persons had assembled on the York River Railroad and the surrounding hills, and the long line of new converts male and female, in twos, arrived on the ground and stood in readiness on either side of the stream—the males on one side and females on the other. The females were dressed in white, with white turbans around their heads, and the men with white shirts and white handkerchiefs around their heads, awaited patiently under the burning sun the arrival of their turn. After the singing of a hymn and a short prayer, the Rev. Scott Gwatkin, accompanied by one of his deacons, stepped down into the water and the baptizing was begun. The females were served first, and they were quickly disposed of to make room for the others in waiting. The men outnumbered the women. By half past twelve o'clock the ceremony was over, and 233 persons had been immersed by one man. The converts for the most were very quiet and undemonstrative, but occasionally some manifestation of religious fervor would break out.

One old woman, at least seventy years of age, walking on crutches, hobbled to the pool and was among those baptized. She was taken in the arms of a stalwart deacon, and borne out to the dressing room.—Richmond State Journal.

Here is proof that a man, in a little over two hours, baptized 233 persons. At this rate of baptizing, the twelve Apostles could have baptized the 3,000 Pentecostians in less than three hours, or if assisted by the seventy disciples, in less than one hour, and yet modern pedo-baptists claim that it could not have been done in one day. Those who think of meeting opposition on this point, will cut this out and paste it in their scrap-book. Every reader ought to have a good scrap-book for such things.—E. H.

Charlie Ross.

SEVERAL Baltimore ladies insist that the DeMarra lad, who is at the House for the Friendless in that city, is the lost Charlie Ross. Since his arrival in the Monumental City, the boy's skin has become fairer, and his hair lighter and curlier. It is proposed to take him to Germantown about the first of July, in the hope that, as that was about the time of the kidnapping, the boy may recognize in the place scenes which will recall thoughts of home and refresh his memory.

THERE is no harm in a man having science in the upper story, provided he have common sense on the ground floor.

FLOWERS THAT NEVER WITHER.

THERE are flowers that never wither,
There are skies that never fade,
There are trees that cast forever,
Gading bowers of leafy shade,
There are silver wavelets flowing
With a billow sound of rest,
Where the West wind, softly blowing,
Fans the far banks of the West.

Thitherward our steps are tending,
Oh through dim, oppressive tears,
More of grief than joys are blending
In the darkening woe of years,
Often would our feet be weary,
Sunk upon the winding way,
But that when all looks most dreary,
O'er us beams a cheering ray.

Thus the Father who hath made us
Tenants of this world of care,
Knoweth how to kindly aid us
With the burdens we must bear;
Knoweth how to cause the spirit
Hopefully to raise its eyes,
Toward the home it doth inherit,
Far beyond the azure skies.

There is a voice that whispers slowly
Down within this heart of mine,
Where emotions the most holy Ever make their sacred shrine,
And it tells a thrilling story
Of the great Redeemer's love,
And the all-bewildering glory
Of the better land above.

Oh, this life, with all its sorrows,
Hasteth onward to a close!
In a few more brief to-morrows
Will have ended all our woes;
Then o'er death the past immortal
Shall sublimely rise and soar,
O'er the star-resplendent portal,
There to dwell forevermore.

"PRAY WITHOUT CEASING."

BY J. S. MOHLER.

THE Greek, for the above phrase, is "Adiakēptos, Proseukesthe." Adiakēptos, means, unceasingly, continually. Proseukesthai, means to come or go to any one, draw nearer. Hence the phrase "Pray without ceasing" means to come to God, or approach God, regularly, daily, each morning and evening, as well as to give thanks through day. It does not mean that we shall occupy a praying position, and keep on saying words of prayer and never stop, nor move out of a praying position till we die. The phrase without ceasing, or unceasing, does not mean that no intermission can occur. We say of some persons, "They are unceasing in their efforts," i. e., they keep on trying, though intermissions may occur. Again, "he is a man of unceasing industry," this does not mean that that man works on day, and night, without stopping to eat and sleep; but that he works regularly, daily, whenever he has the opportunity. Some persons are unceasing talkers; but this does not mean, that when their tongues start, that they never stop, but it means, that whenever opportunity offers, they always seem to have a superabundance of talk.

In this sense we understand the phrase "without ceasing," as applied to prayer. But there is a sense in which the phrase "without ceasing," makes no application still. Christians live in an element of prayer. They constantly breathe a spirit of prayer, though they may not vocally pray. This spirit of prayer is manifest wherever they go, or in whatever they do, whether in the discharge of family, or neighborly duties, or in laboring on the farm, or shop, or traveling abroad, and when we lie down to sleep, in groans that cannot be uttered. In this sense we always pray. "There are a class of profane who instead of living in prayer, simply live in prayer, i. e., they pray occasionally. They feel it is their duty to pray, but do not feel very thankful that they have the privilege of prayer. Prayer is a tremendous job for them. The most pleasing part of their exercise is the AMEN; and when that is said, they feel that they have done their duty any way, whether willingly or reluctantly, and are very glad the job is off their hands. Such prayer does not amount to anything. For our encouragement in continued prayer, Christ rebukes an unjust judge, who at first would not hear the petitions of a certain poor widow, at last concluded to grant her request in order to get rid of her continued coming. "And (says Christ) shall not God avenge His own elect, which cry day and night unto Him, though He bear long with them" (Luke 18: 7).

It is as impossible for a Christian to live without prayer, as for a fish to live on dry land. In prayer we talk with God. Prayer elevates the colder Jacob saw, and brings heaven and earth together. Prayer is the medium through which the comforting and cheering influences of heaven are given unto us. The strong man in battling with the powers of darkness, is often sorely tempted; but prayer gives him strength and victory over his enemy. The weaker ones and babes in Christ, are too weak to walk alone. Prayer brings their Savior near, who will not forsake them, but will enable them to stand firm against our common foe.

"Satan trembles when he sees,
The weakest saint upon his knees."

Revered parents seek comfort in prayer, and a prayerful God, heals their wounds. The bereaved widow prays for grace and strength, that she may be submissive; and the widow's God hears her. Ministers troubledly pray that God would give wisdom and courage, that His cause be properly presented. Elders pray that they may feed the flock with the rich pastures of God's Word. When elders pray, when ministers pray, when lay members pray, all pray, the church will prosper, and be in peace, and sinners will be brought into the fold of Christ. In nine cases out of every ten the troublesome members are those who do little or no praying. The united prayers of a church, will prevent many a church-meeting; will prevent many a transgression. If we ask in faith, believing, for things that are needful, God will grant them. No good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly. The trouble with so many professors is, they do not pray enough. Every follower of Christ, prays in secret. All followers of Christ who are heads of families, should by all means have family prayer, or family worship. We are pained to learn, that some ministers, and even elders, are neglecting this important duty. This ought not so to be. Pray without ceasing, and in all things give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you, says Paul. Those who will not pray now, may see the time when they will be compelled to offer a very unwilling prayer, namely for the rocks and mountains to fall upon them, and hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and the wrath of the Lamb.

May God help us all to pray aright, that we may obtain heaven's choicest blessings, be faithful until death, and obtain an abundant entrance into His everlasting kingdom above.

FERVENT IN BUSINESS.

BY D. H. MENTZER.

My Dear Brethren:—

MAY the flame of sacred love be ever burning upon the altars of your hearts, that neither creature nor power, life nor death, shall be able to separate you from Christ or His Word.

"Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." What an admirable profile of the true Christian life is expressed in these words of the distinguished apostle! True to the necessity of human existence, and true to the dearest and noblest interests of the soul, Paul was himself a business man, and was known to work at his trade, notwithstanding he was a minister of Christ. This enabled him to know the demands of a business pursuit, and could thus sympathize and truly comfort his fellow-disciple who labored to maintain a livelihood. Such is with us to-day. Well it is for many of us that we are "diligent in business," lest we too might be running to and fro and making ourselves busy in matters wherein we should learn subordination, harmony, and love—sanctified love. There is doubtless nothing within the range of our undertaking that we cannot oversee—drive to excess. This is true in business. We may be too diligent in business so as to hinder our fervency in spirit, and deprive us often from "serving the Lord" while we ought to be serving Him "without ceasing," thus "growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." It must all go together. He that don't work, (because he cannot), is dependent upon the labor of others, and should acknowledge that dependence, and act accordingly. O that we might learn this happy sentiment of a faithful minister of Christ, and know in very deed just how to couple business with religion and religion with business. Labor is honorable, but let religion sanctify it, that religion may always be best and highest.

is at hand. There is labor to be done—labor for the good of the church of Christ. This we most devoutly hope for and pray for; but O the danger of work being done which would not be for the welfare of Zion. We know what the past has been, but who knoweth what the future will be? Brethren and sisters in Christ; are you awake to the march of events in the church? I fear that many are better acquainted with the march of events in the natural affairs of the world than those of the Church. I fear many are so "diligent in business" that they forget the "perilous times" through which Zion is moving. To say nothing of the great commotions amongst nations and so-called religious bodies, let us consider the evidences of unprecedented commotion all over our own beloved, though bleeding Brotherhood. These evidences "the wise shall understand." O who that loves the church whose most worthy and over-glorious Head is "Christ, the Lord,"—who, I say, can be at ease? I appeal to every one of you whose eyes trace these feeble lines, shall we not be a little less "diligent in business" and more "FERVENT IN SPIRIT," now and especially at the sitting of the Annual Council on the 10th of June. If those who attend the council can lay aside their "business" for the time being, shall not we who remain at home be there too in spirit?—in the fervency of the Spirit? If thousands congregate at North Manchester on that day and a few following days, I trust most sincerely that tens of thousands will go up there in spirit and blend their deepest solicitude with all the faithful who stand up and labor in the defense of the church and the God-given, time-tried doctrines. Many silent, secret workers at home will make it a day of fasting and of prayer. Such workers the Master wants. If we love the church, we may well tremble for her welfare and retire to a place where none hears but God, and pour into His ever-hearing ear our lamentations. If we would speak a good word for the Virgin of Christ let us speak it in the manner we ought to utter it to our Father in heaven. If our mouths would sing praise, let a part be all of the 253rd hymn. Yours in faith, hope and love.

DRAWING TO A CLOSE.

W. J. B. BAUMAN.

EVERYTHING but that which is eternal is drawing to a close. Our existence in this world is drawing to a close.

Soon, borne on time's must rapid wing,
Will death command us to the grave.

Yes soon the sublimity cares of this life will be at an end as far as we are concerned. "For man that is born of a woman is of few days" (Job. 14). Not only our present existence; but our troubles are drawing to a close. Cheering thought; as this life is not only short, but full of trouble. Troubles in this life are continually annoying our souls; but when we enter the promised land on the other shore, the wicked (and our own wickedness) will cease from troubling, and the weary will be at rest. Were it not for the fact that the trials and troubles of this life, soon will end, there would be but little inducement in living at all, as many are beset with trials worse than death itself. Their hopes of earthly comfort wrecked, surrounded by enemies thirsting for their destruction.

But thank God, Jesus lives the same, to save from troubles, from enemies. The object of His mission into the world was to save, (not to destroy) and the deeper we are in sin, the stronger the effort to save us. He has no pleasure in the destruction of any; but wants all to be saved. He is not vindictive, but labors (though we despise and persecute Him) for the good of all.

If the impenitent are destroyed, it will be their own fault; He wants to save them, but they will not be saved. He does all to attract them to good, spurns and abuses none. Thus we repeat, Jesus lives to save, and it won't be long till the ransomed, the saved from the afflictions of this life will make the vault of heaven ring with the shouts of triumph. It will not be long. Joyful thought, that the time is so nigh. Then O ye afflicted, be faithful, persevere a little longer, yes, a little while. The time of your sorrowful sojourn on earth is drawing to a close; soon you will be free; soon you will be at rest; soon you will join the Redeemer on high; soon your now, stammering tongue will be inspired to sing in unison with the heavenly choir, the songs of redeeming love; soon you will stand among the redeemed, clothed in white; soon you will meet loved ones gone before; soon you will enjoy an eternity of inexpressible bliss. Come Lord Jesus, come quickly, Amen.

HOW TO SAVE TIME.

THERE are many ways in which a busy woman can save that which is more valuable to her than any other commodity, viz. her time. One is, by never leaving a room in confusion at night. The family sitting-room presents an appearance of cheerful disorder when the circle breaks up for the evening. Take a few moments then to lay the books straight on the table, set the chairs in their places, gather up shreds and patches from the floor, and put newspapers into the wall-pocket. Every living room should be provided with a waste-basket for odds and ends of paper, a scrap-bag for bits of thread and ravelings, and a wall-pocket, or two of them, for letters and papers. It is much pleasanter in the morning to come down to a neat and tidy room than one which reminds us by its disorder that work is never done.—S. L.

THE LILIES.

BY JAS. Y. HECKLER.

CONSIDER the lilies, that grow in the field,
The beauty and fragrance their blossoms
may yield,
They toil not, they spin not, the warm Summer day,

But grow from the earth in a mystical way.

Yet Solomon, king, in his glory arrayed,
Like one of these lilies no beauty displayed,
Nor was he so harmless, so innocent there,
As the lilies that grow in the valley so fair.

The lilies that grow in the bowers of love,
Are led by the dews from the Eden above,
The beauty excelleth the flowers that bloom
And fade and wither away for the tomb.

The clouds that encompass this earthly domain,
Of laden with storms and with terrible rain
May darken the lilies that grow in the field,
Whose beauty and fragrance the earth has to yield.

But there is a lily the lilies among,
Whose beauty and fragrance the angels have sung
Whose beauty surpasses the lilies that bloom
And wait on the breezes their sweetest perfume.

And now are the lilies of childhood and love,
Transplanted to bloom in the Eden above;
They toil not, they spin not, they fade not away,
But bloom in the regions of infinite day.

SALVATION.—ITS AUTHOR AND CONDITION.

BY J. W. STEIN.

"He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him" (Heb. 5: 9).

ONCE read of an oriental sovereign who made a decree, and affixed as a penalty for its violation, the plucking out of both the eyes of the offender.
It so happened that the first transgressor was the king's own beloved son.
Here was a hard case for an affectionate father and faithful sovereign. He wanted to maintain the integrity of his government, and yet save his son's sight.
Could both be done? Committing the case to the advice of his most judicious counsellors, they concluded that he could not be just in inflicting the penalty upon any other subject of his kingdom, but that inasmuch as he was the king and made the law, that he could save his son's eyes by plucking out his own in their stead, and justice would be maintained. Consequently the king had one of his own eyes plucked out and one of his son's eyes, and thus the integrity of his government was sustained and vindicated, and mercy also exercised toward his son. And do you think any of his subjects would now presume to say,
"Our king is so good and merciful that we can transgress without punishment?"
Would they not rather say, "If he loves justice and truth so much that he will punish his own son and suffer himself, rather than the law shall go unhonored, let us take heed lest he spare not us."

So the very sufferings of the Son of God, as a substitution for human guilt is the strongest and most overwhelming vindication of divine justice the world has had. Here "mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other." It is the madness of men that makes them say, "God is too good and merciful to punish men."
They had better say, "If God so hates sin that he spared not his own Son, though an innocent substitute for guilty man, let us take heed lest he spare not us." Were it not for man's spiritual insanity he could easily discern that "God" out of Christ, "is a consuming fire." We have now called your attention to our position respecting Christ as the author of salvation. Our text says, "eternal salvation," but we deem it unnecessary to dwell upon that thought. This brings us then to our final proposition, viz., the limitation or conditions of salvation. Christ "became the author of eternal salvation to whom? I beg you, beloved, to ponder this question well. To whom does this salvation pertain? To a chosen few, independent of character or conduct? Surely not. To everybody indiscriminately and regardless of faith and practice? By no means. Just here two opposite and very dangerous errors have arisen. Some have concluded that because comparatively few accept the Gospel, that therefore Christ did not die for all.

This is one species of fatalism that contradicts God's Word which teaches us he tasted death "for every man" (Heb. 11:
9). "We have seen and do testify," says John "that the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the world" (1 John 4: 14). "And he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for our sins only, but also for the sins of the whole world" (1 John 2: 2). Others have concluded that since Christ died for all, that therefore all will be saved regardless of life and character, and that there is no punishment for sin beyond the grave. This is another species of fatalism, equally opposed to the Word which affirms the future judgment of the ungodly (Rev.
20: 12-15). The simple fact that Christ died for sin and "became the author of salvation," saves no actual transgressor.
We believe it saves unconscious infants and idiots, and that they are passive subjects of redeeming mercy independent of anything they can do, or cannot do.
God does not ask them to believe the Gospel. They are not able to credit its testimony nor weigh its evidence, neither will he condemn them for unbelief.
"Unbelief is the rejection of testimony sustained by evidence," and they are not guilty. God does not require them to repent. They have nothing to repent of, neither will he condemn them for impenitence. They are not guilty. God does not ask them to obey the Gospel, because they cannot.

Obedience is a voluntary principle and must proceed from the heart. If you make me do what I don't want to do, that is not obedience on my part, but only compulsion on yours. One may thus seem to obey and be only a dis-sembler and a hypocrite. Again God will not condemn them for disobedience, for they are not guilty. Thus it appears that what was lost in Adam independent of our personal responsibility and conduct, has been regained in Christ, but the sufferings, death and resurrection of Christ alone saves no actual sinner. The fact that Christ died for me, don't make my sin a small matter. I am condemned by the law as a transgressor, and if I have not accepted the provisions of salvation through Christ, I am condemned by the Gospel for insulting the overtures of divine goodness and truth, and counting the blood of the covenant an unholy thing. The provisions of the Gospel then must be accepted in order to salvation.

The fountain may be ever so cool and refreshing, and yet if a man will not drink, he may famish. A table may be spread before him with the richest viands, and yet if he will not eat he may starve.
The sun may shine in all its meridian splendor and beauty, and yet if a man will go blindfolded, he may not see. The vicarious sufferings of Christ are but the opening of the fountain, the preparation of the feast, the abiding of the Sun of Righteousness, and it remains for man endowed with intelligent faculties, and made responsible to accept the offers of the Gospel and be saved, or reject them and be lost. Under the typical dispensation, the simple shedding of the blood of animals, atoned typically for no one's sins, and had the ceremony stopped there, the type would have been a failure, but after the blood was shed, the high priest took the blood and entered the holy place once a year where he made atonement for the sins of the people (Ex. 30: 10; Lev. 16: 11-19; Heb. 9: 7, 8). "Without the shedding of blood is no remission" (Heb. 9: 22), but had nothing more been done than the shedding of Christ's blood upon Calvary, the atonement could not have been complete. But Christ, at once our sufficient sacrifice and great, High Priest, with his own blood entered heaven, once for all, when he ratifies the covenant relation between an offended God and offending man (Heb.

9: 12, 24-26). But on what conditions?
I beg you again to ponder the importance of this momentous question. "He became the author of eternal life" to whom? Our text says, "to all them that obey him." Here we learn that salvation is conditioned upon obedience to Christ.
We also learn from the Word that it is conditioned upon faith in Christ.

The apostles Paul and Silas, said to the jailer "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved" (Acts 16: 31).
"To him give all the prophets witness" said Peter, "that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins" (Acts 10: 43). "By him all that believe" said Paul, "are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses" (Acts 13: 39). "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life," (John 3: 36) said Jesus. Here justification and remission of sins are clearly dependent upon faith, but here I call your attention to the fact that none of these testimonies teach us that salvation is by faith only.
While we do believe, and teach that salvation is conditioned upon faith in Christ, we also teach that it is not contingent on faith only, and should we teach that it was, we would most positively contradict James, an apostle of Christ (Matt.
10: 34, "Our Lord's brother," relative Gal. 1: 19; Luc. 10: 1; Eccl. Hist. p. 131) and first bishop of the church at Jerusalem, (Eccl. Hist. pp. 49, 131) who positively teaches that justification is "not by faith only." Referring to Abraham's obedience, which preceded the law, and hence could not be reckoned under the law, which perfected his faith, (James 2: 22) and without which he could have no living faith, he says,
"ye see then how that by works a man is justified and not by faith only" (Jas.
2: 24), and yet is it not an unmistakable fact that almost nine-tenths of the popular preaching of to-day, on this subject, all over the land, declares salvation by faith only, and thus palms upon the credulity of the people, deception and imposition? It is proclaimed from the pulpits; it is published in the journals; it is talked around the social circle; it is whispered, and shouted and sung and almost beat into poor, bewildered souls, who already "believe and tremble," but who like Peter's hearers at Pentecost, want to know what they must do. Yet
"only believe" is the mysterious, uninferrible counsel given on every hand.
They need to "repent and be baptized"
and to put their faith into lively exercise, not simply to believe, but to have a faith which "works by love," "purifies the heart" and "overcometh the world." They need to "walk by faith," a faith, that accepts Christ as a King, as well as a sacrifice, and "counts all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge" of the truth.

If all who only believe "on Christ are saved, then the rulers who were ashamed of him were in a saved condition, for the Word most emphatically declares that "among the chief rulers also many believed on him" (John 12: 42). But were they in a saved state? I appeal to you who say, to the trembling sinner,

"only believe on Jesus and your sins are pardoned?" Were these rulers in a pardoned, justified state? If you insist that faith in Christ alone saves, you must admit that they were. Your theory will allow nothing else for, they "believed on him," but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue; for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God (John 12: 42, 43). Christ says, "whosoever shall be ashamed of me and my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels" (Matt. 8: 38). Surely none are safe of whom Jesus will be ashamed when he comes in his glory. It may seem a small thing for me to be ashamed of him in his humiliation, ashamed of his people, his words and ordinances here, but it will not be a small thing for him to be ashamed of me when he "shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire taking vengeance upon them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ,"

To believe on Christ only will not escape the punishment of a life of continued sin, nor secure his approbation when he shall say to "the faithful," "Well done good and faithful servant." Christ said to those Jews which believed on him, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" (John 8: 31, 32). But they claimed that they were Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage and that God was their Father (John 8: 33-42, but Christ said to them, "ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do" (John 8: 54). They believed him as the devils who "believe and tremble," but his truth and commandments and pacific principles were all hateful to their deceitful and murderous hearts, which, though they may have been depressed or elated under religious influence, had never been transformed
"by the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus." So with thousands and tens of thousands to-day. Though believers on Christ, they are "of the synagogue of Satan," destitute of almost every principle and trait of character which distinguishes the saint from the sinner; observing and preferring the opinions and ways of a rebellious world to those of Christ, of which they are yet ashamed.

REASON AND REVELATION.

BY L. F. MOOMAW.

IN our intercourse with the intelligent world, and in our observation upon the conduct of the children of men generally, the question has often arisen in our mind, why this manifest carelessness and indifference with the masses upon the subject of religion, considering it a truth, that we are in possession of an immortal principle, and that it is desired to live with God in infinite happiness, or to suffer the tortures of the underworld with the lost forever, and especially when the enjoyment of the one, or the endurance of the other is dependent upon our acceptance of, and compliance with the requirements of the Gospel, or our neglect of this great salvation. During the short period of our life, we may from time to time be called upon to witness the scenes of mortality in the person of our ancestors, our friends and our neighbors, until looking around over the community in which we live, and the congregation in the house of God when we meet with His worshipers, and discover that we now stand at the head of the column, that if the visitation of the cold and icy messenger be diverted by seniority or according to age, we would be his next subject, and still we hesitate, still we delay, still we procrastinate. Why is this? Why take this fearful risk?

In contemplating this question my answer is, the want of faith, or preponderance of reason, not willing to accept anything that is supernatural, or that is beyond the reach of our reasoning powers, or that cannot be accounted for by the principles of science, more inclined to listen to the voice of rationalism than the voice of Revelation. This being the case, we can be unconsciously, and imperceptibly drawn into the melstom of rationalism and infidelity; and I very much fear, that many good and virtuous men and women are at this day unconsciously in the fearful condition; not considering that the religion of which God is the author, is a religion of faith, and in many respects beyond the range of science or human reason. We would not be understood to say that religion is not reasonable, for it is altogether reasonable, that God as our Creator, Benefactor, Redeemer, Sanctifier and Savior should give us such a code of laws—make such requirements, enforce such duties, and throw around us such restraints, as He in His wisdom sees proper. But that we should by the exercise of our own faculties, be able to comprehend the nature, essence, motives and designs of the Divinity, together with mysterious workings of His Providence, the immortality of our spirits &c., is not for us in this sphere to comprehend. "Canst thou by searching find out God, canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection" (Job. 11: 7). "Which doeth great things, and unsearchably, marvelous" (Job. 5: 9). He is almighty, invisible and unsearchable. "For after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believed."

If left to follow the light which reason affords, we could not only know but little of the being and attributes of the Trine God, but we could know but little of ourselves; and following the uncertain guide of science, we would unavoidably fall into the idea of materialism, and into the cheerless doctrine of spiritual unconsciousness, and final annihilation. Physiologists admit that this would be the result of their philosophy, and the evidence of consciousness, in my judgment is but very little more satisfactory; for with all that is claimed for this class of testimony apart from Revelation, the idea of immateriality, and immortality of the soul, would never have occurred to the human mind beyond what may have been communicated through the fading light of tradition. So we discover from these premises that all religion of divine origin, is a religion of faith and not of reason, or in any way dependent upon science, and hence the importance of properly understanding this matter, lest we fall into rationalism, and neglect this great salvation.

This was the difficulty with ancient Israel, God's peculiarly favored people, attended with such fearful consequences, not willing to accept Jesus Christ as their Messiah, because they could not in the exercise of their reason comprehend the idea of a Trine God, or harmonize it with the Monotheism of their Jehovah. And so at this day a large proportion of those people having cultivated a determined opposition to Christianity, have organized themselves into a body, and in their organized system of opposition to the miracles of Christ and His apostles; determined not to believe anything that does not come within the range of their rationality, call themselves reformers, or rationalists, and to be consistent with the miracles of Moses in Egypt, at the Red sea; the manna, the water from the rock, and all the miracles of the wilderness, and the Jordan, declaring that these are simply poetical compositions, or legends to delude the credulous; they being supernatural and incomprehensible, and therefore not to be believed.

I opine that this species of philosophy is not confined to Jewish reformers or rationalists, but that it obtains largely in the Christian world, and among professors of the Christian name, not only "to the Jews a stumbling-block," but to professed Christians, foolishness; if not the miracles, the person and doctrine of Christ are rejected, because it does not harmonize with the progressive and liberal idea of the age. The doctrine of the cross and the humble self-denying ordinances as instituted and practiced by Christ and His disciples, seem to be beneath the spirit of the age, and though commanded by Christ, who declared that "all power in heaven and earth was given to Him." Their essentiality is called in question and the observance of them, ridiculed or neglected as being too little to be thought of as requirements of the Omniscient. To illustrate, permit me to refer to an interview between a highly cultivated literary gentleman, a professor of religion. Happening to meet together on a visit to a sick man, we soon became engaged in conversation on questions of theology, as is generally the case when he and I meet together. After discussing other subjects the conversation turned upon the design of baptism, during which, we quoted five testimonies from the Scriptures in support of our position. He replied saying, that "the verbal text would seem to convey the idea that the forgiveness of sins was in some way dependent upon baptism, but looking at the subject from a philosophical standpoint, I cannot believe that my salvation is in any way contingent upon a third person." This I would say is rationalism in the most appropriate sense.

The Scriptures teach the doctrine, but my philosopher, will not allow me to believe it; it is contrary to reason, and doubtless the same spirit would indicate the same with reference to other duties imposed by the Bible. And is not my surmising correct as intimated above, that it is the want of faith in divine Revelation, that is preventing the thousands from accepting Christ on the terms of the Gospel, and thronging the broad road leading to the chambers of everlasting ruin and despair? If all were willing to believe and take the Bible as it is, it being the Word of God, which is the power of God unto salvation, all the difficulties which bar the way that leads to peace, unity and happiness here, and to a glorious immortality in heaven, would soon disappear. But unfortunately as we travel life's journey, the religious world is becoming more and more divided, each having the law of the Lord, so interpreted as to suit their respective vitiated tastes.

This fact is forcibly illustrated by the declaration of the wandering Jew. This wandering Jew he it, understood is a myth, and is introduced to represent the Jewish family, in their wandering among the nations of the earth, which being preserved alive, so to speak, by the providence of God, is a living miracle to-day, as are beyond the reach of human understanding, as any other miracle, and an infallible testimony of God's providence and the truth of Revelation, as any other miracle, and defies the power of human volition to deny, or human reason to comprehend.

This wandering Jew there contrasts the purer ages with the present progressive state. He says, "I am very much troubled about the present method of using the Bible. The Bible is now taken quite differently from what it used to be. They used to take it as it is. Now the world is advanced; they have meat extract, and milk extract. That Bible extract is a very salable article; our people all buy it. There is a man who is a spiritual chemist. By chemistry he can make almost every spiritual thing, and he sells it for genuine. He recommends the extract of Bible highly, and says it agrees with science, and the people buy it liberally, and when asked why they do not buy the Bible as it is, they say, the Bible is out of fashion, we want to be fashionable according to the times. But the manufacturers of this Bible extract have their troubles. If he has a number of customers, every one wants an article to his taste, and when he has it, is scarcely ever satisfied. You have no idea what the poor extract dealer suffers from his customers; if he is not pliable, but sticks to a principle, then he loses his patronage, they do not care for an honest man, but he must please them; the dealer in turn hates his customers, but suffers everything as long as they pay."

The wandering Jew after saying many things—excellent things, thus sums up his discourse. "Look at the Bible; I testify to its genuineness and my troubles, and the most wonderful preservation of my life, and the unanswerable evidence. Science has nothing to do with supernatural things. I, the supernatural man, have received the Bible direct from the King, and the world got it through my hands. I was the sole agent for that article, use it and think of me and the great King."

"That living miracle, wandering Jew went his way. I noticed that his road is different from other men's roads. He seems to be led by something invisible, for such roads nobody but he can pass. He even overcomes all obstacles, and leaps over precipices, swims through rivers of blood, and crosses lakes and oceans. He is a marvelous man; who can reject the Bible after looking at the wandering Jew. And everybody sees the wonderful man, every one knows him, his way is marked in the annals of history, ever since history began its record." The Bible should be our motto,—the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible.

THE TWO KINGDOMS.

BY C. R. JOHNS.

WE are informed in the Scriptures, that Satan took Jesus upon an exceeding high mountain and showed Him all the kingdoms of this world and the glories of them, and said unto Him,

"All these will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me" (Matt. 4: 8, 9). Jesus did not rebuke him by saying, these kingdoms and the glories of them, are not thine to give unto me, but rebuked him by saying, "It is written thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve." We read also that, when Christ was brought before Pilate, He said, "my kingdom is not of this world or else my servants would fight" (John 18: 36). Here it appears plain that Christ denies the kingdoms of this world, while Satan claims the kingdoms of this world with the glories of them, therefore the kingdoms of this world with the glories of them belong to Satan. Jesus said unto His disciples, "Ye are not of this world, even as I am not of this world, therefore the world hateth you; if you were of this world, the world would love its own."

Jesus came to set up His kingdom, not a kingdom of this world, but a kingdom of grace—in a direct opposition to Satan's profane kingdom of this world. After Christ's kingdom of grace was set up, Satan became alarmed, in that he felt that Christ's kingdom of grace was calculated to reduce his power and strip him of his glory. Satan therefore tried to destroy Christ's church, by employing heathens and infidel Jews, as instruments of death and destroyed the citizens of Christ's church by bloodshed. By and by he learned that the blood of the martyrs were the seed of Christ's kingdom of grace, and to destroy that by bloodshed, was impossible. So Satan found it necessary to try some other way, he then succeeded by introducing into the church, by some proud, high-minded members, easier ways, such as sprinkling, infant baptism, do away with Feet-washing, the Lord's Supper &c. And in this way Satan became an angel of light, or as a minister or ministers of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He had learned already, that it was necessary for his instruments to assume a Christian profession, in order to destroy Christ's kingdom of grace; for this reason I believe that Christ said, unto His disciples, "beware of wolves in sheep's clothing."

These wolves are explained by Paul as "grievous wolves, that will enter in among you, not sparing the flock; even of your own selves, shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them" (Act 20: 29, 30). Those dependents of Satan's kingdom, through the skill of their master have proven very successful; for we have reason to believe that they have the world full of popular churches founded on worldly doctrines, and have not even one of Christ's institutions. But Satan with all his boasting instruments of defense, will meet with a horrible overthrow before long, when the Lord Jesus shall descend from heaven with His mighty angels in flaming fire, to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of His power (3 Thess. 1: 7, 9). "But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." "For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark" (Matt. 24: 37, 38).

The happiness of man depends on no creed and no book; it depends on the dominion of truth, which is the Redeemer and Savior, the Messiah and King of glory.

Prisoners should not blame boys so much for doing wrong occasionally, when it is so hard for men to do right. If the men of our land would set a better example, we might look for better boys.

To those who desire the address of brother J. D. Switzer, we will here say, that it is White Rock, Jewell Co., Kansas. In addressing him for information concerning the country, do not forget to enclose stamp.

Those going to A. M. from Freeport, Shannon and Laramie can start any time after May 31st. Round trip from any of these points to Warsaw, Ind., nine dollars. Tickets for sale at the above named offices.

BROTHER Lemuel Hilkey, who had charge of the Central Illinois Mission held the last year, has started on his preaching tour West. He thinks of spending some time in Iowa, and may travel considerably elsewhere. The Lord go with him.

A investigation of the Joliet, Ill., prison affairs disclose some brutal treatment inflicted upon helpless inmates. The whip, sharp gags, partial starvation, and irons have been resorted to with inhuman recklessness. Humanity has some rights at least that ought to be respected, even if in prison.

About three o'clock in the afternoon, on the 11th of May, an unsuccessful attempt was made to assassinate Emperor William of Prussia. He was in company with his daughter, taking his usual ride, when three shots were fired at him, neither of them taking effect. The would-be assassin was immediately arrested.

Brother Eby and wife gave us a call last week, feeling well pleased with their trip to Denmark. Brother Eby speaks well of the mission, and thinks it a success. He has but little hopes of any success in Germany, unless a better opening should present itself. Some good might be done in England, but it would require much labor and many protracted efforts.

The people of Iceland are facing another volcanic eruption, similar to that which devastated the island a few years ago, as the air has become very warm and close, and volcanic eruptions have been heard, accompanied by showers of ash. Before the coming of the great and notable lay of the Lord, "there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places" (Matt. 24: 7).

BROTHER Jas. R. Gish, of Woodford Co., Thos. D. Lyon and John Y. Snavely of Hudson, Ill., spent one day with us last week. Thos. D. Lyon is best known to our young readers as Uncle Thomas. Brother Gish spends most of his time preaching and building up churches. We were pleased with their call, and spent a pleasant season with them. They feel disappointed in their paper, and are working hard to find out the foundation. May we all be of much service in the Master's cause.

We were at first and all along opposed to calling the two sisters with the brethren to Denmark, but now are fully convinced that it was all for the better. Their presence added much to the favorable impression among the Dames. And now since their return they are able to relate many things concerning the mission, and manner of living in Denmark that escaped the notice of the brethren. Their strong sympathies for the welfare of the little church, and the heart-melting circumstances they relate, stir up the fountain of benevolence to its very depth. One of the sisters said, that if she thought it her duty she would freely and willingly endure the hardships of another voyage for the sake of the little church in Denmark.

We are informed that there is a man going through certain parts of this State selling goods, and representing himself as our agent, and has succeeded in collecting names and money, but fails to send either. He says he knows us well, and has procured many subscribers for us. He may know us, and we know him to be an impostor, for we have no such agents. People will do well to keep an open eye on all such. We have an agent in almost every church to whom persons can entrust their subscriptions. In addition to these we have a number of traveling agents, ministers of good standing, who have been endorsed by us as proper persons to sell books and to take subscriptions for the Brethren at Work. Pay no money designed for us to any one you do not know.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

OWING to a law in Denmark prohibiting the transmission of money through the mails unless registered or by draft, under penalty of the confiscation of one-fifth of the money, you are hereby notified not to send money to the Brethren in Denmark except by draft or registered letters. The better way is, to send your contributions to C. P. Rowland, Laramie, Ill., who will see that the money is properly forwarded. Brethren Eby and Fry estimate that the mission will require about $800 the next twelve months, half of which Northern Illinois has agreed to contribute.

FOR HUSBANDS.

Compiled.

Do not think when you have won a wife that you have won also a slave.

Do not think that your wife has less feelings, since marriage, than when she was your sweet-heart. Her nature is not changed, only her relation.

Do not think that you can dispense with all the little acts of kindness towards her just because you are married. She appreciates these things quite as much as other women.

Do not be gruff and rude at home. Had you been that sort of a pet on before marriage it is likely that you would have remained a single man. If you make a great effort to retain your wife's love as you did to gain it, you will find her a better woman. A good wife's worth making some sacrifice for.

Do not make your wife feel that she is a burden to you, and that you must give to her grudgingly. What she needs give cheerfully, as if it were a pleasure to do so. It will make her feel better and you too.

Do not meddle too much with your wife's affairs. She would like things in the house arranged a little her own way, and it is right that she have her taste consulted.

Do not leave your wife at home alone, night after night, while you belt down town for pleasure's sake. You did not do that way before marriage, for you could not spend long evenings with her then.

Do not think that the woman you promised to love, cherish and protect, has become your rival just because you are married. If you are not you are now one flesh.

Do not conclude that board and clothing are a sufficient compensation for what she does for you.

Do not expect your wife to love and honor you as a person a brute, unworthy of her love and affection.

Do not quarrel with your wife in public, and quarrel and growl in private. That is only a poor man's way of keeping your wife from you.

Do not wonder that your wife is so much displeased as she used to be, when she has so much to find fault with, and knows that you do not love her as you once did.

Be as good to your wife as you was to your sweet-heart and you will be happy.

OUR DISTRICT MEETING.

THROUGH the kindness of our heavenly Father were again permitted to meet in our yearly, district council with the church at Shannon, Ill., May 21st. There were delegates present from all the congregations in the district, and the crowd was immense, being the largest collection of members we have seen in this part of the State. Nearly all the elders and ministers in the district were present. We were also favored with the presence and aid of brother Jas. R. Gish, of Woodford Co., and Thomas D. Lyon and John Y. Snavely, of Hudson, Ill. Their presence added to the interest of the meeting.

The business before the meeting was of the most interesting character, especially the missionary department. At eight o'clock in the morning the meeting was opened, the large, commodious building being then pretty well filled. It was concluded to take up the missionary work first.

The Treasurer's report showed, that up to the present time $3325.38 has been contributed to the mission, $1329.00 of which was donated by the Northern District of Ill., and the remainder came from other parts of the brotherhood.

Then brethren Eby and Fry declared what God had done among the people in Denmark, telling the success of the mission, the skillful manner in which it was being conducted, and the great prospects of its future. Their report had an excellent effect upon the audience, and when it was told what hardships brother Hope endures, how extremely economical he is, and how much sacrifice he makes just to lessen his expenses, all felt that they could willingly and freely contribute still more to the support of the mission. But when these brethren told how devoted the Dames were, and how great was their love for the brotherhood in America, it brought tears to hundreds of eyes. We never before saw a better impression regarding missionary work. Brother Fry said it was hard for him to separate from his people in America and go to Denmark, but when there he became so attached to the Dames that it was equally hard to leave them.

The meeting accepted the report with the best of feelings, and pledged itself to continue the good work. It was deemed prudent to raise about $900.00 for the support of the mission during the coming year, and the paying of $137.00 debt, which amount had been advanced by Eby and Fry. Of this $900.00, Northern Plains propose to raise $500.00, hoping that the other $400.00 will be contributed by the general brotherhood. This should be raised and sent in as soon as possible.

In addition to the above the meeting proposed to raise $700.00 for home missionary work. Four committees were set apart to take charge of the Central Illinois Mission held during the present year, and a committee of three deacons was appointed to secure the services of a minister for the Wisconsin mission. The entire day was spent on missionary work, and a good day's work it was.

At last the meeting adjourned long enough to take some refreshments, after which the meeting proceeded to the considerations of the queries in their regular order. There were some twelve queries before the meeting, some of which called out considerable argument, being confined mostly to the Bible view of things. These were all disposed of in the most harmonious manner, and in the language of brother Lyon must say, "that not an unkind word, or peevish relation was thrown out during the meeting." The night session was both interesting and profitable. The meeting closed at one o'clock in the night, all the business having been satisfactorily transacted.

It is refreshing to all who have been interested in the Lord's work in Denmark, to know that who call God's name upon their country to send missionaries to preach to the heathen, to prosper there was a readiness by the necessity of the work, and when those who were chosen to go were made known to the congregation, the sympathy and prayer of the whole body were freely given amidst many tears. And then, when the work was reported, no time to spare in the District Meetings, all seemed to have a desire for its success, giving every evidence of a willingness to do their part. When the time came for brethren Eby and Fry to leave, the sympathies and prayers of the church were again deeply manifested by the tears that filled every eye; and now when they recite the success of the mission, the zeal, devotion and affection of our brethren and sisters in Denmark, we see the same evidence of sympathy all over the congregation. This speaks in no unmeaning terms, and the Lord be praised for all that has been done.

SOME OBSERVATIONS.

IN my former article, I promised to tell you more about those who were first in this country to set up the plea of doing all things whatsoever God demands of His people. They spared neither time nor money in spreading the glorious Gospel, and were soon filled with joy in seeing many turn from error to truth. They were plain and simple in their habits, and not conformed to this world in dress, deception, and carnal display. And though strict in maintaining a distinction between themselves and the world, they were the first people by whom the first printing press was recognized as a power for good. Brother Saur was a printer, and soon after his arrival in this country went to printing Bibles and other good books; and so steadily did he pursue this business, that in about forty years he printed no less than one hundred and twenty-six different kinds of books, some of which were quite large, and about seventy-five smaller works, such as pamphlets, etc. He also printed the first semi-religious paper in this country, a copy of which is in the hands of Bro. Cassel, being perhaps the only one in existence. After learning of the vast labors of Bro. Saur, in book-printing, under the most discouraging circumstances, we of this late day are compelled to wonder at our slowness in this respect, especially when we remember that our facilities are vastly superior to what his were. I might tell you much about those old brethren, but leave that for Bro. A. H. Cassel who has all the reliable data at hand to interest us for some time to come.

Attended council at Indian Creek on the 9th. Here saw the brethren install brother Booz into the second degree of the ministry, and the manner in which it was done impressed me as eminently fitting, and I give it to you for your joy as well as mine.

The counsel of the church was taken in the absence of brother and sister Booz, and then elder Henry Cassel gave them the charge or instructions in a very feeling manner, after which the church received them with the right hand of fellowship and the kiss of charity amidst considerable impressiveness. It seems to be much encouragement to ministers to be thus received into more responsible duties, for at best they get none too much sympathy. Their pathway through life is beset with cares and anxieties, hence to be received by the members of the church in a very lovely manner, is truly encouraging to them. Perhaps more ministers suffer for the want of sympathy and encouragement, than are spoiled through words of love and "good will." Let us not bear up the hands of our faithful ministers. God bless them in their work of love! Pray for and with them. No good can come by making their mistakes, matter for general conversation. Much good might be done by lovingly telling them of any mistake they may make. A bracing-up is productive of good. A pulling down of earnest, faithful labor, tickles the devil and spoils men. O, "to put him, be combons," he says!

QUERIST'S DEPARTMENT.

Who can explain the meaning of Scripture, 12:12, to the glory and practical subjects of religious interest, all sorts of places. The speaker's name must accompany communications. We had better to avoid giving any part of our doctrine and doctrine over innocent out-put.

THE MANNER OF JUDAS' DEATH.

Can you explain the meaning of the 15th verse of the first chapter of Acts, which reads as follows: "So Judas purchased a field with the reward of his iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out." Also the 17th verse of the 7th chapter of Matthew: "And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple and departed, and went and hanged himself." Did he fall down after he hanged himself? We can ask the author of the BretHERN AT WORK, and we were not pleased by the answer. — J. S.

By some it is supposed that the narration given in Matt. and the writer of the Acts do not fully harmonize regarding the manner of Judas' death. We read in the first chapter of Acts, that he fell headlong, burst asunder in the midst and all his bowels gushed out. But on turning to Matt. 17: 5, we are told he went and hanged himself. A clear understanding of these two passages will show that there is a well defined harmony.

Judas, by the reward of his iniquity, which was thirty pieces of silver, purchased a field, afterwards called the field of blood in which strangers were to be buried. He agreed to betray Christ into the hands of the chief priests for the sum of thirty pieces of silver. This we call the reward of iniquity. Judas received his money and Christ was betrayed into the hands of sinners. This took place near midnight on Thursday evening. Early the next morning Judas brought back the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, claiming that he had betrayed innocent blood. The man was weighed down in remorse—he felt the full force of the crime he had done, resting upon him and was therefore unwilling to keep the money. He threw the money down in the temple and departed. This money, the reward of iniquity, was taken by the priests and used in the purchasing of the potter's field, which we call the field of blood in which to bury strangers.

Judas, after he had thrown down the money in the temple, went and hanged himself. This took place sometime Friday morning. It is reasonable to suppose that he went out somewhere to the top of one of the lofty bluffs near the city, and finding an over-hanging tree, placed a cord around his neck and then fastened it to the tree and swung out over the bluff, there hanging two hundred feet or more from the ground, and rocks below. He hung here the remainder of that day, all of Friday night, all day Saturday and the entire Saturday night. We read that, early on Sunday morning there was a great earthquake. Matt. 28: 2. And therefore it is likely that this earthquake was so great that it shook loose large portions of over-hanging rocks along the bluffs, and among them the tree on which Judas had hanged himself. When the rock fell, down went Judas, free and all to the bottom of the bluff below; and the distance which he fell was so great that it caused him to burst asunder in the midst and all his bowels gushed out. In this condition he was found, and it became noised abroad till all the dwellers at Jerusalem heard of it. Hence the field, the very field that the chief priests had purchased with the thirty pieces of silver, the reward of iniquity, is now called the field of blood, Judas being found on it in that condition.

FASTING.

What should we understand by the following Scripture: "Moreover when ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance; for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast; verily I say unto you, they have their reward. But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face." (Matt. 23: 17).

G. M. NOVY.

To fast means, to abstain from food of any kind. And to insure a rich blessing, it would be well to give what is said by fasting to the poor. But the manner of genuine fasting is worthy of notice. "Anoint thine head, and wash thy face." Be clean, and dedicate yourself to God, is the idea. Do not even put on crepe as an evidence that you mourn for sin, but be bright and cheerful. Yonder are the hypocrites, the counterfeits; they make crooked faces, affect a great show. They have a hard look of it. They have no godly sorrow at heart, hence must put on a fasting appearance, must make the outside look gloomy. This is a hypocrite's style of fasting; and the Lord knows how to overturn it. Do not conclude that you can fast by abstaining from fish and sea fish and vegetables. This would only be a clasp of hypocrisy. When ye fast, is left to the discretion of him who fasts. But I am fully persuaded that if there were more fasting previous to church meetings, amounting and praying over the sick, and all other highly important occasions, we would see better results than we do now. Then I have wondered whether some fasting just before a loved one, even to the extent of not eating any other meal in the house of God than the Lord's Supper, would not enrich all of us in thought and deed. But as a nation, we well-nigh cut ourselves to death, and those of us who have been chosen out of the world, bring about all of that habit with us in the church. Be not conformed to this world" ought to be allowed to reform us in this matter as well as all others.

SMYRNA AND LAODICEA.

BY C. H. BALSRAUGH.

To Sister Alma M. Cronse, of Mt. Carroll, Illinois:—

"I KNOW thy poverty, but thou art rich." "Blessed are ye poor." How many can truthfully claim this photograph as their own? Smyrna and Laodicea are twenty billion miles apart. The one has its tent pitched fast by the pearly doors of the gem-walled Pavilion of glory, and the other is situated in the Netherlands of selfishness which bound the metropolis of damnation. "I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing." Thus speak the haughty, self-reliant, money-worshipping, Cross-spurning Laodiceans both of the first and nineteenth centuries. Here comes the thundering, shattering, blasting, God-uttered contradiction: "THOU ART WRETCHED, AND MISERABLE, AND POOR, AND BLIND, AND NAKED." "Buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see; be zealous and repent," or "I will spew thee out of my mouth." What tremendous representations. What far-reaching, soul-withering, hell-picturing words. I would subscribe them all into capitals, but the wrath of God alone can give them the flaming color of their direful import, and Eternity alone is high and deep and long enough to give them scope. In which of these two congregations are we at home? Do we lodge in the world-crowded Inn, or in the God-eroded, angel-crowded Stable? Do we glory in the Cross, or is sacrificed a heavy yoke, a galling burden? Philip. 2: 5-8. As the Corner-stone of redemption, "Made Himself of no reputation?" This is the most wondrous line in the record of inspiration. How dwarfed, and mean, and monstrous, many professors look in the light of such self-abnegation. "In the form of God, equal with God, BUT MADE HIMSELF OF NO REPUTATION." Who can stand before this Divine-Roman Mirror and not blush crimson, and hide his head for very shame? This is not simply something to wonder at, but to imitate. "Let THIS mind be in you, which was ALSO IN CHRIST JESUS." "He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor." "To do good and to communicate, forget not; for with such sacrifices GOD IS WELL PLEASED." Heb. 13: 16. "Let THIS mind be in you, which was ALSO IN CHRIST JESUS." "Who loved me, and gave Himself for me." Gal. 2: 20. "Love one another as I HAVE LOVED YOU." "Early ye have received ABUNDANTLY EVER." Math. 10: 8. The mind of Christ is selfless, and if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His." Rom. 8: 9. Overwhelming thought! "Now of His, and the conditions so stringent, soul-penetrative, fleshes-crucifying.

"Straight is the gate, narrow is the way, and few there be that find it." Few, few, but precious to God, and the salt of the earth, and "the light of the world." They have the mind of Christ. They are lustreous with holiness. The dear Name Emmanuel (I am with you) in Heaven-stored letters on their foreheads. Matt. 5: 14, and 28: 19, and Mark 16: 15, is the bliss and glory of their character and conduct. "God is not mocked." His Christ is "the first-born among many brethren." He sanctified the womb of Divine Generation for all that follow. "He did for all," and His "love constrains" us to carry His blood to the ends of the earth for the cleansing of every sin-polluted soul. All glory is His, all the gold is His, all the silver is His. We and our substance are the instruments of His mighty working to His mighty ends. The two nubs belong to Him as well as the two in them. No investments so profitable as those we intrust to Jesus. With what alacrity we make ourselves under the constraint of Divine love, and the capture of assurance that not a cup of water shall miss the approbation of the loving Saviour—God in the final reckoning. If we would have the benediction of Heaven flowing in upon us in temporal and spiritual treasures, we must not forget the Lord's titles. For many souls it is absolutely necessary for all that they have and distribute to the poor, as the only means of eradicating their idolatry of wealth, and making room for the occupancy of the All-rich, All-poor, and again All-rich. There are thousands in the church to whom no greater blessings could come than poverty to grind them into the very dust of nothingness, emptiness and self-loathing. Covetousness is idolatry, and exalting temporal possessions above the Cross is covetousness. The Lord loveth a Cross-assimilated soul, a "cheerful giver," an ever-open heart and hand for all the claims of the Incarnation. There is perhaps nothing in which "the violent must take the Kingdom of Heaven by greater force," than in giving the Lord His share of their substance. We are impoverished by riches. By cheating Jesus we cheat our own souls, and lock the doors of nature, so that mildew, drought, grasshoppers, bugs and beetles avenge the defrauded All-proprietor. The great Redeemer and Mediator needs a full exchequer for the extension and support of His Kingdom; and of nothing may His people be more confident than that if they faithfully uphold His cause, He will abundantly bless their store, and settle them in the very heart of Goshen. We need another Pentecost to learn the meaning of the wondrous monosyllable—FAITH. "Looking unto JESUS, the AUTHOR and FINISHER of faith." His Cross our cross, His joy our joy, His Heaven our Heaven. "Who for the joy that was set before Him, endured the Cross, despising the shame." To fellowship Jesus at "Cana of Galilee" any sinner can do; but to cling to Him on Golgotha, none but saints. Elect of God, cry day and night unto Him, and He will avenge you speedily, in the overthrow of sin in yourselves, and the triumph of His Kingdom in the world.

Quite a number of brethren and sisters left Lamark, Mt. Carroll and Hickory Grove last Saturday morning to attend the Love-feast and District meeting at Lost Nation, Iowa.

The Penitential Christian is mistaken about brother Hansen and wife being in Lamark. It was brother Christensen and wife that we said were here, and not brother Hansen.

UNANSWERED QUESTIONS.

Having on hand a number of queries which we have not time to answer, we give some of them below, hoping our correspondents will act in this department. Let your answers be short and to the point.

Please answer the following questions; Matthew 24: 34, "Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." Now what generation did Christ mean was not to pass? MICHAEL FUNK.

I want an explanation on the 17th verse of the 20th chapter of John: "Jesus saith unto her, touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father, but go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God." Please answer this question through your paper. I MYERS.

Will some one please comment on the following verse found in the New Testament: 1st Cor. 15th chapter 23rd verse, "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all, why are they then baptized for the dead?" Let us hear on the subject through your interesting journal. SEYMOUR PETRE.

Will some brother give an explanation on the following Scripture: 1st Cor. 7: 14. "Else were your children unclean; but now are they holy." Do we not think children of unbelievers are saved as well as believers. KATE McNAMARA.

I wish you would give an explanation on the 2nd chapter of Acts, in regard to speaking "with other tongues," i. e., whether the apostles spoke in their own tongues, and it was miraculously translated into these other 17 tongues in passing from the speaker to the hearers. Answer through the BretHERN AT WORK. J. L. BRYANT.

Please give us the meaning of 1st Cor. 11: 15. The hair of the woman is given to her for a covering. Why do they wear a cap? Also verses 21, 22 of the same chapter of the above. H. L. HUBNER.

READ AND OBEY.

"Husbands, love your wives,"

"Wives, obey your husbands."

"Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath."

"Children, obey your parents in all things."

—We should always love each other.

—Believe not every spirit, but try them with the Word of God.

—The faint heart would like to take up the cross, but fears reproach from evil persons.

—The good heart desires ever to do good. It wishes all persons well, and does all in its power to make others happy.

—The tender heart is full of mercy and kindness. It is free of envy, and seeks only to do good. O, that we may all seek to have a tender heart, full of love and pity!

—Children, you are now happy. The birds have come again and sing so sweetly. The leaves have come out, the flowers are full of beauty and all things look lovely. God gives them all to us. Think of God, and let your youthful hearts be turned to Him. His works are lovely, but He is still more lovely.

—Sister Ella M. Bock says, that there was a mistake in her query in No. 13. The question is not, which chapter in the Bible contains all the letters of the alphabet except one, but which verse. Now who among the little folks will answer this query?

SUNDAY MORNING.

Reading Men.

YOU may think this a strange idea. Not strange at all; for it is possible to read men as well as to read books. But chiefly should one read himself. When you read books you gather ideas,—thoughts rush from your mind in quick succession, and you are almost as quick in your conclusions. So when you read men, you note their words and deeds and draw your conclusions. If the words are good, your conclusions are good; if the words are bad your conclusions are that the man is bad. So with a man's deeds. Good deeds impress your mind as coming from a good man, evil deeds as coming from an evil man.

But then you cannot read a book when closed. To read it you must open it and look into it carefully. Nor can you read the book by standing a long distance from it. If you try to read it afar off, you will not read it correctly, and if you do not read it correctly, you are not qualified to tell anything about it. Precisely so in reading men. If the man keeps himself shut up from other men, you cannot read him; and if you attempt to read him at a distance you are quite certain to read him incorrectly. Then if you would be read correctly, spread each page of your life out so that your actual condition may be read. If you are incorrectly read, remember that perhaps the fault is your own. Did you take care that your words, your actions and dealings were such as to enable you to let them go before men so that no shame might come upon you? Then you who read, be sure that you are near enough to read well. Do not stand off at a great distance and read a man, but go up to him, associate with him, deal with him, and if there are any black lines you can then see them. Then if you see any, do all you can to help him to wash them out. It is a good thing to read men when you do so with the intention of making them and yourself better. Never read a man to make him worse, and yourself better. Such reading has in it not the Spirit of Christ. Read men for good, not for evil. And if you would do this, always take Jesus with you. It is good to go to your neighbor occasionally to read him. But unless you go to make both of you better, then stay at home. O, that men would learn the power and the beauty of kindly telling each other of their faults, and allowing themselves to be read for the better! Only those who are willing to throw aside every fault, and get better, know the value of being read correctly. And when you read a man, do not turn the letters wrong side up, simply to destroy him. If he himself has made crooked lines, it is his fault, but it is your privilege and duty to help him to re-adjust them. And above all, do all you can to read yourself. Do not read too fast, but be sure to read carefully and prayerfully. Read with the mind of Jesus. Read so as not to spare sin; but read that in all things you may become more like the great Teacher.—M. M. ESHELMAN.

LOOKING OFF UNTO JESUS.

O eyes that are weary, and hearts that are sore,
Looking off unto Jesus, I sorrow no more;
The light of His countenance shineth so bright
That on earth, as in heaven, there need be no night.

Looking off unto Jesus, my eyes cannot see
The trouble and danger that throng around me;
They cannot be blinded with sorrowful tears,
They cannot be shadowed with unbelief fear.

Looking off unto Jesus, my spirit is blest,
In the world I have turmoil, in Him I have rest,
The sea of my life all about me may roar,
When I look unto Jesus, I hear it no more.

Looking off unto Jesus, I go not astray,
My eyes are on Him and He shows me the way;
The path may seem dark as He leads me along,
But following Jesus I cannot go wrong.

Looking off unto Jesus, my heart cannot fear,
Its trembling is still when I see Jesus near;
I know that His power my safeguard will be,
For why are ye troubled, He saith unto me.

Looking off unto Jesus, oh may I be found
When the waters of Jordan encompass me round
Let them bear me away in His presence, to me
'Tis but seeing Him nearer, whom always I see.

Then, then I shall know the full beauty and grace
Of Jesus, my Lord; when I stand face to face,
I shall know how His love went before me each day,
And wondering that ever my eyes turned away.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

Dear Children.—

I WANT you to get your Testaments and turn to the sixth chapter of Ephesians, and read the first, second and third verses; also read the twentieth verse of the third chapter of Colossians. Be sure and read, for you will find something good in these verses; something about yourselves; something I hope you all obey; but to decide for yourselves I want you to ask yourselves, individually, this question: Do I obey this Scripture? Do I do as it teaches me? If I do not, am I not doing wrong?

I want you to think well and be sure and notice particularly the words "all things" found in the last verse you have read.

UNCLE JOHN.

Lincolnton, Ind.

TRAINING CHILDREN.

IT must be evident to every observing mind, that in the training of children there is a sad failure. Think of the confusion in school, society and church. Even when Christians are engaged in the solemn worship of God, reckless boys and girls disturb the harmony of the services by talking and laughing. Think of the ruinous life so many men and women are living—drunken, ignorant, profligate, obscene, adulterous and lecherous, glorying in crimson sin. Oh, look upon the thousands of degenerated homes, the penniless and distressed widows and orphans! Hang the line of imagination upon the glittering star of God's universal empire, and between each supporting star suspend the crimes committed and lo! there is not room for all! Oh that we might awake to the importance of our subject!

"Train up a child in the way he should go." "Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." How plain, how pointed the language! Who obeys? When, how often and where is it done? Train—cultivate, discipline, educate, refine, teach, exercise the child. Do! It takes pains, patience, intelligence, perseverance, determination and the assistance of the Lord, but with the motto "By the grace of God I will" you are sure of success. Train, act, stir, move, strive, pump and pour—do something! Why be idle? Idleness is the mother of vice. Once more, look at the myriads pressing forward on the way to ruin—everlasting misery and woe, and the few who are striving for the realms of bliss!

But what are children to be trained for? Different courses of training are pursued for different objects. Soldiers are trained to kill; physicians, to heal; lawyers, to argue; teachers, to instruct; mechanics, to construct; Christians to serve God. Of these callings the one, paramount to all others, is the last named—to serve God, and whoever fails in training his children to serve God, commits one of the grossest sins of which I can conceive. What constitutes training for the service of God? It is to train the child to do whatever God commands us to do. Children are to be brought "up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Here is where many of us seem to be strangely inconsistent. We talk of the pride and selfishness of some of our brethren with very little charity. If we understood what their training had been we would very often discover that it is just such as we are giving our children, and what these brethren and sisters are, we may be assured our children will be. Take, for instance, the subject of dress. The church requires its members to conform to the order of the Brethren which is in non-conformity to the world. If it is wrong for us to conform to the world in dress it is also wrong for us to conform our children to the world in dress. Now, how many of us are guiltless? "But," persists one, "is it a fact that what is wrong for you to do, would be wrong for your child to do?" That misrepresents the point at issue. The child does nothing—it merely receives the net, it is the parent who does the harm. The child is to be trained for the service of God, to be a Christian like you, so it is certainly very plain that you would not be training it to non-conformity when you are conforming it. But this is only one of the things which distinguishes the child of God from the son of perdition, and what is true of this one, is true of all. Children should be taught the Scriptures. I presume no one will deny that, but how astonishingly little of it is done.

Parents can train up a child in the way he should go if they will, and "when he is old he will not depart from it," but when, it ever, will it be done. We can all see a

PROPRIETY IN THIS LAW.

The church is composed of men and women who were once children. So the children now will be the church in the near future, and according as the children are trained so will the church be. Elders say a great deal to the present members about preserving the purity and integrity of the church. But all effort will avail nothing so long as it is directed to the mere blessings of the evil, the root lies buried deep down in early home training. If we desire to reform or leave a church where the complete law of God will be obeyed we must train the children right; without this, it will only be continually worse and worse. The

is in the children; for if there were no children there would soon be no church, as those of us now living will soon be dead and gone and none would be here to take our place. Therefore, while we are pondering the questions of church, let us ever remember that its very existence depends upon the children.

I was very seriously impressed not long ago, by a conversation between two men raised in Ohio, knowing each other well when there, but had not seen each other for about twenty-five years. When they discovered, they had once been boys together, they talked over the affairs of their old neighborhood. Among other things was a family of which the parents were quite zealous Christians. But when the parents went to church they

When the parents had gone, the children would plan something to do. Children must be busy. They would hunt and fish, build swings, play-houses, set traps, play ball, chess, cards, run horses and so forth. The end of this family is briefly this:

THE BOYS ALL RAN AWAY FROM HOME.

One worked on a steamboat, and was killed at St. Louis by an explosion of the boiler. Another was captured by the Indians on the plains, and murdered, each one.

MEETING A HORRIBLE DEATH.

And, as would be expected, the parents died of grief.

We now reach the point of the modus to be used in training children. On this duty as well as most others, people are not ignorant of what they ought to do, but to do it. Children are told, in many instances, what they should do, but the parents do not see that the children do it. The father or mother's affection for the darling child is seldom governed by good judgment. The child's highest interests are surrendered by the too indulgent parent in yielding to the little one's childish whims and fancies. S. J. HAMMONS.

If one should give me a dish of sand, and tell me there were particles of iron in it, I might feel for them with the finger in vain. But let me take a magnet and sweep through it, and now would that draw to itself the most invisible particles by the mere power of attraction! The unthankful heart, like my finger in the sand, discovers no mercies. But let the thankful heart sweep through the day, and as the magnet finds the iron, so it will find, in every hour, some heavenly blessings—only the iron of God's sand is gold.—Holmes.

CHILDREN AT WORK.

From Charlie E. Barkdoll.—I am quite young yet, but I like to go to school. We live nine miles from the meeting-house. We have Sunday-school in Summer, but it is so far that we have to start very early in the morning to get there in time. On the first ticket received were these words: "Then spake Jesus unto them, saying, I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."—Turner, III.

From Harriet E. Springer.—I have a good kind father and mother. My brethren live in this part of the country; and last Winter quit a number of ministers came through here and preached Jesus to us. Many turned to serve the Lord, and among them was the writer whom Jesus loves. I hope this will be good news to all the boys and girls. Remember your Creator in the days of your youth.—Cumberland Co., Pa.

From Hannah A. Wampler.—Nearly every evening we all read in the Testament. My father, mother and oldest sister are members of the church. In the 18th of Luke we come unto Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven;" so we see that if we are good children, God will always love us.—La Platte, Ill.

From David D. Beelman.—Father is a member of the church. I like to go to meeting with him. I sometimes go to the Mohler meeting-house to meeting; also to Baker's, to Shepherdstown and to Boiling Springs. I heard S. H. Bashor preach at Boiling Springs last Winter. I like his preaching, and hope it will do us all good.—Dillsburg, Pa.

From Lizzie Holsinger.—I had a notion to tell you that I think very much of this paper. I went to M—— Sunday-school and to their meetings, but I found that all the commands of God were not taught there. God says, "For if any be a hearer of the word and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass."—Carleton, Neb.

From Carrie B. Gibson.—I am so glad you left a little corner for us little folks. I have read Matthew, Mark and part of Luke. I want to belong to the church when I get old enough, so that I can go to heaven as an obedient child of God. I want to meet you all in heaven. O I like to read the "Home Circle!" It makes us very glad every week.

From Laura Kabrich.—I have three sisters and I had a charming little brother, but he is no more here. I also had a kind father, but he is gone too, so my little friends who have fathers, when you read this just think of me for a moment. I once had a father and good little brother, and soon, perhaps, some of your dear friends may go the same way. I pity all who are thus bereft; but I hope to meet those dear ones in heaven, never more to be separated. My mother and two sisters belong to the church, and I intend to, as soon as I am a little older.—Thyngsboro, Ind.

From Sarah J. Harnish.—I was baptized last Fall. I enjoy myself much better than when I was away from God. I try to dress plainly, and obey God in all things. It is good to follow the meek and lowly Savior. I often think of what He has done for all of us. Be was nailed to the cross that we might live. I thank Him that He has kept me thus far; perhaps I may not live to see the end of this year. I am so happy since the Savior called me; and now if I am faithful I can meet Him in the promised land.—Taylorsville, Ill.

From Emma J. Garber.—For two years I have been trying to walk as Jesus teaches, and in that time I have found more real pleasure than I ever did before. I am glad that so many are coming out from the world, for the Bible teaches us, to not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of our minds so that we may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God. My father and mother are very kind to me. All of my sisters are members of the church.—Parsons, Ky.

From Ida C. Berkeley.—This evening finds me blessed of the Lord, for which I feel thankful to God who is the Giver of all good. I wish you editors God's blessings, so that the paper may always contain good and wholesome matter for us all. May the Lord still enable you to send out more and more sound words so that many hearts may be made glad. Though only thirteen, I have come out from the world, and am trying to serve the Lord. I see so many calls for the paper, so I send a note for the poor fund.—Delta, Ohio.

Brotherly Love and Kindness.

OUR blessed Redeemer, before He departed from the world and ascended to mansions on high, gave His followers a new commandment: and it was one that He wished them to remember, from the fact that he called it, "The New Commandment."

Dear brethren and sisters, have you ever considered how much is embodied in these few words, offered by our Lord and Master, possibly with the same tenderness that we would plead with our children to love and be kind to each other? "A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another." And to give it more force, He says, "As I have loved you." Then again, "Greater love has no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."

Here we see the command given and the reward is shown if we obey. The question arises, Are we living in daily obedience to this command? If we are not, of course we are not the friends of Jesus. The dreadful thought that we are not his friends, professing to be His followers, and yet living in open disobedience! Jesus says, "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments, and my Father will love you." Can any person wrap himself up in a cloak of selfishness, professing to love Jesus, and yet show no kindness to their brethren? Absurd inconsistency!

Love is the fulfilling of the law. "He that says, he loves God, and loves not his brother, how dwells the love of God in him?" Brotherly love must exist, or our religion is vain. — One will ask, "In what way must we love our brethren?" The answer is, from the heart, we must sympathize with all in their earthly trials. Their sorrow must be our sorrows. — Mourn with those that mourn, weep with those that weep, rejoice with those that rejoice, and in every way add to their earthly comfort, as well as spiritual welfare. This is the most important part of our earthly pilgrimage; to be constantly engaged in doing good to mankind. The purpose of life, more especially in the last stage of earth. When we consider, how little we really need ourselves in our passage through the lovely vale of tears, could not the weakest and poorest do much for the cause of Christ? If we have nothing else to give, can we not grumble and baring words and thoughts, to the happiness of those by whom we are surrounded, and with whom we remain in daily contact?

One of a true and loving heart, born of Christ, can always prevail, and therefore something to cheer the dependent, reason to those who bear many temptations to sin, a few words of such a one will comfort. He who would be great, elevate and strengthen the poor, has to reckon one beyond the temple's power, and to bear new weapons to fight the good fight. We should have some method of doing so. The Fatherly love of Christ. Never beat on to find a helping hand, to anything that is worthy, and though it may not be appreciated, that should make no difference, for the reward will be so much the greater hereafter. CHARLES T. BONIC.

The Worth of a Paper.

FOR a whole year a man of more than ordinary intelligence and penetration, with the aid of able assistants, devotes his time and strength to the work of gathering together interesting and profitable information. He explores a vast library of many volumes, selected with special reference to his work. He carefully elaborates his own choicest thoughts. He reads thousands and thousands of valuable papers and periodicals, which come to him by baskets from distant cities and countries, marking and cutting out every article and item of interest which meet his eye. He calls to his aid the ablest writers, he can command, and pays them liberally for their best productions. He keeps his eyes open continually for information in whatever source.

Every book that falls beneath his notice is minutely examined, every printed paper is scanned, every leaf is perused, or compared. But he is not content with this. Scores of books are bought, bound or copied. Scores of books are bought, but a single page may be extracted from them. He has a number of "cuttings" selected, and stored away, and tumbled into the waste basket of his life.

stores of material, the very choicest articles, selected, read, re-read, put in type, made up into pages, sometimes illustrated with great labor, care and cost; and then paper is purchased, printing is done, subscription lists are kept, papers are folded and mailed, postage is prepaid, and the result and benefit of all this labor is sent to your door, and laid down bright, fresh and clean upon your table, for a mere trifle, — a dollar or two a year, not the tenth of the cost perhaps of a single article, which can be obtained in no other form, and which in itself is worth more than the whole price of the subscription.

Is not such a paper worth the price? Surely no competent man could devote a year to such researches, without gathering together information and instruction which must be worth its price to any intelligent person.

And yet people begrudge the dollar they pay for a paper. They waste the money on trifles, consume it on appetites, squander it in luxuries, and lose it in speculations, and then starve their minds for lack of the knowledge which is so cheaply brought to their hand. Too busy, or too idle to study themselves, lacking means and opportunities for personal investigations, they are unwilling to pay a few pence that each member of their family may possess themselves of a mass of information nowhere else to be found, and which careful and intelligent students labor continually to prepare and present to their minds. Surely the work of the contributions and diligent editor should be appreciated by every intelligent man, and papers, when carefully and thoroughly edited, should have the widest possible circulation. Luther on Feet-Washing.

[From the Church Advocate.]

HERBERT H. furnish a copy of a comment on Martin Luther's on Feet-washing, that I do not remember to have seen before in print. It is copied from an old German Bible of monstrous age, brought from Germany. The book claims to be 300 years old. It is full of plates of all the scenes in the Bible, among the most one on Feet-washing, where Christ is washing the disciples' feet.

We here with have the precept and example of Christ, that he through his love and humbly high gifts, that we should follow with the highest zeal, not only in word and will, but in deed, and what He hath commanded, so we shall be saved as He hath promised. G. O. GARDNER.

EPARD.—On the 18th of March, 1878, the husband of the above, aged 69 years, 2 months and 21 days.

Samuel Epard was married to Mary Stoup June 11th, 1829. They moved from Clark Co., Ohio to Tipton Co., Ind., some eighteen years ago, when they did not know of any brethren near, and did not get to hear the brethren preach for about fourteen years. For three years the Brethren have been holding meetings occasionally in that neighborhood and have baptized several. We found these old members strong in the faith of the Gospel, and there was a very large concourse of people assembled, when the funeral occasion was improved from Rev. H. F. B. by the undersigned, assisted by Bro. Daniel Beck. H. H. HARTON, P. O. please copy.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Enoch Eby

Dear Brethren:—NOTICE in the P. C. No. 19, that my sentiments in relation to uniting the Church Extension Union and the Danish Mission are to some extent misrepresented, and as I feel confident that it was not done intentionally, but merely the result of a misunderstanding, I therefore feel free to correct it if permitted.

I said I was always in favor of a combined effort in spreading the Gospel, hence made an effort to get the Danish Mission into the hands of the Annual Conference. If the Annual Conference accepts the plan adopted by the Church Extension Union, as it surely will, it is the best method of spreading the Gospel and retaining purity in the church. I have no doubt but what the Church Extension Union and the Danish Mission will be united, and I say Amen.

But to unite the Danish Mission and the Church Extension Union, independent of the Annual Meeting, is and always has been foreign to my sentiments, and even if I were favorable, I cannot see how it could be done; for the district of church in Denmark as legally belongs to the general brotherhood as any legally organized church in America; it wishes and expects to be subject to our Annual Conference, and to be cared for by it, as all other branches of the church. Enoch Eby. Lena, Ill.

Notes From Pennsylvania.

Dear Brethren:—

WE belong to the Snake Spring Valley Church, Bedford Co., though we are separated twenty-five or thirty miles from the main body of the congregation. We hold meetings ourselves as best we can. Get an occasional visit from the Brethren. Some, seemingly are near the kingdom; hope and pray they may be, before long, not only almost, but altogether within the fold.

We are surrounded on all sides by the different popular denominations, and many who make no profession at all; hence we do not want for opportunity to work in the cause of the Master. While we have plenty of work at home, yet we feel to encourage every lawful effort put forth for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom. Brethren, let all our efforts be lawful and made with proper motives. JOHN BENNETT. Ellinville, Pa.

From Plymouth, Indiana.

Dear Brethren:—

AS I could not go to meeting to-day, being about six miles from the place of the meeting, and it being rainy, I thought I would nevertheless improve the time to the best advantage.

In 1860 I am thinking of the many dear members in the United States, and in traveling among them, we find them to be very kind, but if we ask for the Brethren's periodicals which we love to read so well, we find not as many as we would like to see. I do think that every family should take at least one of the papers so as to read a few good sermons at home, if we are deprived of going to meeting.

Some say, "I do not take the periodicals, and if I do not go to meeting, I can read my Bible at home." O, dear members, this we can do and should do, and we hope, all will do, even if we go to meeting every Sabbath, and if it is not right to read a written sermon founded upon the Bible, why go to meeting to hear a brother preach? A written sermon is, if anything, more profitable in a family than one spoken in public, as we can read and peruse it as often as we wish, and dear members, our children can read them. It would also do the neighbors a great deal of good to read our papers, as the doctrine contained therein, is well calculated to enlighten the mind.

A few weeks ago I went with one of my neighbors for my mail, and he got the — and read it. He told me that it was a very good paper, and his wife said, "Yes, I read it, and there are good sermons in it; I wish you would take it." I tried to get him to subscribe for one of our papers, but he thought he could not at that time.

Dear Brethren, if we would take the papers more generally, the price for them could be reduced so much, that even the poorest could afford to take the paper. We could then supply every poor member with the paper, even if they were too poor to pay for it themselves. If we would give to the Lord or for the good of souls only one penny out of one hundred dollars, we would have money enough, to send brethren to preach the Gospel to every nation under heaven, and if we would deny ourselves of all that is injurious to us, such things that we do not actually need, — we could save much more, to give to a better purpose. We would have money enough in our treasuries, to defray the expenses of all our missionary enterprises throughout the brotherhood.

Dear members, I do hope our eyes will soon open to our highest interest, that we may have more concern for souls than for anything on earth. My love to all our dear brethren and sisters in Christ, hoping that we will meet at home, to part no more forever. JOHN KNISLEY.

Our Church Literature.

The following, published in a late number of the Primitive Christian, was written by Bro. Abraham H. Cassel, and contains so much interesting history of our people...

It is a fact, not generally known, that almost as soon as the Brethren had organized, they felt the necessity of a printing press to disseminate their peculiar views of religion...

Among them was Alexander Mack's "Rechte und Ordnungen im Hause Gottes;" "Früher's Gründliche Fragen, Beantwortet von Alexander Mack;" Ernst Christoph Hoekman's "Glaubens Bekentnis;" and others.

But soon after, the persecutions became so fierce that the little flock was scattered; they fled to different places to find an asylum of safety, until they embarked for America, and settled in Germantown, Pa. About 1735, their little printing press was set over too, and came in the custody of Christopher Saur...

Bro. Saur was no printer, but he was a learned man of great natural genius. So, after having the press in his care, he would often try his hand at setting type, and printed a number of small hand bills, hymns and other broadsides...

As there was but little printing done in America up to that time, and none at all with German type, there was such a necessity for printing that it induced him to open a printing office for the public, which he did in the Fall of 1738. Besides other matters he printed several school books and an almanac that year yet...

He at first refused by the plea that the press was procured to promote the honor and glory of God, and he would therefore not profane it by publishing a newspaper, neither would he waste precious time by hunting up lies and falsehoods...

He therefore made a beginning and issued the first number on the 20th of August, 1739, entitled "Der Geschicht-Schreiber, oder Sammlung Wichtigster Nachrichten, aus dem Natur und Kirchen-Rewehe," at three shillings per year...

Next was a great demand for Bibles and Testaments, and as they could hardly be imported from Germany, under the then existing laws, he felt it a duty to attempt the publishing of an edition here...

with an edition of one thousand copies in large 4vo. the last form of which was completed in August, 1743; a second edition of two thousand copies in 1776...

After the successful issue of the Bible, he felt so deeply indebted to the Lord for enabling him to complete this great and much desired undertaking, that he commenced publishing a strictly religious periodical, graciously as a "Thank offering to the Lord," for His many blessings...

From this I will leave you to judge for yourself whether the Herald of Gospel Liberty has a just claim to being the first religious newspaper ever published.

It has several times been asserted that in the year 1849, elder Henry Kurtz first conceived the idea of publishing a monthly paper in the interest of the church of the Brethren, etc. which is an error even so far as brother Kurtz is concerned...

But in 1826 he made a more persevering attempt to publish a twenty-four page, double column monthly, English and German in opposite columns under the title of "Zeugnisse der Wahrheit," or "Testimonies of Truth," of which I have two complete numbers before me...

The reason that he so soon conceived the idea of publishing a periodical may be, because he edited and published a twenty-four page monthly, whilst a Lutheran pastor at Pittsburgh, under the title of "Das Wiedererfundene Paradies," etc. The first number bears date of Sept. 1825...

HOPE.

HOPE is an ever-during star
That shines o'er life's inconstant sea,
When beat by winds, when tossed afar,
It lights our lone adversity.
Hope is an angel's holy smile,
That beckons each enlighten'd race,
Not to the bard's Hesperian isle,
But to the Good Man's dwelling place.

Hope is a song the heart can sing
In every desert camp of rest;
Hope is a limpid, wayside spring,
Above all earthly waters blest;
A fountain, that the heat of noon,
The long, the lingering summer day,
The wild eclipse of sun or moon,
Ne'er stole from human hearts away.

Hope is a manna sweeter far
Than that by wandering Israel known;
Hope is a light, no bolt no bar
Can melt the sinner's heart of stone.
Hope is the staff that Mercy gave
When Adam left his Eden shade;
The staff, sustaining to the grave,
The soul by the Eternal made.

EXPEDIENCE AND TRUTH.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

THE "all things" which were "lawful" for Paul, but "not expedient," were not so latitudinarian as some contend. Paul was no religious fanatic who could hug all factions and the world to boot, restrained only by expediency. He was an out and out radical, but his root was Christ. He saw in the Incarnation and the Cross a comprehensiveness that covered all life in all its phases. His expediency was always waiting at the Orient of Calvary for a ray of light to harmonize it with what is fundamental in religion. This is a lesson we greatly need to learn, lest we make that lawful which is radically antichristian, and relegate to expediency what is cardinal.

With your "Original Ground," and remarks on "A Strange Case," I was pre-eminently pleased. We cannot be too assiduous in guarding the clamps of Divine authority, and of listening our own with caution. Precedents of expediency are so apt to become law, that cases which are disposed of on this ground, should not be regarded as irreversibly settled. Investigation and experience may reveal its connection with the essential idea of the Christian life, so as to assure adjustment on a permanent basis. Holiness is not in forms, but it demands form for its manifestation. These are Divinely established in their symbolical character, and are left to the absolute, unerring consciousness of the indwelling Christ. Beyond this the Church has but small necessity for legislation, and none for penal correction. So far as the Church has a right to institute an order, no Christ-begotten soul will demur.

Ordinances by man must always be kept in the sphere of the uninspired, so that the expedient be neither deified, nor the essential lowered into the plane of the merely human. To quarrel with the order of the Brethren because of the order, is one thing; to question the principle and purpose of the order is something wholly different. Here we have yet much to learn. Holiness necessitates an order of its own, and the less we interfere the better. It needs not the interdiction of what is foppish and world-mimicking. Dandies and saints are never found in the same skin. A mild regulative world-severing regimen in relation to dress is most consonant with the idea of Holiness, while in relation to Holiness itself let the imperative, inflexible characteristics of the Cross speak. A holy Church, burning with the love of Christ, distinguished by a general uniformity, repelled from the spirit and conduct of the world by the inherent force of the Divine life, and drawn to the world by the yearning love that courts death to rescue the hell-doomed—what could we not accomplish for the Kingdom of Grace and the glory of God.

LET US MEASURE UP.

BY E. A. GORE.

AND there was given me a reed like unto a rod; and the angel stood, saying, "Rise and measure the temple of God, and the altar and them that worship therein" (Rev. 11: 1). This subject of measuring to see whether we are in the faith or not, is of great importance in this our day, as there are so many measures used, and not the "reed" that John used, straight like a rod, one that will not bend and twist to suit the fancies of men.

We see men on every hand making sticks (creeds of faith) and measuring the old reed, the Bible, by them instead of measuring by the reed as John did. But all claim to measure by the same reed; and I must say, with due respect for all, that if they do, it is a reed made of gum-lastic, for we have all shapes except perfect squares as Ezekiel saw, when he saw this same building measured (Ezekiel 4th chapter). But what did the angel tell John to measure? He said measure the temple, or church, the altar or worship and the worshippers. Then we have to measure the church, for Paul says the church is the temple (1 Cor. 3: 16, 17; 2 Cor. 6: 16). Yes we must measure the church, the whole family or church of God, must not fill the measure any more than each congregation, however small, and such congregations must fill it as full as the whole church. Ezekiel's temple had numerous rooms or chambers, and yet each room was as large as the whole building. When every congregation is measured by the reed, there will be no different sects as we now have, but all will observe the ordinances of God's house as He has given them to us in this precious old reed, the Bible.

There will be elders or bishops, ministers and deacons, in the church, but no arch bishops, no D. D., no Rev., and Right Rev., nor will there be an arch deacon found in it, for they are not in the reed; they are put in by some of man's sticks, and measure the altar or worship; for Paul used "altar" in the same sense that John does, and evidently meant worship (1 Cor. 10: 18; Heb. 13: 15). He does not mean that they actually build or create the altar, but he uses "altar" for the sacrifice of the altar. He further says, we offer the sacrifice of praise to God, that is the fruit of our life (Heb. 13: 15). Therefore we conclude that John was to measure the worship—yes measure our preaching, measure our singing, and measure our prayers by the faithful old reed, then we will all preach the same things, there will be no conflicting theories of theology advocated, but men will preach the Gospel in simplicity and power. We will all sing, we will sing psalms and spiritual songs with the spirit and with understanding. We will pray by measure, and we will pray for the things God has promised—we will not hear long, boisterous prayers full of unlearned and silly expressions as we now sometimes hear. Is this all that is to be measured? O no, the angel said, measure the worshippers. It is this same old Volume or reed that is to measure every individual of the whole family of God on earth—yes it tells us our duty to God and one another; it tells the duty of one neighbor to another neighbor; it tells us our duties as fathers and mothers, as husbands and wives, and as brothers and sisters, yes servants of the church, it tells us our duty as elders, as ministers and as deacons,—in a word it tells everything that is measuring to fit us for mansions in the sky.

Are we doing all we can as a church, do we worship according to measure, are we as individuals measuring and comparing ourselves with the precious old reed, or are we measuring ourselves by ourselves, and comparing ourselves? If we are not, it is time to be about the work. For heaven's sake let us measure up, that we may all be measured up and found fit material for the Master's use, and that the building of the Lord may go up without a sound of the hammer, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

MY POSITION.

BY H. C. MOORHEAD.

I HAVE had a reply to the afore-mentioned comments ready for publication for several weeks, but, as important proceedings were pending in our district, I deemed it prudent to withhold it till further developments. Since that period our D. M., has met and transacted its affairs and among the results thereof, we are pleased to note a healthful modification of the views of our brethren in the administration of church government. The spirit of proscription that has been so active for some time past relative to matters that have heretofore been considered very properly indifferent and unimportant as they bore on the future welfare of the church, or the personal safety of members concerned, has given place, happily, to a broad and comprehensive policy; such as is taught with so much force by the apostle Paul in the 14th chapter of Romans, and which received its most thorough illustration in his own pure life, and his treatment of his fellow-Christians.

This change of policy has rendered it improper to continue the exposition of the subject of my former article, and we accept it as an omen of happier times for the church, trusting that the same results are realized by other districts that were agitated as ours was.

To those who were familiar with the the secret springs that set to work the machinery of the government of our district, (and none occupied a position more favorable for making correct observations than your humble essayist) my seeming severity in the former article was not wholly unjustifiable, but I cheerfully acknowledge that I gave to a local trouble, a general character, which was positively a grievous fault, and for which I ask the pardon of the dear brethren whose feelings were wounded thereby. It is my purpose and the sole aspiration of my life to assist in the preservation of the purity and peace of the church, but at the same time, I hope to cherish a jealous regard for the principles that were transmitted to us by our honored spiritual progenitors, notably among whom, are the Apostles and primitive Christians; and the faintest intraction of those principles, the text of which is, unity in things essential, that is where there is a "thus saith the Lord," and liberty and liberation in things mutable and indifferent, will secure inflexible and uncompromising opposition. A just balance of power must be preserved, at every hazard, between the various branches of our church. Either opposition by the holy to Gospel authority wisely administered by our rulers, or the concentration of power in the eldership, should meet with the speediest condemnation. Our Lord has delegated His power to the church, and it is a usurpation for any branch thereof, to absorb that power. The effort to do so has been, and is now, the fruitful source of a large share of the trouble that has distressed the church in preceding ages and at the present time.

If our "wise men" would devote a share of their time and talents to the elucidation of the principles which form the basis of church government, they would do the church a great service, and be entitled to the lasting gratitude thereof.

It should hardly be expected that those who are entrusted with the government of our congregations, many of whom are elevated to that sacred office, in painfully too many instances, by the accidents of birth or age, should comprehend the delicate machinery thereof, which can only be comprehended by well-disciplined faculties, formed by nature, and especially adapted thereto.

Arising from such a source, has been the fault of many of our people choosing our immediate fore-fathers for models, without knowing the character of the circumstances that gave tone and form to their actions. Circumstances and times are constantly varying and a wisely-administered government is based on the adaptation of principles to those changes.

The failure to make such an adaptation has given the world the Mennonite folly of fastening their clothes with the hooks and eyes of a hundred years ago, and the orthodox drab to the Quaker costume, with his then's and thou's and and so on to the end of a long and unhandy list.

An apostolic form of government recognizes the necessity of constant modifications. Our ancient brethren illustrated this idea in "following the best light they had at the time." We should never fall into the folly of supposing that we are the exclusive depositories of that infallible knowledge that would render us incapable of making mistakes, or of failing to reach perfection in the comprehension and administration of church government.

Had not our immediate ancestors made modifications, such as were rendered imperative by the changing of circumstances, our houses and farms and wardrobes would be remarkable for their meagreness of appliances which we consider may be essential to a full enjoyment of God's blessings. With the uncarpeted windows, and uncarpeted floors, and unpainted walls, and unpainted and undressed furniture, and clockless shelves, and bootless feet and springless wagons, the eternal minimum, of our ancestors, we would present a sad spectacle of fossilized stupidity.

Such a course as is contemplated in the foregoing remarks does not suffer any indulgence in the fast-demanding frivolities of a crooked and perverse generation. Were such the case I would commit this communication to the flames, and with the ascending smoke I would send a prayer to heaven for power to forbid the faintest variation in costume in our house furnishing, in our farm appliances, in our forms of speech, or in any other particular whatever. On the contrary, changes in unessential details have marked the history of the church from its dawn, down to the present time, and no policy could be more suicidal to the best interests of the church than the "no modification theory." While no deflection would cause me more poignant sorrow than the lapsing of the church into a state undistinguishable from the stench and mire of fashion-loving, time-serving age, I would not consider every variation in our costume a simple concession to the insubstantial leech of the restless soul which constantly cries, "give, give."

I submit the foregoing to the just criticism of the brotherhood as the natural reflection proceeding from the state of affairs which seem to have called for the article entitled "The Original Ground." If my position is anti-Scriptural or anti-apostolic, the brethren will do me the kindness to point it out. I have no interest in advocating error, but I have a vital, thrilling interest in advocating the truth.

THEY DO COMFORT ME.

WHEN earthly friends deceive me,
And with their coldness grieve me,
With broken pledges leave me;

When heavy cares oppress me,
And earthly ills distress me;
Through trials sore harass me;

When sorrow's clouds are bending,
The heart with anguish rending,
And sighs and tears are blending;

And when my heart grows weary
With gloomy thought, and dreary,
I cry, and thou dost hear me,

And when familiar faces,
From out their wonted places,
Slip from my warm embraces;

When fads all earth has bore me,
And shadows dark before me,
From death's dark vale come o'er me,

—Selected.

ye shall all likewise perish" (Luke 13: 3). Again, I cannot offer my obedience to God as the price of my pardon.

"The best obedience of my hands Dare not appear before His throne"

as a meritorious offering or remuneration for pardon. Then I can sing,

"Nothing in my hands I bring,
Simply to his cross I cling."

"I'm a poor sinner and nothing at all,
But Jesus Christ is all in all."

"A wretched, poor and helpless worm,
On His kind arms I fall,
He is my God, my righteousness,
My Savior and my all."

But if Christ is my "all and in all" he is not only the prophet whom I hear, and the priest on whom I rely; but also, the king whom I obey, and if I disregard his authority in neglecting his smallest commandment, it cannot be true that he is my all and in all.

Clement in his letter to the Corinthian brethren says, "If we do the will of Christ, we shall find rest; but nothing shall deliver us from eternal punishment if we disobey his commandments. For even thus saith the Scripture in the prophet Ezekiel (11: 14-20): 'If Noah, Job and Daniel should rise up, they shall not deliver their children in captivity. Wherefore, if such righteous men are not able by their righteousness to deliver their children; how can we hope to enter into the Kingdom of God, except we keep our baptism holy and undefiled. Or who shall be our advocate, unless we shall be found to have done what is holy and just' (Clement's 2. Epistle to the Corinthians 3: 8, 9).

may therefore be applied to the salvation of others."

I do not impugn the motives of Messrs. Cooté and Buck. They were doubtless misinformed, and like many, stated what they did not know, but to take this occasion to say in behalf of the church, that these statements as they stand as well as others connected with them are slanderous imputations upon our faith.

We put obedience, then, along with faith and repentance, all of which are required by God of the sinner, are all of such momentous importance that the rejection or neglect of either, is the rejection or neglect of salvation.

Christ became the author of salvation into all them that obey —not the law, and its "carnal ordinances," not the rites and penances of pagan priestcraft, nor yet the traditions of men, who teach for doctrines their own commands and "make the commandments of God of none effect" by human tradition, but "he became the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him."

He is the end of the law. He holds in his hands the destinies of the nations. He is the sole-disposer of life and death, the judge of the quick and the dead, and he demands obedience of his subjects, whom he has created, preserved and is blessed, making him not only their God, but their King, and our only hope of life and salvation.

firmities," and knows how to forbear and succor; but to despise or neglect his authority, is to die without his covenant mercy.

The necessity of faith and obedience combined, was strikingly illustrated in an incident of which I have heard and very graphically sketched by the author of the "Bible Lookingglass" (Religious Emblems p. 91). Two men were crossing a river in a boat.

See that man who has just fallen over you precipice. He catches to a few shrubs that grow from the crevices of the rocks, and succeeds in planting his feet on a small projection which offers him temporary assistance. But as he looks up at the over-arching precipice, he sees that it is impossible to restore himself.

Father's house intervenes perchance many a weary step "beset with crowds of sinners, legions of devils, and a whole world of temptations." Before we reach the harbor of safety, many a fiery tempest may lash our frail bark and threaten with destruction. We may have to hear "the burden and heat" yet through many a weary hour before we hear the "well done" and on the battle field of truth, many a long and fierce and terrible conflict may await us, with numerous, powerful and malignant foes, clad in formidable armor ere we wear the victor's palm, or march through the triumphal arches of the celestial city. But if we abide faithful in Jesus as the living branch abides in the vine, our final salvation is contingent on nothing less than the vicarious suffering of Christ, his meritorious work, and the sovereign grace of God which brings salvation down.

But some one who has witnessed this man's condition and salvation says, "He was saved by trusting his friends." True, and we are saved by faith. Another says, "He was saved by calling on his friends." So we are saved by calling "on the name of the Lord." Another says, "He was saved by letting loose his former hold." True also, and we are saved by repentance, counting our righteousness as filthy rags." Another says, "He was saved by obeying his friends." That was true, and we are saved by obeying Christ. Another says, "He was saved by a rope." True again, and we are saved by the righteousness of Christ. Another says, "He was saved by the kindness of his friends." That was true, and we are saved by grace—saved by grace as the sonree—saved by the righteousness of Christ as the price, and saved by faith, repentance and obedience including the rest as conditions.

Thus we see how all are true, and neither the source, price, nor conditions of pardon can be dispensed with, without exposure to the penalties of sin. We might dwell here upon the more general outlines of evangelical obedience, but reserve these thoughts for future discourse upon that subject in a more appropriate connection. We trust then beloved, that so far you have understood our position, and we pause to enquire if it is not at least safe ground? The doctrine I had been trained to believe, was that one is saved as soon as he believes, before he goes a step further, but that he cannot be received into church membership and fellowship without baptism, thus making the way into the church more difficult to the sinner than the way into "life and immortality." We maintain that every one who has escaped the condemnation of sin, and been made an heir of life, is an essential element and living constituent of the Lord's ecclesia; the responsible, made so by discharging responsibilities, and the irresponsible, without any conditions whatever. I was taught that obedience was no condition of salvation whatever, but only followed salvation in every case.

Now suppose this position to be true, I ask whether I have lost anything here. If faith alone saves, then of course we are saved, for we earnestly contend for its necessity and believe on Christ with the whole heart. If faith alone saves them, when we believe, we are "new creatures in Christ Jesus," and hence entitled to all the immunities of the church of Christ without proceeding further; and those who teach this to be consistent, are bound to bid me and my brethren God speed, and offer us church fellowship as we are, though differing with them in doctrine, because according to their own confession, we profess all that is required to make Christians. On the other hand, suppose "faith only" won't save? What if practical obedience is a condition of salvation, I ask are they safe who depend on "faith only?" If this is correct, then we are safe, but if our position is correct, they are not safe. Kind reader, how how stands the case with you? Have you believed and obeyed the Gospel?

TO A FRIENDLY BAPTIST IN AMERICA.

BY C. HOPE.

YOU state you are sure of salvation, that faith is enough to assure you of salvation, that baptism is not for the forgiveness of sins, and that Feet-washing, means to polish boots, split wood, or do any other kind deed to your suffering brethren, that shaking hands fulfills the requirements of saluting one another with a body kiss. That any style and fashion can be worn provided it is not the adorning; but the hidden man is present in the secret heart, that warfare is even commanded; but yet if it were not contrary, yet if it were all true, the Brethren claim to be so. Faith alone would save you; for "By faith are you saved, and not by works," and the declaration is, "And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely" (Rev. 22: 17).

If it were not, that I know you are ensnared by the craftiness of others, that you, like the poorly in the spider-web, are entangled and secured to the Baptist body of modern professors, and know not yourself really what you are about, I should not attempt to answer you, yet I have but little hope that I can be of any help to you whatever.

I suppose you have selected no better passage that more fully sets forth the freedom of salvation; and yet you are not aware that you took a sword, sharp and two-edged which cut your theory asunder through and through.

The water of life is free to all, the good and bad, saint and sinner, and it costs no money, nor price. It is as free as the air you breathe and the sunshine you enjoy, free as the rain that falls on the ground, and the great water of the sea; and yet to be had only on conditions, and this condition is not faith alone. The Lord does not say, "And whosoever will, let him believe on the water of life freely;" but he did say, "let him take." Now you know to take is to act, and action is what you dread—want to cut out and and put in the place of it, faith without works. You know the public water pump in your town, is free to all, and the water that climbs up on every shore, in every handy place from the waterworks, on the shore of the great Mississippi, is also free as free can be unto you, and yet it does not force itself upon you, nor in you. So it is with the water of life, it is free, and yet uses no force to come to you; this it cannot do, from the fact that it is free; if it did use force, it is no longer free as you claim it is, and want it to be.

Well, you say, I must believe it is for one, and that is all that is needed. Here is where you bid to the eternal ruin of your poor soul. Is it sufficient to believe the air is free to all? Will that faith, even though it is a true one, keep you alive? Must you not take into your lungs continually, by action all you need? Did ever your faith without works bring water from the town pump, or turn the stopper on the water pipe? If not, faith without works will no more make you partaker of the water of life; and for this very reason the Lord did not say, "let him believe on," but "let him take the water of life freely."

Or you take some day a poor fellow along to your church festival, generally paying his twenty-five cents entitling him to take of your ice cream, pies, cakes or what else can be had in that restaurant, freely without money and without price. Will he need no more than faith alone to be partaker of all there is found there? Will his earnest believing be the same to him as to take it? Surely not. Well my friend, just so absurd and foolish is your idea, to be partaker of the water of life, by even the most true and earnest faith; so long your faith is not united to the Lord's, take it.

On the other hand if you take it, you have it, and it cannot be vice versa. So you see already that faith leaves you empty from the things that are free, even from the water of life; hence it is time for you to take it. I know when you bring this to your preacher, he will make you indifferent by telling you, "When you believe in it, you possess it in your faith, and that is sufficient, that is enough for salvation, for Paul says, 'Not of works, lest any man should boast.' Beware of the snares of Dunk-erism."

It shall be admitted readily, that it is true you possess it in faith, by faith, but unlucky for you, faith is not eternal; and when the day comes that faith can be yours no more, then all that you possessed in faith is gone forever, and you have nothing at all, not even so much as faith alone.

But now how will you get the water of life, or how can you take it without following or complying with the requirements necessary or ordained from the Lord to bring it in your possession? So get water from your town pump, still it is free, you can't get it, but by working the pump, to get it from the waterworks, you must turn the stopper, and even those things that compel you to act to get it, are essential to bring it to you; not even in your socials, can you partake of the joys without means. You never hesitate to drink coffee out of a cup, or eat ice cream off a plate with a spoon. You know faith without works does not amount to anything there. Why then do you reason away those requirements to which the many precious promises are riveted by the Holy Ghost that should make you partake of the divine nature? Surely God did not every time rivet a promise to a command, if it were not so that by obeying Him, we would be possessors of the promise; hence we all see that forgiveness of sins was not secured for the three thousand souls by faith alone. It was ready for them in Christ even before they believed it. By faith they were made conscious of where their soul's desire was embodied; but by obeying Him, or doing the necessary work, they plunged through the water into forgiveness of sins, and then they had it, but not before. And so it is with every promise by obeying the requirements. You open the channel through which the graces flow; so you take it, and it is yours. If you understand this, surely you will cease your man-made dipping and go to the Lord's arrangements; you will cease polishing boots and splitting wood in place of washing the saint's feet, you will sweep out on the dung hill your worldly style and vanity, and adorn yourself in modest apparel; you will sleep no longer in a bed with a revolver under your pillow, but equip yourself with the Lord's armor. Yet you will tell me, "I am sure I will be saved if I die as I am." True immersion will give me no better assurance.

How do you know since you did not try? We are eight souls here in Europe who have said so too, but by complying with the Lord's will, all have found that the testimony received, were far beyond expectation. May be in America you can find many testifying to the same truth; but you may scorn our experimental testimony and rely on your scores of mockers that do not know what they affirm, or ridicule because they never did it, hence can know nothing about it.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS FROM NOW.

BY E. A. ROSS.

WHAT an important subject have we before us for our consideration; it is the one by which we can determine where we will spend eternity. And what interesting interrogative is, One hundred years from to-day where shall we be? God has said, that "the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal."

Now the great question to be decided is, which do we prefer, to spend the everlasting ages of eternity in the soul's pleasures of the God of heaven, surmounting the throne, wearing a crown of righteousness, praising the God of our salvation? Or be with the damned cast out and be forever lost? May God, in His infinite mercy, help us to-day to "choose that good part that shall never be taken away from us."

Who can resolve the doubt,
That tears our anxious breast?
Shall we be with the damned cast out
Or numbered with the blest?
We must from God be driven,
Or with our Savior dwell;
Must come at His command to heaven,
Or else depart to hell.

WHAT IT IS TO BEAR THE CROSS.

LET us have a true understanding of what bearing the cross is. He after whom Simon bare the cross is now far above all we and weariness and pain, and needs no help or comfort of ours. We cannot even follow Him in person, as He called the rich young man to do, it is in heart and spirit, in life and conversion, that we are to bear the cross, not in an outward or bodily way. True, even outwardly the cross is a Christian symbol. But should the cross be made an ornament of the person? Should the symbol of redemption, the likeness of the cross of Calvary on which the Lord of glory died for our souls, be put on just as a brooch or bracelet is put on, and dangle from the neck amid song and dance and light-hearted mirth? Is this soundly right? Is it not rather a painful parody on the bearing of the cross? Is not the cross too often thus borne when the mind of the bearer is still vain and frivolous, and there is no bearing of the cross in the heart or life? The true bearing of the cross after Jesus is to follow Him, in faith and love, through all that His service leads us to; to give up all that He requires to be given up; to undertake cheerfully whatever He calls us to; to be willing for Him to suffer shame and loss, to be mocked, despised, disliked, persecuted; to submit cheerfully to all His dealings; to surrender our will to His will. An outward and formal bearing of the cross is easy indeed; such a bearing of it as this is not easy; nay, not possible for us, unhelped. Yet this is what our Lord calls us to, and He Himself will give us help and strength. His grace is sufficient for us.—Sel.

MOORE & ESHELMAN, Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill.

LANARK, ILL., June 6, 1876.

AN exchange says, "Parents should exercise caution, and select good, entertaining reading for their children. If parents do not make the selection the devil will cheerfully do it for them."

The price of the Brethren at Work from the Annual Meeting to the end of the present year, will be 75 cents. We mention this that those who wish to send in six months' subscribers may know what to do.

BROTHER Geo. W. Thomas, of Peabody, Kan., says: "God bless you in your labor. Your paper is doing a noble work on these Western prairies. Two more precious souls united with us yesterday, by baptism, and two more copies of the Brethren at Work wanted on the 100 cent solicitation."

The publisher of a weekly newspaper in Illinois, prints in each number a chapter of the Bible, and, upon being rebuked for it by his contemporaries, remarks editorially: "We publish nothing but what is news to our readers."

We are glad to learn that a number of District churches are taking their missionary work into their own hands, appoint their own evangelists, and apply the money raised directly to the work.

Those who attended the meeting of the Middle District of Iowa last week, speak well of the meeting. The meeting was held with the Lost Nation congregation, just after their feast, and was attended by some thirty or forty brethren and sisters from this part of the country.

On another page will be found a companion communication from Bro. D. C. Moonaw, in which he manifests a conciliatory feeling. He in a private communication, thanks some of us, with a hope to receive that may have been, as we are in the habit of handling things without gloves.

CHILDREN AT WORK.

FOR some time we have felt that there is a demand for a juvenile paper among us, adapted to the wants of the children and young people of the brotherhood, and after mature deliberation, and much consultation with others, in various parts of the country, we have concluded to issue a semi-monthly sheet to be called the CHILDREN AT WORK.

Brother Eshelman will take charge of the paper, giving it his attention and talent, and will do all in his power to make it both interesting and instructive to the young. Since opening the Home Circle and children's department in the Brethren at Work, we have learned how anxious children are for a paper adapted to their wants, and how eagerly they grasp every opportunity for reading such matter.

It is believed that a failure upon the part of many parents to supply their children with suitable reading matter, has been the cause of some growing up and embracing the faith and practice of other orders, and also the cause of much novel reading. About the only way to keep children from reading trashy literature is to put good reading matter before them instead, and thus train them to love and relish strictly moral reading.

Our little folks have become so interested with their department in the Brethren at Work that we found the space thus allotted, too inadequate for anything like meeting their wants, hence this little sheet. We send it forth upon its mission of usefulness, hoping that it may attain to an extensive circulation, and thus accomplish a vast amount of good.

In your neighborhood there may be some poor boys and girls whose surroundings at home are not very favorable to religion. They are liable to be led still farther astray and perhaps die a disgraceful death. Now do you not think that it would be a noble idea if you would place a good, little paper in their hands to read? It might be the means of rescuing them from eternal ruin.

The Children at Work is a good thing, and we want to see it in every household. It will not only be a blessing to the children, but it will be a blessing to the parents, and to the church. We want to see it in every household.

among us to be trained up in the doctrine and practice of the Brethren church. That in fact is the primary object of this little paper—get the children to "fear God and keep his commandments." It is needful that the lambs be fed, for they are what most one day make the sheep. Just so with your children—they must one day take your place, and into their hands must fall the government of the church, and how important it is that they be well prepared for it.

As before remarked, brother Eshelman will take charge of the children's paper, and we want everybody to assist him in making it interesting and giving it a wide circulation. I shall take charge of the Brethren at Work and do my utmost to make it still more attractive and useful. By the help of the Lord we hope to make the paper still better and keep its columns free from objectional matter.

ALMOST PERSUADED.

You Loved One on The Pacific Coast Who Knows that Jesus also Died for Him, yet is not Altogether Persuaded to Put Him On—

THE man of God says: "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men" (2 Cor. 5: 11). The "therefore" refers to Paul's argument and declaration previous to the foregoing expression. In the "therefore" is wrapped up the fact, "For we must all appear before the Judgment-seat of Christ."

To you it must be evident, that to believe all the facts of the Gospel, to obey all the commandments and hope for all the promises, is to possess room in us highest sense. Whatever God has decreed, is good. To believe this, is to believe good. Whatever God has commanded, is good. Then to obey all His commandments, is good. All that God has promised is good. Therefore to hope for or enjoy them, is also good.

To get into Christ's church, the divinely appointed way is not enough. To remain in Him, and walk as He walked, is no less imperative. The "therefore" refers to Paul's argument and declaration previous to the foregoing expression. In the "therefore" is wrapped up the fact, "For we must all appear before the Judgment-seat of Christ."

But you are not altogether persuaded concerning the manner of our dress. First: We regard our mode of dress as being plain. This the Holy Ghost by the Word requires. Second: We regard our mode of dress as being non-conformed to the world. This the Lord also requires. "Who is to give the pattern?" queries one. Let me explain: You know that the Lord says of the cup of the communion of His blood, "Take this and divide it among yourselves" (Luke 22: 17). Does He say how, in what manner we shall divide it? Does He say each person shall have a little wine in a cup or that there shall be one cup for all? Not at all! He says nothing about it. Then who shall say in what manner the cup shall be divided? Evidently the church, for every one in the church is concerned—"divide it among yourselves." To this, I think you will agree, as do all who believe in the sacred emblems of Christ's sufferings and death.

Now if this be evident to all, should it not be equally evident that the church can safely give the manner of our dress, since we are commanded to be non-conformed to this world—to be a separate and peculiar people? If we admit the privilege—the right of the church to lay down the manner of doing one thing commanded by God, then we must admit the right in another, where God is equally silent concerning the manner of doing it. God tells us in every instance what to do, but in a number of cases does not tell how to perform it. I presume He ordained that in some things the church should exercise judgment, hence so arranged the plan of salvation.

To accept the church's method in one thing in the absence of a plain, positive "thus saith the Lord," pre-supposes her right to adopt that method and continue it until, in harmony and brotherly kindness, it can be supplanted with something better. On the doctrine of non-conformity, I trust we are generally agreed, but as to the best manner of observing it, a difference of opinion exists. These differences of opinion may, in general council, be compared and passed upon in the spirit of love and forbearance; and when this is done, no one will likely lose an iota of holiness by complying with the conclusion. But the root of the matter is holiness of heart, and here the submission must find lodgment or the doctrine of non-conformity will be such only in name.

"Well," says one, "I am glad that it does not say, You must be non-conformed." Hold! do not be too fast. It does virtually say, You must be non-conformed. Turn to Rom. 12: 1, 2 and learn what the Holy Ghost by the mouth of Paul, says: "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Here the Lord tells by what you shall be non-conformed—"by the renewing of the mind." There, now, the Lord has said "by your mind," and if you "be non-conformed to this world" "by your mind" there will be abundant visible evidence. There will then be no need of sending a detective, or special agent, to learn whether you are non-conformed to this world, or not. But this evidence of a non-conformed mind, being a good thing, of course must have its counterfeit and abuse. Wolves run miles to get the mantle in order to devour the sheep. Some prominent branches near the top of the tree, with the non-conformed garment on, have taken themselves with us, broken off and fallen to the ground, scratching the bark as they in the descent, yet the tree goes on bearing its fruit as before. These abuses and fallings carry no argument against the mode adopted by the church for appomelling its members.

"But I can live a Christian out of the Church." Not precisely. Why then did the Lord establish a church? Why speak of "the church," one body, one faith, if you can live without the one body? Suppose all would adopt your plan, where would the ordinances be? The Lord ordained the church. The Bible teaches the necessity of the church, being of one mind—of one faith. Where would the one faith be if no one body could be? You, or your members, would be on a log raft. A stone lying on the log raft, much of a stone is the one in the world, but what good is it doing if it is all alone, being knocked from one side of the log raft to the other by every old cart that comes along, and a stumblingblock to others? But if it is taken up and put into a building with other stones it is valuable. To wash the stone and lay it down in the street again, can answer no purpose; but let it be prepared and put into the house and then it is a part of the building. I beg of you to come to Jesus. Accept Him; let Him dress and polish you. May the Lord help you to be not only almost, but altogether persuaded and be a lively stone in the Master's house.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN HEAVEN.

It is not uncommon in Masonic literature to read of the "Grand Lodge above." We wonder if these people believe there is a secret society in heaven, and that they have regular organized lodges in the paradise of God? If not, why talk of the "Grand Lodge above?"

One would infer from their writings that there will be many secret lodges in heaven, for one party talks of the "Grand Lodge above," and another of the "Great Grange in heaven." To come right down to the candid truth; do they actually believe there will be a Grange in heaven? Do they believe there will be a Masonic Lodge among the saints in heaven? A Lodge presupposes the existence of secrets, passwords and signs. What do they want with secrets, pass-words and signs in heaven? and it is evident that there can be no "Grand Lodge" without them.

It is worse than nonsense to talk of the "Grand Lodge above" or the "Great Grange in heaven." Who supposes there will be a "Grange" in heaven? What in the name of reason do they want with a secret organization against monopoly, railroads and middle-men in heaven? Will heaven be so corrupt that it will be necessary to organize secret societies to oppose monopolies there?

Men who are supposed to understand the object of secret societies say, they are benevolent institutions, and intended to render assistance to the poor and needy, and then talk about the "Grand Lodge above" just as though they needed a charitable institution where there is no lack of anything. What would you think of politicians who would talk about their brother going to the Grand Republican party above, or the Grand Democratic party in heaven? and yet it would be no more absurd and ridiculous than talking of the "Grand Lodge above" or the "Great Grange in heaven." The idea that there are secret societies in heaven is too ridiculous to reason about. They even go so far as to say that men will take their last degree in heaven. If it costs as much to take a degree there, as it does here, there will be but few degrees taken. But is this not talking nonsense, when intimation is made of taking Masonic degrees in heaven? Surely everybody knows that there can be no secret degrees in the land of the blessed.

Were this true, it would divide the inhabitants of heaven at once, for all would not join the secret society, and if they did, then it would cease to be a secret order.

When our Masonic people talk of the "Grand Lodge above" do they, for a moment, suppose that there will be a great Masonic Hall in heaven, where they, with barred doors and covered windows, can teach and practice their secret? Or do they think that heaven itself will be the great secret hall? If the latter, then what do they want with secret? Then, how about the "Great Grange in heaven?" Must they have a separate room to themselves, where they can teach their secret workings against monopoly and railroads? Can those who talk about the "Grand Lodge above" and the "Great Grange in heaven" tell us how these things are to be developed?

We think that in order to do it just a little too strict, the supporters of secret orders should be warning such unimposing phrases for wisdom. There is not one of them, who, after due reflection, will say, there are secret societies in heaven, and yet we find intimations of it in their writings. There can be no lodge without an organization, and that organization is the "Grand Lodge above." To admit the existence of an organized secret society in heaven is to admit the existence of a secret society on earth.

Why one should teach that a secret society is a essential feature of life in the other life, we very could have no reason to object, on the ground that the secret societies of the earth are a part of the property of such societies, which is a right which is established by law. It is no doubt that all may be true.

Perhaps there may be those who can throw a light on this subject. If there is a "Grand Lodge above" it is true we were all knowing it, but it would induce thousands to enter the Lodge here below, that they might have the pleasure of taking still higher degrees in the world to come. If there is a Lodge above, then it must be beyond the real heaven, perhaps the uppermost seats, hence thousands of devoted Christians must remain in the ordinary heaven, while the Masonic people pass on up to the "Grand Lodge above." This is the inevitable conclusion drawn from some absurd expressions found in their literature. Its fallacy is so easily detected that further comment is unnecessary. J. H. M.

THE PREPOSITION WITH.

"I indeed baptize you with (en) water unto repentance; but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear, he shall baptize you with (en) the Holy Ghost, and with (not in the Greek) fire."—Matt. 3: 1.

THE Greek preposition en, which is rendered with in the verse given, is found not less than 290 times in the book of Matthew. And out of these 290 times it is rendered in 215 times in King James' translation. Twelve times it is rendered among; three times, within; once, for; twice, under; once, through; once, at; once, into; once, upon; twice, because; seven times, of; four times, by miscellaneous terms; twenty-six times, by; and is rendered with, but eleven times, showing that our authority for saying that, John baptized with water, is without foundation. It should be rendered, "I indeed baptize you in water." "He shall baptize you in the Holy Ghost, and (in) fire."

For the benefit of those who are not favored with the facilities for referring to the Greek, we give below a few instances where the preposition en is found in the original:

- Matt. 3: 6. Baptized of him in (en) Jordan.
" 4: 21. In (en) a ship with Zebedee.
" 4: 23. Teaching in (en) their synagogues.
" 5: 12. Your reward in (en) heaven.
" 5: 15. All that are in (en) the house.
" 6: 9. Our Father which art in (en) heaven.
" 9: 10. Sat at meat in (en) the house.

A number of other examples might be given, but these will suffice for the present. It is as logical to talk of Christ baptizing in the Holy Ghost as to say John baptized in Jordan, as the same Greek preposition is used in both instances. We greatly prefer the rendering of en by our English preposition in, as it makes much better sense, and then it is the exact meaning of the original. J. H. M.

I HAVE been so crowded with work that I am compelled to defer the remainder of my articles on "Original Ground" till after the Annual Meeting. We keep an clerk in this office, but attend to all the business personally, each one taking a certain portion, hence having more work to do than is generally allotted to editors. This we do in order to give our readers a good, cheap paper, and are glad to know that our efforts are being appreciated by thousands of readers. We would like to have completed the series of articles before the A. M., but now find that it cannot be done, especially so since we want to make preparations for attending the meeting. J. B. M.

Regarding our next issue, the Lord willing, we expect to be with the Brethren at the coming Annual Meeting. There may be some uncertainty about both of us being there, yet we will come if it is possible to leave home. Brother Echebman will be there at any rate, prepared to attend to whatever business may belong to the office. It is pleasant to thus meet and mingle with those of the same faith, and of the one common brotherhood. It seems to us that meetings of this kind would be edifying, even if there were no business to attend to. May the blessing of the Lord rest upon the coming meeting, that what is done may redound to His glory and honor. A little selfish and more of the grace of God would be a blessing to any meeting, and in all things manifest more charity toward each other.

There are scholars who are opposed to the 11-year question will please excuse us for not mentioning it through the paper, as we do not wish to be so involved in a discussion on such a point. Our people are not fully agreed on it, and the momentary press has a simple way of settling it, and that would produce a controversy which would not be very edifying to our readers, for they were peace and contentment. Let us unobtrusively work together for great common unity of sentiment. If such things were to be done, there are proper places for them, but let us try and keep them out of our papers.

CONFIDENCE CRAFT.

A WRITER sums up a little of his experience as follows, which we give place, that it may throw others on their guard. The better way is not to trust any one you do not know:

"The day being far spent, and being fatigued, I set out for the Hudson, purposing to continue my journey to Albany. Walking leisurely and rather slowly along, a young man rushed up and stuck a bill in my face, which announced the sale of jewelry, and great bargain to be had. I paused to read, and then told the man I did not wish to purchase as I never wore such things. At this juncture another came up apparently very eager to learn the contents of the bill and was also very anxious to make a purchase, and the two urged me to go with them. Still I refused, telling them I had no desire whatever to make such a purchase. At length they said, if I did not wish to purchase, I need not do so, but they would esteem it a great favor to have me go with them. I still hesitated, and only consented to go as a mere matter of accommodation which they assured me would be greatly appreciated by them. Yet I did not feel that things were quite right. Another thing that made me regret my having consented to go was, as soon as we had entered the room, a door attendant locked it after us. As for the jewelry, I would not have given one dollar for all there was displayed. My two companions purchased freely and one dollar drew valuable watches—all the sales were in purchasing a ticket, and the ticket drew whatever the number upon it corresponded with in the show-case. I still stood and looked on, and was not at all anxious to invest. But they continued to urge me to "try my luck," and I as stontly refused, reminding them of their promise.

But they began to grow more vehement, and almost compelled me to make a purchase. Finally they asked me if I had any money. I told them I had enough to pay my expenses to Albany. Then they wanted me to show it to them. This I refused to do, at the same time feeling anxious for my safety. They then grew angry and commenced to swear at me. This made me feel still more uncomfortable and I began to realize that I must be in some of the 'sharper's' trap.

Finally I told them if they would let me out I would make a purchase. To this they agreed. I paid one dollar, and drew a blank. In this I was not disappointed, for I considered myself lucky if I could regain my freedom at the expense of one dollar. They urged me several times to try my luck again as I would have better success. But I kept reminding them of their promise, constantly telling them I had no use for jewelry.

At last they unbarred the door and let me out. When I had reached the street I took a long breath, and resolved not to be thus caught again.

I continued my way to the boat, purchased a ticket, and purposed sitting down and taking a rest. Having gone aboard, and it being quite warm, I took a drink of water. While at the tank, a well-dressed, fine-looking and gentlemanly behaved man waited his turn after me to take a drink. While I was drinking he asked me where I was going. I told him. He wanted to know if I lived at Albany. I replied that I did not. Upon this I passed along to a sofa and sat down.

Scarcely had I seated myself than the man at the water tank took a seat by my side, and continued his conversation. He was cleanly dressed, had auster, and to all appearance looked like a man of business. He said he was a merchant in Albany, had been to the city and made a purchase of goods, and then was only an hour left before the boat started, and he had wanted to know if I would do him a great favor as to go up town and with him, in his company his wife and sister to the boat, where he intended to his goods, as he had not time to do both, and he feared they, his wife and sister would not find their way to the boat alone. The request uttered in all sincerity, seemed to me to be a reasonable one, and I said as I could I would go with him and take the goods he had requested.

He took me through one street and another, overlooking my situation by prying into my history and asking very personal questions. I felt somewhat distressed, yet politeness to him forbade my doing otherwise than to answer them.

"We had traveled some two miles, and I began to grow anxious about getting back to the boat in time, and had frequently asked him how much farther it was, and was on the point of breaking away from him and returning, when a man, springing out from some unperceived nook, in an angry tone demanded pay for a bill of goods shipped, which he violently shook in the face of my companion. It was for the amount of $600. The merchant pulled out his pocket-book as if he was willing and ready to pay. But here came the "fog of war." He had a great roll of bills, but all ranging from $500 to $2,000. He could not make change so as to pay the $600. In his perplexity he turned to me and asked me if I had any money. I replied that I had. 'How much have you?' I said, about $50. He still seemed perplexed, and took out another pocket-book, and, behold! he found $50 in small bills. Now if I would lend him my money he could make change. The man who presented the bill kept urging him to hurry up as his time was valuable. The merchant asked me if I would lend him my $50 until he reached the boat, when he would repay me. I hesitated. I did not feel quite right in the matter. He, seeing my hesitancy, offered me a $500 bill for security until he reached the boat. Still I hesitated. He as promptly offered me a $1,000 bill if I would only lend him $50, so that he could pay the man. I had never seen government bills of the denominations above named, and I feared there might be another 'sharper's' catch in this, so I declined.

Upon this they both turned upon me and urged me to accommodate them in a matter of so great importance. I put my hand into my pocket, and had hold of my pocket-book, when I noticed the merchant give the other a wink of the eye, peculiar and similar to winks exchanged at the jewelry store where I had so recently invested one dollar. The thought flashed into my mind that it was nothing but a confidence game, and, without saying a word, I turned and ran, leaving the merchant to pay his own bills, and to escort his wife and sister." — J. Lemley.

SUNDAY MORNING.

Council Meetings.

COME, brother, sister let us have a little talk about council meetings this morning. You know such meetings are of the church, by the church, for the church. They are, as their name indicates, to give and accept counsel, advice from each other as to the best mode of doing things. To help each other and to receive help, are the motives. To become better and to help each other to become better, are the results if we permit Jesus to be there too. Unless we talk, read, act, vote as if Jesus were moderator of the meeting, the council will be of a worldly character and not one will be made richer in Christ Jesus. The clean heart should have full weight and influence there, for this is acceptable to the Lord. The pure heart must have its way too, or impure work will be done. "Blessed are the pure in heart." The upright in heart are meek and lowly in heart too, and have a right to "shout for joy" (Psalm 32: 11). Then there are the tender-hearted. These must not be hurt; for the apostle says, "Be kind one to another, tender-hearted" (Eph. 4: 32). O, that we may seek to have a tender heart! A tender heart has pity and compassion, and seeks to do others good.

It would do no good to go to council with an evil heart. Such a heart can add nothing to a tender heart but sorrow and grief. The hardened heart, the unclean heart would better go and be washed first in the precious blood, before they go to council-meeting, to put other hearts on the way of life. Let the heart be bathed in the Fountain of life before these precious meetings. Nor can the faint-hearted—the heart that would do its duty, but fears to bear the burden, do much good at council.

Council work is perhaps the most important of all others in the church. On this depends the unity of the body, the peace of the body; and on the peace of the body, the church, depends the church's success. A word spoken out of season in council, may be the spark that endangers the whole body. There are some members of the body that can be amputated and the body will go on and succeed, while on the other hand, if some are "cut off," the body suffers. For instance, the tender heart should not be hastily nor severely dealt with, lest the judgment be too severe.

But there is another thing I wish to notice here. When a member is disobedient, will not take the advice of the church, the question is not, "Will we cut him off? Will we excommunicate him?" but "Will we withdraw fellowship from him?" Paul says, "Withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly" (2 Thess. 3: 6). This, I am inclined to believe, will have a better effect on the disorderly, than to say that we "cut them off." It is so much better to use the words of the Book. But more about our manner and words at council meeting. Our words should be seasoned with grace, filled with the spirit of kindness. There are few cases, few persons in the church who cannot be touched with love and kind words. And above all should officials learn to speak in love. Unless they give evidence of brotherly kindness and long-suffering, and learn to admonish in love, it is morally certain the body will not be held together in harmony, but factions will grow up, bitterness will characterize the work, and instead of glory to God, His anger will be kindled against that church. God help all of us to talk and act kindly. No one should go there to enforce his will against any one. I think we should all act and speak as if Jesus were personally present and our very existence depended on His decision. And our claims to eternal glory do depend upon His will; how careful then should we be in our council work. A little bitterness, a little self-will may mar the peace of the church, and if the peace be marred, O, how sad the condition! Then will we be kind and tender-hearted towards each other? Will we talk about the things of God's house in reason and aid for each other's good? Keep cool, be patient, and hold Jesus before you and the work will be well done.

Remember that we do not come together to decide what commands of God we will or will not obey. We all agree to obey all the commandments of God. Here we are of "one faith." God does not allow us to pass judgment upon these, for they are established; but then He has left to the church to say in what manner some of them are to be observed. For instance, He directs that the sick shall be anointed with oil in the name of the Lord, but He has not said whether this shall be done in a standing, sitting or kneeling posture, hence the manner of anointing has been left to the church to decide. Thus many instances might be brought forward in support of this theory, but I leave it for your mind to enlarge upon. Then in matters of judgment, each church should aim to decide difficulties in harmony with the spirit of mercy and justice. In doing thus, aim to ever speak in a kind, pleading tone. This will win the most thifty heart.—M. M. ESHELMAN.

HARD WORK.

"WHAT is your secret of success?" asked a lady of Turner, the distinguished painter.

He replied: "I have no secret, madam, but hard work."

Says Dr. Arnold, "The difference between one boy and another is not so much in talent as in energy."

"Nothing," says Reynolds, "is denied well-directed labor, and nothing is to be attained without it."

"Excellence in any department," says Johnson, "can be obtained only by the labor of a lifetime; it is not to be purchased at a lesser price."

"There is but one method," said Sydney Smith, "and that is hard labor; and a man who will not pay that price for distinction had better at once dedicate himself to the pursuits of the fox."

"Step by step," reads the French proverb, "one goes very far."

"Nothing," says Mirabeau, "is impossible to a man who can will. Is that necessary? That shall be!—This is the only law of success."

"Have you ever entered a cottage, ever traveled in a coach, ever talked with a peasant in the field, or loitered with a mechanic at the loom," asks Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, "and not found that each of those men had a talent you had not, knew something you knew not? The most useless creature that ever yawned at a club or counted the vermin on his rags under the suns of Cadabria, has no excuse for want of intellect. What men want is not talent, it is purpose; in other words not the power to achieve, but the will to labor. I am no believer in genius, but I believe that labor judiciously and continuously applied becomes genius."

HOPE.

WHAT is man without the hope of a future life?—how feeble! how disconsolate! how unsatisfied! Earth, it is true, has a thousand allurements, and opens to our taste unnumbered sources of joy; but, in the midst of them, there is a certain something wanting to gratify the soul, if the hope of immortality be absent. We saw the man in full flow of health; in the prime of life; in the prosperity of business; blessed with one of the most amiable wives, and with a circle of blooming and beloved children; but, alas! he was melancholy. This earthly prosperity he knew must end; and he, with all that he held dear, must descend to the tomb and perish. He had no hope extending beyond the grave; and, in the midst of worldly splendor and apparent joy, the worm of sorrow gnawed at his heart. His wife sickened and died. He followed her to the grave, and mourned without hope. Alas for him! he had no hope of a resurrection. And when, at last, he was stricken, he laid himself down to die, as the beast doth without hope. He furnishes a mournful example of the very important hope of a future life, and a firm belief and trust in the all-wise, benignant and overruling Providence, which qualifies man to pass through this world. In all the circumstances of his being, he feels the need of hope.

Tell me, unbeliever, is not your case here described? You have rejected religion, you have closed your eyes upon the Bible—are you happy? Have you no desires in regard to the future unsatisfied? When your friends depart, do your views give you comfort? Does your soul enjoy peace? If, after all, there is a constant, longing desire unsatisfied, apply to the religion of Jesus for comfort! "Come to the waters;" "Buy wine and milk without money and without price." If you drink of this water, you shall never thirst again. Your joy shall be full. In prosperity and in adversity; in health and in sickness; in life and in death, you will cast your cares upon the Lord, and be at peace.

CHRIST is not valued at all, unless He be valued above all.—Augustine.

IT ISN'T ALL IN BRINGING UP.

IT isn't all in "bringing up,"
 Let folks say what they will;
 To silver-scour a pewter cup—
 It will be pewter still.
 E'en of old Solomon,
 Who said, "Train up a child,"
 If I mistake not had a son
 Proved rattle-brained and wild.

A man of mark who fain would pass
 For lord of sea and land,
 May have the training of a son,
 And bring him up full grand;
 May give him all the wealth of lore,
 Of college, and of school,
 Yet, after all, make him no more
 Than just a decent fool.

Another, raised by penury,
 Upon his bitter bread,
 Whose road to knowledge is like that
 The good to heaven must tread,
 He's got a spark of nature's light,
 He'll fan it to a flame,
 Till in its burning letters bright
 The world may read his name.

If it were all in "bringing up,"
 In counsel and restraint,
 Some rescals had been honest men,
 I'd been my-elf a saint,
 Oh, it isn't all in "bringing up,"
 Let folks say what they will,
 Neglect may dim a silver cup—
 It will be silver still.

OUR DEAR CHILDREN.

PARENTS are commanded by the Gospel, to provide for their children. We are also taught to bring them up in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord"—not in the nurture and admonition of the world. The Lord does not want us to let our children do what we would not do ourselves. If we are ashamed to go to a place, we ought to be ashamed to let our children go. If we are condemned in wearing gay apparel, will we not be condemned if we put the gayeties on our children?

Sometimes parents promise children things, and then do not fulfill the promise. This has a bad effect. Then again, when a child is in mischief, we are apt to say, "don't quit!" and if it will not bear, we again scream, "stop! stop now! or I shall whip you;" but the child is used to that kind of promise, and goes on as unconcerned as ever. By this time the child has gained its end, and we say no more. Such a course is not in the nurture of the Lord. The child that is thus raised is not apt to honor father and mother. Parents, have you ever thought of this? How careful we ought to be, and set good examples for our children. You see children are apt to think that they have a right to do what parents do, hence let all the examples be good ones. We should often ask the Lord to help us raise our children so as to please Him.

SAMUEL.

THE history of Samuel is very interesting, but it is too lengthy for me to give many of the particulars of his life. His father's name was Elkamah, and his mother's name, Hannah. When small, his mother took him up to the temple to present him to the Lord, and he staid there with Eli who was High Priest at that time. When with Eli he had to sleep alone, and one night he thought he heard Eli call him, so he arose and went to the man of God and asked what he wanted. Thrice he heard a voice call him, and each time went to Eli, when the good man perceived that it was the Lord calling. Eli then told Samuel what to do and he did as he was commanded.

In this is a lesson for us children. We should obey those who are over us. Samuel became a prophet, and the Lord told him what would become of Eli, and it came to pass as the prophet declared. He also told king Saul to destroy the Amalekites, but Saul obeyed not. Look at the terrible result and again learn a lesson. See what disobedience does. Samuel was a faithful prophet of the Lord. TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

HOW much better it would be in this world, how much more pleasant, if all sons and daughters would be more obedient to the counsels of their parents. We have often thought how great a burden and heavy care children could prevent, if they would be obedient to father and mother. But how is it in a general way, with the children and youth in this time? Do they not walk after the world, follow its foolish and vain fashions? Insts and pleasures? on the broad road to destruction? "A wise son regards the advice and instruction of his parents, but a mocker and unruly son regards not the advice and punishment of his parents." They would sooner leave their parents, and thus make their affliction and heart-rending greater. Did you ever think, children, how great is the love of a father and mother? You ought, with the full measure of gratitude, return their affection. You are bound to them by the strongest ties. Treat them with tenderness. They will love you whatever be your character, but let them have cause to be proud of you. Disappoint not their hopes, do not compel them to wish that God would hide you in the grave. Look unto Jesus, the pattern of every excellence. Love your parents as the children of God, obey, honor, cherish and protect them, as Jesus obeyed His earthly parents. If you do this in respect, you will resemble the Holy Child Jesus.

Listen what the Bible says: "He that is obedient unto the Lord, will be a comfort to his mother." "My son, hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother; for they shall be an ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck" (Prov. 1: 8, 9). Read Col. 3: 20; Lev. 19: 32; Deut. 27: 16.

How many an aged father and dear mother could proceed on their journey more peacefully and happily if their children would be respectful and devoted to them. But, oh, how often it is the reverse! Children who are kind, respectful, cheerful, obey their parents, take the way to become a blessing to themselves, their parents, the church of God and the world. My advice to you, my young friends, is, turn ye from the wrath to come, and from the broad road which leads to death and hell. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." God says, "Those that seek me early shall find me." You see that you are not too young to serve God. Search the Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." My dear young reader, flee from the wrath to come and avoid the terrible calamities that might befall you.

There are many young people that attend meeting year after year, but they are not willing to become obedient to the commandments of God. They fear the world will laugh at them; they fear that they will have to refrain from pride, and things pertaining to the pleasures of the world. To love the world, and the things that are in the world, is to make them our treasures, and put our trust in them instead of God. The sum of true religion and our whole duty to God and man is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Dear young friends, we hope you will think what a terrible thing it is to be a transgressor. Those who transgress the commandments of God, have very little pleasure or happiness in this world and will have none in the world to come. We hope you will not associate with wicked companions; keep away from those who curse and swear, be quarrel, and fight; for they will lead you into the same wicked habits. Oh! how awful it must be for the wicked to look back over their past lives, and think how wicked they have been, and that Jesus is not their friend, and now must die and go into everlasting punishment prepared for the devil and his subjects.

W. W. WARREN.

Plymouth, Ind.

If we could only read each other's hearts we should be kinder to each other. If we knew the woes and bitterness and physical annoyances of our neighbors we should make allowances which we do not now. We go about masked, uttering stereotyped sentiments, hiding our hearts' pangs and our headaches as carefully as we can; and yet we wonder that others do not discover them by intuition. We cover our best feelings from the light; we do not so conceal our resentments and our dislikes, of which we are prone to be proud. Often two people sit close together with "I love you" in either heart and neither knows it. Each thinks "I could be fond, but what is the use of wasting fondness on one who does not care for it?" and so they part and go their ways alone. Late is a masquerade at which few unmask even to their very dearest.—Selected.

If you would have your children respect religion and grow up something more than mere thorns, take them with you to meeting, and when there, see that they behave in a becoming manner.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Mattie A. Lear.

Dear Brethren:—
On the 19th sister Scott and I took the train at Urbana for Bloomington, arrived there about 10 o'clock P. M., where we were met by Bro. J. Y. Snaveley, and taken to his home near Hudson. In the evening attended meeting at the Brethren's church, about two miles North of Hudson, preaching by Bro. James G. Gish of Woodford Co. Text, 1 Cor. 15: 49. A most excellent discourse on the necessity of our lives being made conformable to the life of Christ in this world, or bearing His earthly image, being like Him in the flesh, that we may bear His heavenly image, or be like Him in His glorified state. Bro. Hillery followed Bro. Gish with some most eloquent and appropriate remarks.

Saturday morning repaired to the church again, where we listened to a most touching sermon on the sufferings of our dear Savior by Bro. D. Frazer of Marion Co. Text, Is. 53: 4-7. Meeting closed by Bro. Hillery. Saturday afternoon preaching by Bro. Hillery from Rom. 12: 1. We were treated to a most excellent and practical discourse on the mutual duties of husbands and wives. Then, after a most interesting and edifying service, began the Lord's Supper, and opportunity to our engagement in the same. It was a most solemn and holy communion, and it was a great privilege to be present. The services were most edifying and profitable. We were all united in prayer, and the meeting was most successful. We were all united in prayer, and the meeting was most successful. We were all united in prayer, and the meeting was most successful. We were all united in prayer, and the meeting was most successful.

Preaching Sabbath forenoon by Bro. Hillery from Psalms 86: 11. David's desire to know the Lord's will, that he might do it, was beautifully and forcibly presented. This was followed by an exhortation to obedience. Sabbath afternoon a discourse from Rev. 2: 1-7. The subject of the discourse was Christ's message to the church at Ephesus.

Monday morning met again at the church; services conducted by Bro. Hillery, after which we repaired to the water, where four precious souls put on Christ by being baptized into the likeness of his death. One of the number was our nephew, William Snaveley, son of Bro. John Y. and sister Snaveley. The entire family is now gathered into the fold of Christ. May they all be faithful unto death, that unto each may be awarded the crown of life.

Monday evening preaching again by Bro. Hillery. Subject, "The Kingdom of Christ." Many of the ideas advanced were new to us, and we received much instruction and were deeply interested. Tuesday evening preaching again. This was the closing meeting. Text, Philippians 3: 12: 14.

Wednesday morning we were compelled to bid farewell to our dear Hudson friends. Our sojourn with them had been extremely pleasant, both in meeting our old friends and in forming new acquaintances. Here we first met Bro. and sister Hillery, and formed their acquaintance, which to us at least was very pleasant, and we hope profitable.

The church at Hudson, which is under the oversight of Bro. T. D. Lyon, is in a very flourishing condition. True, they sometimes have painful incidents, but we trust that if the church administers her chastisements with firmness and discretion, she will be able to preserve her purity. This church is very much in order, being, we think, a model church in this respect. We were also highly pleased with the exhibitions of love and Christian courtesy among the members of this church.

From the Skirmish Line.

Dear Brethren:—
We commenced holding some meetings in the South-western part of Johnson Co., Mo., several years ago. The place of meeting was about eight miles South of Hobden. There was not a single member there then, and the doctrine entirely new. The first year we had some accessions, but a dark cloud seemed to hang over that part of God's vineyard until recently. We were sent for, a few days ago to baptize a sister there, which was attended to after morning services. In the afternoon her husband made application for membership; a meeting was appointed early Monday morning for his baptism. At the evening meeting another application was made, after meeting still another; so that on Monday morning we had the pleasure of leading three precious souls into the troubled waters, making four additions to the church. The members there are now in peace, and are very affectionate towards each other.

At the baptismal scene, several members of the United Brethren church were present; who had never heard the brethren preach before, nor seen our mode of baptism. They were so affected, that tears flowed freely. Others were similarly affected. An excellent door is now opened there. A wide field seems to be ripe, ready for the laborer to enter, and it is hoped that laborers from the Centre View and other churches will enter the field promptly, as they are now much more movement to that field than we are.

May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the Communion of the Holy Ghost, rest, remain and abide upon all the dear children of grace, now and evermore. Amen.
Fraternally,
J. S. Moman.

From Farragut, Iowa.

Dear Brethren:—
On the 18th of May, some eight or ten of us, went from Farragut to attend a Communion meeting in Monticoury Co., Iowa, where we all enjoyed ourselves exceedingly well. It made me feel good to be in the presence of brethren and sisters there. I felt that I had done a good service for them.

"Come, welcome death, I'll gladly go with thee."
Now a few words to those that have not yet enlisted in the good cause, let me ask you to come. Come and O, love your heavenly Father for He says in St. John's Gospel, 15: 1, 2, 3, "Let not your heart be troubled. Ye believe in God; believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you; I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also."
Now you see, young friends, what a good home our heavenly Father has prepared for us, if we will only follow his laws, which He has laid before us to do. Then let me say again that if we will follow our heavenly Father's instructions, we have the sure promise of a home above, where all is joy, peace and love.

From Northern Missouri.

Dear Brethren:—
By request of the Brethren of the Northern District of Mo., I will give you a sketch of church news, as the working of the Lord revealed itself in the different places while I was with them.
I met with the brethren on the 11th of May, at the house of Bro. Michael Mowry, South-west end of Nodaway Co., Mo., in church council, with elder D. D. Sell from Clinton Co., and a number of other brethren and sisters from other districts. It was unanimously agreed to organize a new church here, called the White Cloud Branch. The following officers were chosen: George Shunberger to the first degree of ministry; C. M. Mowry and David Keller to the deaconship. Samuel Honberger was ordained to the full ministry.

Here the Brethren also had agreed to hold Love-feast; had arranged a beautiful tent, 28 by 10 feet. Preaching evening before by Bro. D. D. Sell, and others. Love-feast services took place in regular order and time in the evening, and was the first meeting of that kind held in Nodaway Co. It was largely, and by all appearances solemnly attended by spectators.—Considering the cool, rainy weather during the services, the attendance was larger than could be expected. All seemed to enjoy God's blessings. Meeting next day and night, resting until Wednesday evening.

Bro. Sell and I then went to the North-east end of same Co. Meeting on the night of the 14th. The next day met in council with the members, ten in number, at the house of Wm. H. Clark. Here we also agreed in union, to make a partial organization, called the Honey Creek church. Held a choir, the lot fell on Bro. Wm. H. Clark for minister and Elijah Redlich, deacon. Wm. E. Sell of Harrison Co., was chosen as their overseer. Meeting that night with two applicants for baptism, which were attended to next morning. This makes their number twelve.

Could not some good brother in the ministry that is a good example to the flock, move to this place, as there is a prospect for a large church here, if not neglected? The country here is good enough for any one. The members are kind and so are their neighbors, of whom quite a number are counting the cost, and I think some will make ere long.

On the morning of the 16th, after baptism, D. D. Sell and I in company with Bro. Clark, Redek and Davis went to Harrison Co., to the place of District Meeting. Met with the Brethren that night from the various districts of Northern Mo., at Long Branch school-house, this being Wm. E. Sell's district. We met at a rather late hour. Meeting had already commenced, when we entered the house. Bro. Harrison Palmer from the Somerset church, Mercer Co., addressed us with strong appeals on Heb. 2, and why we should not be shy what we hear. On the morning of the 17th, at 9 A. M., met again at the same school-house with the delegates of eleven districts, out of thirteen, composing the Northern District of Mo. With some of them we never met before. The morning session was opened in order by singing and prayer.

The morning session of the day, the report made to the meeting by D. D. Sell and David Keller of White Cloud Branch, was most interesting. The brethren were all in good spirits, and the meeting was most successful. The morning session of the day, the report made to the meeting by D. D. again at night, by the writer, followed by D. Sell. Met again next morning at 9 A. M. The committee unanimously agreed to send two evangelists as much of the time, as the committee of three brethren as directors, in consultation with the evangelists may determine to be advisable in preaching the Gospel, in places where the brethren have not preached, in languishing churches and among isolated members; the said directors to determine the actual expenses to be paid, by a chosen treasurer, out of the common contributions of the united district.

According to appointment, the above plan was presented to the meeting, and unanimously adopted, and brethren Wm. B. Sell and C. C. Root were chosen evangelists. Bro. David Bowman, Hardin, Ray Co., Mo.; P. E. Whitmer, Craig, Holt Co., Mo.; J. E. Boserman, Polo, Caldwell Co., Mo.; as Directors. J. R. Ellenberger, Turney, Clinton Co., Mo., Treasurer.

The District Meeting of Northern Mo., closed its business by electing Daniel D. Sell delegate for the Standing Committee of A. M.

To the brotherhood at large I would recommend this meeting as being worthy of copying after, in regard to settling all their business at home, as well as the great responsibility and interest felt and manifested by it as a whole, for the spreading of the Gospel; not only by home mission, but also the spirit of love and sympathy expressed for missionary labors generally.

The meeting was followed by a pleasant Communion season on Saturday night, the 18th; also meeting next day at 10 A. M. This closed the happy meetings with our dear brethren in Harrison Co., Mo. The parting scenes were solemn, more so because I was a yoke-fellow with the Northern District of Mo., for several years. As this will be my last trip to Missouri to serve them as elder over those districts, namely Bethel church, Holt Co., and Whitesville church, Andrew Co., with the members of the two new districts now organized in Nodaway Co., and the little flock in Grand River, Gentry Co., with whom I have formerly labored,—I would say that I feel a deep interest in your spiritual welfare. I often remember you all in my prayers, and I know you do the same.

It was hard to part from you, my dear brethren and sisters, and I cannot close without tendering you my heart-felt thanks and best wishes for your kind treatment and brotherly respect shown me, whilst among you. I commend you to the grace of God and the word of His power. May the Holy Spirit keep us in the same, is my prayer.

We also had one meeting Sunday afternoon, South-east of Martinsville, in friend Fink's neighborhood. Bro. D. Glick left an appointment for us, when he went to D. M., in what they call a union house. Bro. D. Sell and I addressed the meeting. Had the best of attention. Thence to Whitesville church, in company with D. Glick, and E. Orr. On Monday the 20th meeting at night; also on Tuesday night. Gave them my farewell, with another appointment for brother Orr to fill on Wednesday eve.

I came home on the evening of the 23rd. My address will be after the first of June, Abilene, Dickenson Co., Kansas.

JOHN FORSLY, S. S.

Falls City, Neb.

From Knox Co., Tenn.

Dear Brethren:—

ON last Saturday evening the last Love-feast of the Brethren, was held in Knox Co., near Bro. Hertzler's, about eight miles from here, and about twenty miles from the Oakland church. Though the nearest members from that side were about twelve miles distant, and we were the only ones from this side, yet twenty-five communed (about half of the church).

The church in most part is poor, but we hope rich in faith and love. We have reason to thank the Giver of all good, that it has been our lot, at least in the last two or three years to have peace and harmony in the church. "Behold how good it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." We have once in a while an addition or two. The last were two of elder Crosswhite's daughters, about two weeks previous to the Love-feast. The church has about doubled its membership in the last three years. Financially we are not able to have a general meal in connection with the Love-feast, as the kind, old brethren used to have and probably have yet in places.

C. F. DEWILDE.

From Lancaster Co., Pa.

Dear Brethren:—

I WILL try to drop a few lines for your worthy paper, and thereby tell others how the ark of the Lord is moving along in this part of God's moral vineyard.

A few Sundays ago, some eighteen were baptized near Manheim, and of late some fourteen or fifteen were baptized at Middle Creek, two and a half miles from Lincoln. Nearly every week we hear the welcome news of sinners turning to the Redeemer.

In our own, the Ephrata district, we have not increased quite so largely in numbers yet, as some of our neighboring congregations. We have however, since New Year, received six by baptism and two reclaimed. May the Lord now be their strength and comfort through this life of troubles and trials, so that when done with earth they may rest above in the mansions of bliss.

As places of worship and calls for the Brethren, to preach, are increasing, and the ministerial force not adequate, it was proposed and resolved that we elect a brother to the ministry, and one as visiting brother. The church met together for that purpose on the 11th, inst., and the lot for minister fell on Bro. Israel Wenger; and Isaac B. Keller for deacon.

May the spirit of the Holy One rest upon those brethren, so they may walk worthy of their office, and go forth in the Master's cause, with such a strength and zeal to His cause, that they may be an ornament to His house here below, and a jewel to His Mansion above, and be a means by which many sin-defiled souls may be brought back again to the fold of Christ and to the feast of His salvation.

River Brethren.

IN the BRETHERN AT WORK, No. 20, Vol. 3, page 5, I find that J. J. Schechter wishes, that some brother would give an account of the start of the River Brethren, through the paper, and as I am one of the oldest inhabitants in Lancaster Co., where the River Brethren started, I think I can give a correct account of their origin.

In 1752, a man by the name of William Otterbein, a minister of the German Reformed church, from Dillingen, Germany, came to this country, and settled in the State of Maryland. He saw that his old church was not in possession of the life and Spirit which the Gospel requires. Then Martin Boehm associated with Otterbein, they started a church under the appellation of "The United Brethren in Christ." In 1784, this Martin Boehm came to Donigal township, Lancaster Co., Pa., and commenced preaching, which resulted in a great revival, and among these revival converts were six men, Jacob Engel, Hans Engel, John Stern, Samuel Heigs, C. Rupp, and another man whose name I could not learn. A few of them were members of the old Mennonites. These six met together to examine the Scriptures, and edify themselves. They soon found that baptism by a three-fold immersion is the only legal mode contained in the Gospel; then they went in company to a minister of the old Baptist brethren, by the name of George Miller, and requested to be baptized by the Brethren, but afterward stand aloof and act for themselves, which our Brethren refused to do. Then they cast lots which of them should baptize one of the others, and he, then being baptized, shall baptize the other five, which was done in the Susquehanna river. Hence the name "River Brethren." This happened about the year 1787. Such was the origin and start of them.

GLEANINGS.

From Winchester, Kan.—I receive your paper regularly. It always brings glad tidings of great joy. In looking over its columns, we are made to rejoice to hear of so many sinners being brought to the fold of God. We are deprived of hearing the Brethren preach; there are no members here but myself and wife. All the comfort we have, is when the paper comes to hand. The ministering brethren used to come and preach for us quite often last Summer, but they have neglected us so far this season. If any ministering brethren should pass this way, we would be pleased to have them give us a call. S. MILLER.

From Perrin, Mo.—I desire to say to those inquiring, that I am not traveling and preaching at this time, and will not until after harvest, and if the way opens, will give due notice in a private way. My health is so far improved that I am able to work considerably on the farm. I feel very grateful for all kind words of sympathy and encouragement received. May God bless you all.

D. B. GUNSON.

From Magadore, Ohio.—We want the Brethren to donate good books to the Ashland College, especially their own productions. Any books you may wish to donate will be thankfully received. Please present the matter to those you meet. Send by express to Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio, or bring to A. M. We would like the name of the donors on the books donated.

JACOB MISLER.

From Nemaha, Kan.—We are living where the Gospel has never been preached but once or twice. There are thirteen members here, yet we have no preacher nor deacon among us. We would like to have a speaker move here; for we need one. There is quite a number of Quakers here. If it was not for the BRETHERN AT WORK I do not know what we would do; for we get so much good food from its columns. We read the paper through and then let our neighbors have it to read; it seems to take very well. If any of the brethren move West, we would like to have them come and see our country.

WM. EDGECOMB.

From Harkeysville, Pa.—Our District Meeting passed off very pleasantly. There were thirteen queries considered, and all the deliberations were kept in a proper manner—no one excited. Brethren Samuel Harley of Ephrata, and S. R. Zug of Mastersonville, Lancaster county, are to represent the Eastern District of Pa., at the Annual Meeting; the former on the Standing Committee. On Saturday the 25th there was an election held in the Hatfield church. Brother Frank Cassel was elected to the ministry, and brethren Jonas M. Cassel and Jacob M. Detweiler to the office of deacon. Elder C. Bucher and elder Wm. Hertzler being present, they had a very interesting meeting on Sunday.

JAS. Y. HECKLER.

From Galesburg Kansas.—Our council meeting came off May the 11th. The members seemed to be in love and union with one another, and to be encouraged in the good work; where the church works, the Lord works. We have a good many young members in our church here. There have been no accessions this Spring. We have meeting regularly every two weeks. It has been very wet for the last week, so much so that the farmers could do nothing. Neosho river is said to be the highest it ever was known since the country has been settled. I would like to see brethren move in and help the good cause along. Kansas is fast filling up with emigrants from other states. We have a fine, healthy country. Fruit will be plenty this year, if nothing should happen it.

M. O. HODGINS.

From Lydia Krise.—We are now living in Little Travers, and are surrounded by different kinds of people, excepting our members; for which we feel very sorry. There are seven members that I know of in this neighborhood, and they live about eight miles from town, and some of them have been here for two years and have never heard a sermon preached by any of the Brethren. Now I would say here, don't the Scriptures say, to them that ask it shall be given. We are asking, we are calling, we are begging and praying for some of the brethren to come and preach for us. We want some of them to come and settle in our neighborhood.

Little Travers, Emmert Co., Mo.

From Poy Creek Church, Kan.—Our Love-feast is now among the things of the past. The church came together at ten o'clock as was appointed; hid preaching till noon. Then broke up to meet again at four o'clock. The church made a choice for two deacons in the afternoon, and the lot fell on our dear brethren Daniel A. Lichty and Levi Wallace. May the Lord bless them and guide them in the way of truth and righteousness. The brethren were installed in their office before the evening services commenced. The meeting was held in brother Jonathan Lichty's large barn. The crowd was quite large in the evening; the members could not all be seated at the table. Considering the crowd there was pretty good order. On Sunday the crowd was very large; had preaching at two o'clock. Dear brethren let us hold out faithful; it will not be very long till we meet to part no more.

PRAYER, if it be done as a task, is no prayer.

STEIN AND RAY DEBATE.

NOTICED, recently, in the Primitive Christian an extract from the Baptist Battle Flay which referred to the doctrine of Christ, as observed by the Brethren, in rather disparaging language. The editors of the P. C. stated in reply that if such, or similar language were used in the proposed discussion between Mr. Ray, and Bro. Stein, that they would not, by any means open the columns of their paper for the publication of such language, and further referred to the necessity of restricting Mr. Ray in his use of language, before consenting to the publication of said discussion in the BRETHERN AT WORK.

No doubt the editors of P. C. wrote from pure motives, and desire that the pages of our religious papers be kept as pure and free from filthy personalities as they possibly can be. This is right, but it is my opinion, that in the pending discussion the best thing that can be done, is, to let Mr. Ray say, what he has to say, in his own unrestricted language. His abusive manner of speaking, and writing, and the disrespectful language he uses towards other churches, will go farther, in the minds of sober, thinking people, towards defeating his own propositions than all the arguments he can produce to support them. Pishish every word he writes, and let the world read, think, and judge for themselves.

Several years ago Mr. Ray delivered several discourses in our vicinity. In said discourses he referred to the Brethren church in very disrespectful language, calling our baptism "filthy rags;" our members, "silly people;" our church organization, "pulling straws," etc., etc.

Since then, the Baptist church at that place ceased to prosper and began to diminish, and has been diminishing ever since, and if it dwindles a few more years there will be nothing left.

Truth cannot be destroyed, by all the filthy language men may cast upon it. It will be truth still, and shine the brighter, by coming in contact with error.

To brother Stein, we would say, go on, in the even tenor of your way. Use soft words, but hard arguments, and the truth will not suffer in your hands; and the God of heaven and earth guide your pen, to write only what will result in honor to His great name and the salvation of many souls.

Fraternally,

J. S. MOHLER.

EDITORIAL REMARKS.

The above came to hand just as we were ready to go to press, hence the necessity of inserting it here. We much regretted what the P. C. said about the debate, but concluded to pass it all by. We know just what we are doing in the case, and can say AMEN to what Bro. Mohler says. If Mr. Ray wants to spend his time abusing the Brethren, he can do so. The more of it he does, the better it will be for our cause. He found that out at the Newtonia debate. The discussion will commence just as soon as a few more arrangements are made, and as proof that it is looked to with great interest, we will say, that hundreds are subscribing for the paper on account of it.—Eps.

OUR PRECIOUS BIBLE.

BY LEMUEL HILLERY.

HOLY Bible how I love thee,
What a pleasure to my soul;
Naught on earth shall ever move me
From thy pure and sacred fold.
Not in all the realms of pleasure,
Shall there be sufficient cause,
Robbing me of this great Treasure,
And of heaven's holy Law.

Holy Bible let me clasp thee—
Ever near my beating heart;
Oh 'tis all I now do ask thee,
And I'll never from thee part.
Soothe my pain, lead on to heaven—
For I would thy truth declare,
Oh! let this just now be given,
Soon I will thy glory share.

THE ORDER OF CREATION.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

IT was a fatal mistake to divorce the Supper and Eucharist. Either of these terms stands for the entire ordinance. They are connected as vitally as our love to Jesus and our brethren. The bread of the Communion was taken from the Supper thus signifying that both are sections of one whole.

Your second question is a perplexing one, and not easily settled on an immutable basis. That there was double diurnal division of time among the Jews seems tolerably clear—one including the waking day, from sunrise to sunset, or from six in the morning to six in the evening. The other including both day and night, and beginning in the evening according to the order of the creation. Let us see to it that all our time, as a whole and in fragments, is not only in the order, but in the character of creation.

Not only was the evening first, but man was first a dead, dark, inanimate lump of clay, before the morning of life and consciousness and intelligence dawned. All things came out of night or nothing. God is a Spirit. There is no materiality in His constitution. The idea of matter was in Him, but matter as matter had to spring from nonentity. The six days work was successively on this plan. God did not develop the second days work out of the first and so on. Each day was a creation, first the evening then the morning; first nonentity then existence. The same with man. He was taken from the dust, but as man he was a creation no less than the dust itself. Man was not developed out of a monkey as some filthy dreamers aver, but was the product and image of the eternal. And the saint, the new man in Christ is just as little a development out of the sun-polluted creature as the first man was the product of a cultivated ape.

The whole creation is represented in man. "The things that are made" express the "eternal power and Godhead." But man is a generation of the Divine constitution. He is the last evening and morning in the calendar of creation linking matter eternally with Deity, finally bringing down the very God Himself, not only as Creator but Redeemer, making the last morning an endless day. The evening and morning are the first day and the evening and morning are the last day, when they need no sun nor moon nor star nor candle, but God and the Lamb are the light thereof. But for all who are in the Devil's order of creation, the morning and evening are the first day and the last eternal midnight "the blackness of darkness forever."

I WISH I WERE A CHRISTIAN.

BY R. P. SAYLOR.

HOW I wish I were a Christian, was the expression, a man made in my hearing sometime ago. Since then I have some thoughts on wish, or wishing. And although the word wish occurs a few times in the Scriptures, Paul could wish himself accursed from Christ for his brethren (Rom. 9: 3). "This also we wish even your perfection" (2 Cor. 13 9). And John to his beloved Gann, "I wish above all things thou mightest prosper." And the shipwrecked, "they cast anchor, and wished for the day."

The word occurs about an equal number of times in the Old Testament Scriptures. Yet I am not sure but to wish, and to be wishing is a useless waste of time, and I think we might as well discard the words. As a thing that will surely come to pass, it is vain to wish for it to come; wait, have patience till it comes. After the shipwrecked had cast anchor it was useless for them to wish for the day, that would surely come at the appointed hour. The better way would be for them to do all for their comfort and safety, and with patience wait for the day, for it will most assuredly come. Wishing will only pet and sorrow the mind, wishing for this is useless.

Again, wishing for that which never can, nor will be, surely is vain. And what you can attain to, or obtain by your own proper effort, why wish for that? Make the lawful effort and obtain it. The man who wished to be a Christian, will never be one by wishing. The means by which he may become one are sanctified for him, let him use them according to appointment and he will soon be a Christian. But it seems some men are willing to do even more to be a Christian than God requires of them, if they can have it their own way.

When I was in public business I kept my bank accounts in the bank of a wealthy bachelor banker. He heard me preach on the advantages of Christianity, a religion; during the week I made a business call at his banking house. As I entered, he said, "give me the religion you preached last Sunday, and I will give you my best farm." Looking him in the face I said, "John, it is not mine to give; Christ, whose it is to give, has appointed the means whereby you can obtain it without giving your farm." But here was the tug of battle; that required what he was unwilling to do. Rather buy, or wish, than believe and repent for it.

Time spent wishing, is badly spent. I believe it is, as Tupper says, "of all employments, wishing is the worst."

MUSIC.

BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

WE cannot conceive why some people are opposed to an improvement in our system of music. We believe that which is worth doing, is worth doing well, and why cramp ourselves down to an imperfect way of exercising our voices in singing praises to God. Music and singing began soon after the creation of our first parents as we read in the Scriptures. And may we not suppose that the little birds of the air, soon after they were created, began to warble forth their sweet songs in their Creator's praise? The sparkling little violets went singing their way toward the ocean. Can we doubt that all nature filled the earth with harmonious sounds as an offering of gratitude (as it were) to the great Creator and Founder of the universe?

We learn that singing and prayer are the two main mediums by which we can reach or communicate with our Divine Creator, and we are commanded to go on to perfection. "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect." The more perfect we can offer our tributes of praise and present our humble petitions, the better will they be received. We are warned against being heathenish in our manner of addressing the Deity. "But when ye pray use not vain repetitions as the heathen do; for they think they shall be heard for their much speaking." We are rational beings, and have improvable faculties, and these faculties formed within us by the same Being that breathed into man the breath of life. That same being requires us to be perfect as He is perfect. How can we attain this perfection, if we content ourselves to remain inactive and not improve the talents given us? Some have ten talents, some five. Some one, each is required to improve the talents given.

The apostle tells us there is a diversity of gifts, and that one member is not to believe he is of no use, because he cannot fill the place of another. He speaks of the gift of prophecy—of miracles, of teachers, of healing, of interpretation and so on. He does not speak of a gift of musical talent especially, but we all know, some persons are more gifted in music than others, and some love to hear and practice it more than others. This being the case, should we not cultivate music, both in our families and in the churches? And by a regular system bring it to our perfection as possible. The apostle says, again, "I will sing with the spirit and I will sing with the understanding." We believe we should understand what we sing, and how to sing it, and the Spirit aids our infirmities. Inactivity is the lane of human life, it will destroy the health of both body and soul, while an active, industry promotes health to the body, cultivates the mental powers, and if we have complied with the offered terms of reconciliation with God, and have received the gift of the Holy Spirit to guide and direct us, we will actively pursue that course through life that will mostly bring good to the human family, and work to the honor and glory of God.

We are told in Holy Writ that music had power to soothe the troubled spirit of the wicked. Saul often called for David (though he was treated as his worst enemy) he would desire him to come and soothe him with his sweet songs. And often, very often do we see tears of penitence roll down the cheeks of the listeners, when some sweet strains of music are sung with such spiritual force as to make us feel as if our souls were lifted above this lowly vale, and that we were being watted from earth to our ever blessed and happy home above. And the most we know of our enjoyments, there is, that we are to sing songs of eternal praise to our dear Redeemer.

Reader, have you never felt when you were listening to the delightful songs of Zion, that you were getting a fore-taste of the enjoyment of that blissful home beyond the tomb, and that your souls were united in a bond of eternal spiritual love to all those who are looking forward to the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ?

My dear reader, if you never were exercised by such feelings as these, you are losing all the enjoyments of the life of a true Christian. This is our enjoyment and repays us four-fold for all the conflicts we have to encounter here. Some may call this fanaticism, be that as it may, it is worth more than all of the frivolous and foolish pleasures of earth. Gaze that delight so much in the clownish ditties that are sung among the pleasure-seeking throngs of earth. Go listen to one of the hymns of Zion sung with the spirit and the understanding, and you will find that you never understood the power of music before; your soul will be filled with new impulses and holy desires, such as you never experienced before. The worldly may mock and the unlearned may disapprove, but there is a power in systematic music for good that cannot be equaled by the best oratory the world has ever produced.

Natural oratory, like the musical talent, must be improved, and then if directed by spiritual inspiration, each can fight a terrible warfare with the wicked one. We do not mean here to condemn the weaker ones, no indeed; or hold out the idea that they have nothing to do, where much is given, much is required, and where little is given, there is not so much required, and as we said before there is a diversity of gifts. Where one can do much good in one way, another has the advantage in another. Every one of should do all they can to make the most their abilities and circumstances having always in view, in every action or thought, the honor and glory of God, and the promotion of His cause. And after we have done all we can we are unprofitable servants; but thanks be to God, we have an Intercessor.

REPENT AND BE BAPTIZED.

BY WILFRED RICE.

PPETER said unto them, repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2: 38). There has been a great deal said about repentance, baptism and the Holy Ghost, that it almost seems useless to say anything more on the subject; but I think a few Bible thoughts on the above, occasionally will not harm any one, but to practice them would be a great gain to the never-dying soul, which is of more value than this world, and what a lamentable thought it would be to think any one should neglect to feed his soul on the Bread of Life.

We should have faith in the Word. What word? Why, Christ's. Not some poor, weak mortal man who will teach for commandments the doctrines of men. "My words they are truth and they are life," says our blessed Savior. Repentance, which makes us weep for our sins, and that we have disobeyed our blessed Master's will, should precede baptism, and then we are fit subjects for baptism. Then we are to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, and what for? "For the remission of sins." What does remission really mean? We might say, simply to pardon, or the act of taking away or removing our sins, so that they will not be remembered against us any more. Then the promise is, we shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. A gift that we all should strive for, and strive lawfully; then more men and women would have that gift, and others could see the workings without being told.

There are many, yea many, who think and say, they have this great Gift and have not, because they do not obey the truth. There are so many non-essentials in the Scriptures to them, that keep them from obeying the Word, and therefore are unbelievers, because they don't believe Christ. What is baptism, and how is it to be performed? Does the Savior leave us in the dark? No. He even gave us an example, as on all occasions. Where did He go? To John. Where was John baptizing? In Jordan. "And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins" (Mark 1: 5). Could not John have gone to their houses and sprinkled them? certainly; but that would not have been baptism. This, some might think rough talk, but it is the truth. John baptized as he was commanded. He knew sprinkle or pour did not mean dip.

FREE souls freely work; whoever fears God fears to sit at ease.

FALLING LEAVES.

THEY are falling, slowly falling,
Thick upon the forest side—
Severed from the noble branches,
Where they waved in haughty pride,
They are falling in the valleys,
Where the early violets spring,
And the birds in sunny spring-time,
First their dulcet music ring.

They are falling, sadly falling,
Close beside our cottage door—
Pale and faded, like the loved ones
That have gone forevermore.
They are falling and the sun-beams
Shine in beauty soft around;
Yet the faded leaves are falling—
Falling on the grassy mound.

They are falling on the streamlet
Where the silvery waters flow,
And upon its placid bosom
Onward with the waters go;
They are falling in the church-yard,
Where our kindred sweetly sleep;
Where the idle winds of summer
Softly o'er the loved ones weep.

They are falling, ever falling,
When the Autumn breezes sigh—
When the stars in beauty glisten,
Bright upon the mid-night sky;
They are falling when the tempest
Moans like ocean's hollow roar—
When the tuneless winds and billows
Sadly sigh forevermore.

They are falling, they are falling,
While our saddened thoughts still go
To the sunny days of childhood,
On the dreamy long ago;
And their faded hues remind us
Of the blighted hopes and dreams—
Faded like the falling leaflets,
Cast upon the icy streams.

THE TWO WITNESSES, THE TWO OLIVE TREES, AND THE TWO CANDLESTICKS.

BY MATTIE A. LEAR.

"And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and three score days clothed in sackcloth. These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth" (Rev. 11: 3, 4)

SEVERAL years ago we wrote a series of articles on the above subject, and having been requested to write on it again, we will try to do so, hoping we may be enabled to throw some light upon it. Since writing before we have studied the subject considerably, and have gained, we think some additional knowledge. Our views now are in the main what they were then.

The apostle Peter tells us that we have a more sure word of prophecy; "whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place" (2 Peter 1: 14). Inexplicable and dark indeed would be the world's history, but for the gleam of light that is thrown upon it from the sacred pen of prophecy. The seer of Patmos gives us an epitome of successive ages, beginning with the opening of the seals and ending with the pouring out of the last or seventh vial; that is a period commencing near the time when John wrote, and ending with the second advent of Christ. But that which chiefly engaged the attention of the holy apostle, was the rise and development of a colossal power, an overshadowing evil in the church. This power we have portrayed in chapter 13th, under the similitude of a terrific beast. This power superseded the dragon or pagan power (see in verse 2, of chapter 13). This second power was again to be partly subverted by another power delineated in chapter 13, verse 11-18.

These three powers were to be the successive antagonists of the true church, the faithful witnesses of Christ. We cannot now however dwell longer on this branch of the subject.

It was during the dominion of the first beast, when the two witnesses were to prophesy clothed in sackcloth, for the time they were thus to prophesy, was just the length of time this beast was to exercise his functions.

We understand the two witnesses, the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks are only different forms of expression, meaning the same thing. The word here translated witnesses comes from the Greek word martus, whence our English word martyr. The word martus simply means a witness. But in the days of pagan and papal persecution to be a witness for Christ, was just equivalent to be what is now meant by the term martyr. Then the profession of Christ, and implicit faith in His Word preceded to the cross, the rack or stake, it was an offense worthy of death.

We will now try to ascertain what is meant by the above terms. The apostle Paul calls the Old Testament believers (who by their doing and suffering for God, gave testimony to the truth of our holy religion) "a cloud of witnesses." And when the disciples had met together with their resurrected Lord, they again asked Him what was to them the most interesting question, "Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" He gave them to understand that the exact period when this glorious event was to be brought about, was not to be revealed to them. "But" said He, "ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria unto the uttermost parts of the earth;" almost the exact language of the Apocalypse, "I will give power unto my two witnesses." The two witnesses then are persons, or a successions of persons, in short the faithful followers of Christ.

We will next try to show that the two olive trees mean the same, by referring to Zechariah 4: 11-14, we find that the angel explains the two olive trees to be the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth. Under the law persons and things set apart for sacred purposes, were anointed with the holy oil; which appears to have been a typical representation of the communication of the Holy Ghost to Christ and to His church. Hence John in speaking to the true believers who remained faithful and obedient, says, "But ye have an unction from the Holy One;" "But the anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you; and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in Him." The two olive trees, or the two anointed ones, then are Christ's faithful disciples, those who are led by the Spirit, "Who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

We will next try to prove our position with regard to the two candlesticks, and this we can easily do by referring to Rev. 1: 12, 13-20. John saw His glorified Master in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, and the seven candlesticks are explained by the Lord Himself to be the seven churches of Asia. Now when we speak of a church, we naturally call to mind some edifice or building, but the word was not so understood formerly. The Greek word ekklesia rendered church, denotes an assembly met about business, whether spiritual or temporal. The church of Christ then denotes an assembly of believers, met to worship and adore His glorious name. With such assemblies wherever they may meet, and under whatever circumstances they may meet Christ's divine presence will ever be with them, for such is His comforting promise.

But the number of these witnesses are said to be two. What can be meant by this? The reason why the number two is employed may be that, under the Mosaic law two witnesses were necessary to constitute a valid testimony, more might be employed, but two were essential, and it may therefore imply that during the terrible eclipse which enveloped Christendom during the dark ages, the witnesses of Christ were reduced to the fewest number that could render a valid testimony.

By referring to history we find their number was numerically two, for there were two contemporaneous lines of witnesses protesting against the popular corruptions, and vindicating the blessed truths of the Gospel. These were the Paulicians in the Eastern division of the Roman Empire, and the Waldenses in the Western division. These messengers of Jesus, these anointed ones, bore aloft the torch of truth during that dark and doleful night when ignorance and superstition were spread like a thick pall over men's minds. Christ calls these two witnesses, my two witnesses, they witness of me. One thing strikes us forcibly in reading the Apocalypse, it is this; whenever an error is being promulgated and practiced on earth, we have a corresponding but contrasting scene proclaimed from heaven. The truth that He is revealed to us from the Apocalyptic heaven, shows forcibly the correlative error contemporaneously held below. On this occasion, our Savior declares that His witnesses, witness of Him. They bear testimony to His truths, they proclaim His laws, they vindicate His doctrine.

Now we find from history that an opposite state of things was prevalent with the great body of professed Christians. Opposite, and contrasting errors were popular at the time when the testimony of these faithful ones was given. We will now give a few quotations from historians, to show that our above assertions are correct. Gibbon says, "The use and even worship of images was firmly established before the end of the sixth century." Again, "The Christian of the sixth century had insensibly relapsed into a semblance of paganism. The throne of the Almighty was darkened by a cloud of martyrs, saints and angels, the objects of popular veneration." Mosheim writes of this very period. "At this time true religion, weighed down by a heap of insane superstition, was unable to raise its head. The early Christians were wont to worship God and His Son only; but in this age (sixth century) they who were called Christians worshiped the wooded cross, the images of saints, and the bones of men." Coleridge says, "The pastors of the church had gradually changed the life and light of the Gospel into the very superstition they were commissioned to disperse, and thus paganism Christianity in order to christen paganism." How true the above strong language, for we learn at that age of fearful declension, the very temples of idolatry were without any violence done in making the change transformed into Christian churches.

In the year 604, the Pantheon at Rome, which contained the images of all the gods of the heathen, was thus quietly transformed into a Romish temple, and the images of the gods were christened by the names of the saints of papal Rome. The dragon quietly resigned his seat to the beast. In this era, that is in the fifth and sixth centuries, were developed all the elements of the predicted apostasy. The most frivolous ceremonies were introduced, and a strict conformity to these were called devotions, no matter how profane, licentious or wicked the life of the individual; on the other hand a non-compliance with all the institutions, and rites of Rome, would subject the offender to proscription and death, no matter how pure and spotless his life.

Again Christ says, I will give power unto my two witnesses and they shall prophesy. The word prophecy has considerable extent of meaning, sometimes it means to foretell future events, and sometimes it signifies to be inspired to speak from God.

The Lord said to Moses, "Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet," that is, he shall explain and interpret thy sentiments and commands to Pharaoh and to his people. Now Jesus says, "I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy." Ah! these two witnesses shall do a great and mighty work, they shall speak from God, they shall explain and interpret the sentiments and commands of Jesus, in spite of all the denunciations, and persecutions of Rome. These holy ones of whom the world was not worthy, who wandered about in sheep skins and goat skins, who retired to the most inaccessible portions of the earth, who sought refuge amid the fastnesses of the Alps, brought down the truth pure and undefiled from the apostles. The following is a testimony of the Waldenses by a bigoted Papist and a bitter enemy. "They are sedate, modest; they have no pride in clothes; they do not carry on commerce, that they may avoid falsehoods, oaths and fraud; they are chaste, and abstain from lying and swearing, only they blaspheme the Roman church and clergy." The same writer also speaks of their desire to propagate the truths of the Bible, he calls them "the sackcloth-wearing heretics." But what is the secret of their success, whence do they derive their strength? all comes from Jesus, "I will give them power," "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hands."

The length of time that they shall prophesy, is next given; "a thousand two hundred and three-score days," the same period that the woman was to remain in the wilderness (Rev. 12: 6); that the first beast was to exercise his terrific functions; that the little horn of Daniel was to wear out the saints of the Most High (Dan. 7: 25). That the above dates all refer to the same period we have no doubt. It is a period of 1260 literal years, during which that "mystery of iniquity" which had already manifested itself in Paul's time (2 Thess. 2: 7), should have become developed. This period of 1260 years was to be the time of its universal and almost unchecked sway; when pride, and error, and vice and ignorance should be dominant; a period called by historians "dark ages." But amid all this darkness and perversity, Christ sustains His faithful followers. The gates of hell cannot prevail against His church. They are the two candlesticks emitting rays of light, amid the surrounding gloom!

Faith and the cross are inseparable. The cross is the shrine of faith, and faith is the light of the cross.

A GOSPEL DRESS.

BY DAVID L. WILLIAMS.

DID God in the Gospel anywhere command how we should cut and make our apparel &c.? We answer not directly, but indirectly He did. Let us see now how that is. Well, He commands us not to be conformed to this world. Just let us try this command on a little and see what the result is. Now suppose one of the present popular churches should resolve to pay due regard and strict attention to this command, at this time and from hence forth. At this date they are garbed in the present fashions; but next year the world changes the fashion a little; still aspiring for something a little more showy and stylish. The change however, is but a slight affair the first year, but they still continue to change the first, second, third and on for years to come, so that in the course of time, the present fashion will become very odd; yet there is a church that does follow them. They knew that God was exact in His counsels and firm in all His ways, and that every disobedience and transgression would receive a just recompense of reward; consequently they could not change as the world changes, hence would be obliged to retain the same identical order in dress, or do violence to one of God's plain commands. Now there is no question about this matter: one or the other is positively the case. We have either got to denounce the world and cut loose from it, hence crucify it unto ourselves and ourselves into it, or court its favor, its fashions, and thus do positive violence to one of God's plain commands, and be subject to a just retribution in the day of judgment.

But the above supposed church don't do so; they don't intend to run any risks, but are determined to purify their souls by obeying the truth; hence they are established in a certain order of dress. This dress, as a matter, of course has to be cut and made in accordance to this order, and if this church follows and observes this order, they will be the favored of God; for God is a God of order. As above seen, this church has an order in wearing of their apparel, and it is a Gospel order too. And why? Because the Gospel command stopped them from following the fluctuations and changes of a fashionable world. God saw that there was no use of so much changing, that the order of the present year would be all sufficient for the next year, and also for all time to come; that is, if the order is what is truly embraced. The word order, that is, decent and in order truly; and so arranged or cut and made for comfort's sake. To be decent and protected from the inclemency of the weather. God saw that we positively needed nothing more, and that changes of fashion tended in its nature to foster pride, that would damage every one that would become its participants. He saw it strictly important to give the command, or He never would have given it; and He never has given a command, but that He intended it to be respected by us, and it is highly important for us to obey it, and if we don't, the consequence will be a fearful one with us in the day of judgment. Then on the other hand, we should obey the order that God designed when He gave the command in regard to dress as in every thing else.

We have an established order. The above supposed church has obtained this by the counsel of God, as in the Gospel. The cut and make of this order of dress, is not commanded just in so many words, that is not every dimension directly given, yet it is indirectly given, and we cannot, do violence to it, or we do violence to the command. The present fashion being established as an order by this supposed popular church which has resolved to strictly regard and respect this command, must and will stand if they ever after proves faithful; none of its members can deviate—turn to the right or left without doing violence to this order, hence become transgressors.

Now, friendly reader, the above is precisely the way the Brethren obtained their order of the wearing of apparel. Reverential respect for the above command, and a resolve to fear God and keep His commandments which is the whole duty of man. So they thus establish an order or rather the Word of God did it, and we should prove to be loyal to it, if not we certainly will bring God's judgment upon ourselves. The above command is not confined to dress alone by any means; it has reference to all worldly affairs. We are not permitted to conform to the world in any respect as pertains to its own affairs; such as its gatherings and societies, whether secret or public; anything that vain man or a set of men has desired or instituted for amusements or to draw into worldly circles and worldly associations; the purity of our soul and the perfection of our salvation, demand that our lives be cut loose from the world, and our time be spent in the strict service of God; not amusing ourselves with the worldly vanities as associated with worldly gatherings, for God is not there, hence if we are there, we are not in fellowship with God, our salvation is very uncertain—very doubtful; for we can do nothing except God be with us. Did any of you, when you were at the show, fair or picnic &c., feel the fellowship of God's dear Son? Did you ever ask yourself this important question? "Is God with me here; do I feel His Spirit communing with my spirit here amid all this revelry, laughing and sport?" If not, something is wrong, and it is all your own fault, and not God's.

HOW TO PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

BY NOAH WIMMER.

CAN a person pray without ceasing? I know there are some people who think a person ought to be on their knees when they pray; therefore think it is impossible to pray without ceasing.

I will give my simple views on it. A person may begin in the morning of his pilgrimage in life, or in the morning of each day, pray when you wake up in the morning. "I praise Thee O Lord for thy kind protection through the dark and shady hours of this night; and as I am permitted to rise and put on my earthly garments, to clothe this earthly body of mine, O Lord wouldst thou also clothe me with a robe of righteousness, that I may abstain from all unrighteousness and that I may lead a peaceable and quiet life all day". Then I kindle up fire in my stove or fire-place; then I praise the Lord to kindle a flame of sacred love in this cold, benighted heart of mine. Others can do likewise when they wash their hands and face, they pray to God to wash and make them clean in the blood of the Lamb, and cleanse them from all evils and sinful lust.

Then next, as we are heads of families, should call all the family together around the family altar, read a chapter or a Psalm and then admonish them to the best of their knowledge, in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; sing and pray with them in family worship. When we go to the table, we can thank God that we were permitted to again partake of this precious food, to nourish our frail bodies, and also ask Him to feed our souls with the Bread of Life, that we may grow strong in the knowledge of the Lord. When we go out to plough, we can again pray to God, as we plough up the ground to plant or sow our temporal grain. We also can apply it in a spiritual point of view, and pray God to break up the fallow ground of our hearts, and make deep the furrows that the seed sown may root down and spring up and bring a hundred, sixty or thirty-fold, all to his name's honor and to the benefit of souls immortal; and so on in all our earthly labors. We can apply it in a spiritual point of view, and thus can have our hearts and minds in a frame of prayer all the time. If we do this, we can pray without ceasing, and are not very apt to get out of the path of duty. Never go to gatherings where the Lord can't be a guest. When we have our hearts wholly and solely upon God and His goodness, we will not be likely to go or walk in forbidden paths. "Seek ye to enter in at the strait gate" (Matt. 7: 13).

It is when we get out of the path of duty, and wander away in forbidden paths, that we get into trouble with Satan; for he claims that ground, and when we get on it he assails us, and if we don't get off of it he will overcome us, and claim us as his victims. It is also when we are out of the element of prayer that we fall into divers temptations—then we get into hankering after things that will give us trouble and sorrow. Therefore let us always watch unto prayer, and if we do this, we will pray without ceasing. Let us be engaged in whatever occupation we may, we should remember that the all-penetrating eye of Jehovah is over us. Then why not heed Him when He can look into the very recess of our hearts?

ON CLOSE COMMUNION.

BY ELIZABETH THURAX.

WHEN said they unto Him, what shall we do that we might work the works of God" (John 6: 28). Now I claim that believing His works is doing it also, and if they believe and do not the work, have they a right to eat of that bread or drink of that cup? For Christ says, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven." Has any one a right to take of that bread, unless they come in the way that Jesus has laid down for them? Now if any one does not the word, they are not worthy. Christ does not tell any such to eat of His body, or to drink of His blood. It is only for believers, and if they have faith without works, it will profit them nothing; any one in this condition is outside the church of God, has no right to commune; for there are two ways, a right way and a wrong way, and we are on either one or the other. There is but one way to get to heaven, and that is the way Jesus has told us to go in His Word. But there are a great many wrong ways, and Christ's Word does not give any one a right to commune if they are on one of the wrong ways. I claim there is no close Communion; for the Communion was given to the followers of Christ, and all that follow Him have a right to that bread and wine that Jesus left for His followers. He never gave it to the world, and if the world takes it He tells them in His Word what shall become of them.

ANOINTING THE SICK.

BY J. T. SNAVELY.

IS any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord" (James 4: 14). Now if it is a benefit for the sick to call for the elders of the church to be anointed, is it not their duty to do so, without asking him concerning his desires whether he wants to get well or not? James does not say, let him ask first the question, but he saith, "let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord." We believe then that it requires faith that it may be done, "in the name of the Lord." So then I believe the sick cannot help himself, if all done in faith, he shall be raised from his sick-bed; because the "prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up"—not may-be so; but shall he be raised up? yes he shall be raised up in this present life; not as some have it at the resurrection day, because there shall be no sins forgiven then.

I understand if we commit sins they must be forgiven in this life. Again James says, "and if he has committed sins they shall be forgiven him," if it is all done in good faith. Brethren, we must believe; if not, the sick I suppose will die with his sins. O for more faith, is my prayer; for "the fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous man availeth much."

THE POWER OF LOVE.

ABSENCE, we have often been told, cannot conquer love. The victory of love over absence, when that love was grounded in presence, is no strange thing. It is part of every family history, and consecrates all our griefs. But to love one we have never seen, known to us only by the biography and by a spiritual power we cannot explain, is one of the mysteries of the grace of God. And yet it is a fact.

Children, who know hardly anything of principles, philosophers weary of theories which yielded nothing but chaff under the flail of logic, have found in the love of a personal Lord the answer to every longing of their hearts. Here is one of the greatest facts of human history; there once lived and died and ascended from earth a Man, who, though never seen on earth again, has commanded the hearts of millions, with an attachment whose bonds, like those of gravitation, are at once invisible and almighty.—S. L.

They who say they are of the church, who are in the affection of truth and not in the good of truth,—are much deceived. Every one who lives in the good of charity and faith, is a church and kingdom of the Lord; and hence also he is called the temple and likewise the house of God. The church in general is constituted of those who are churches in particular, however remote they are from each other as to their place of abode. They alone are of the church in whom the church is; and the church is in those who are in the affection of truth for the sake of truth, and in the affection of good for the sake of good, who are therefore in love toward the neighbor and in love to God.

LANARK, ILL., JUNE 13, 1876.

We want less of man-made creeds, but more confidence and trust in the all-sufficiency of the holy Scriptures. Less unmeaning ceremony, but more genuine good works. Less doctrine and traditions of men, but more love, prayer and charitable acts.

WITHIN the last quarter of a century, geologists have reduced the age of the world, as estimated from geological data, from 200,000,000,000,000 to 20,000,000 of years. Yes, and a few more investigators, in the interest of truth, with an eye looking to the authenticity of the Bible, may compel them to reduce it to about 6,000 years.

THE young bee, on the day it first leaves the hive, goes at once to collecting honey and forming wax, and builds its hexagonal cell with perfect skill, as its progenitors have done for ages past. This is a good example for young Christian converts. We can learn some noble lessons even from bees. If we were all as industrious as the busy bee, there would be far less mischief going on.

SOON after Mr. Stanley completed his exploration of Africa, a gentleman who signed himself "an unprofitable servant," donated $25,000.00, for the purpose of establishing missionary posts among some of the tribes visited by Mr. Stanley, but owing to more zeal than judgment the mission has not proven successful. Zeal is a good thing, but cannot prosper without judgment.

THE Phonograph, it would seem, is destined to accomplish wonders. It will likely do away with the greater part of writing. A business firm or family having a machine, can talk into it whatever they want, take out a little tin foil and send it to other parties, who will run it through another machine, which will give out precisely the words as were spoken into the first machine.

THE Dead Sea is about fifty miles long and twenty broad, surrounded by bare mountains, and the water is salt, pungent, and deleterious to animal life. It is believed that it was once a fertile basin, absorbed by a volcano and earthquake. Heaps of salt are collected on its shores. By some, it is supposed to be the site of Sodom and Gomorrah, which, being destroyed by fire, sunk into the earth, thus forming a basin. The sea has no outlet, and is several hundred feet lower than the Mediterranean sea, though the latter is not over fifty-five miles distant. Its history is remarkable.

A CHICAGO writer tells of a woman who would not call the minister of her church to her death-bed. "Every time during her illness that he who was her pastor entered the room to bring the consolations of the blessed Gospel of love, peace, and purity, there came also with him the strong and unmistakable fumes of tobacco. To whisper into her dying ear the words of Jesus, the Savior, on the breath of tobacco was more than the dying saint could complacently bear. The words might reach the ear, but so would the breath the nostrils."

EVEN valuable lessons may be learned from the Phonograph. It is a machine into which if you talk, every word, whether good or bad, will be correctly recorded and preserved on tin foils, which, on being run through another machine, even years afterwards, will give out the same words spoken into it in the first place. It forgets nothing. Every word spoken by us here goes into, and is recorded by God's great Phonograph and in eternity can all be given out just as spoken while here below. How careful ought we, to live and talk.

READING SERMONS.

THOUSANDS of well-meaning people are getting disgusted with the popular style of reading instead of preaching sermons. If finely educated men haven't brains enough to preach without writing, and then reading their sermons before the congregation they would better step down and out, as they are in the wrong calling. But here is the way a Baptist, who attended church in Atlanta, Ga., writes the editor of a Baptist paper of that place:

"Dear Index:—I write to let you know of my disappointment. When this beautiful day dawned upon us, I got up feeling that a rare privilege was before me—that of choosing to hear whoever I pleased of all the preachers of the Southern Baptist Convention, who were appointed to preach to-day. Well, a friend and I agreed to select the minister who was least likely to read his sermon, and hear him. So we passed three other churches, and at last seated ourselves in the desired spot. But what was our disappointment to discover the full manuscript, and to be bored for fifty minutes with a read sermon. The brother gesticulated vigorously, ranted at his paper on the Bible, and read as much about the stars, the flying clouds, the blooming flowers, the singing birds, the music of the spheres, the whispers of angels, and a little about Jesus. O, me! when will our smart, big preachers learn that it is more acceptable to the people to preach in a simple style about Jesus and His love? I came away from the church unprofitable, and the first preacher I met who was to preach to-night, I asked him if he was going to read his sermon, and he said "no." So I will go to hear him to-night, and more than that, I never intend to hear another read sermon, if I can prevent it without being rude."

PRAYING FOR EDITORS.

THE Congregationalist says: "An exchange makes the inquiry whether any one ever heard a minister pray publicly for editors, or whether any one ever thinks of doing so privately? We have certainly heard such prayer; but possibly if there had been more of it in the past, there would have been less occasion in these days for the crying necessity of reform in the secular press, and for more stamina in some religious journals on great moral and doctrinal questions of the hour. The growing power of journalism renders the family paper one of the most influential educators, upon all subjects that arise. It may be a powerful agency for moral uplifting, or the whole drift of its influence may be downward. A great responsibility is thus laid upon parents to see to it that only such periodical literature be admitted to their households as is wholesome and pure. And if any subject be worthy of earnest and constant prayer, it is that those who conduct the public press may be men of high integrity, of pure personal character, and earnest Christians; and that they may be divinely guided in the discharge of their great and solemn trusts. Of one thing we venture to make sure—that no Christian man does well to censure and complain of editors, who wholly neglect them in his prayers."

We wonder if all our readers pray for the editors of the BRETHREN AT WORK? Do they remember us when they approach the throne of grace? or are they leaving us to battle our own way through the world? James says, "the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much."

Christians often pray for their ministers and elders; this is right. But did you ever pause to think that the responsibilities resting upon editors are far greater than those resting on either preachers or elders? The latter count their hearers by the hundreds, but editors by the thousands. And then their work is not only read, but re-read, and has much to do in moulding the sentiments of the masses. In fact, editors are, to a great extent, responsible for much of the existing public sentiment. This being the case, it is certainly worth while to pray for them. It would do our hearts good to know that thousands of voices were going up to the throne of grace in our behalf.

If our readers want to make the BRETHREN AT WORK a power for good, they should not neglect to resort to prayer in our behalf. We know you have been working faithfully for us, but work alone will not accomplish the desired object. It is the earnest prayers of the faithful that we so much stand in need of. When you come before the throne of grace, remember your editors. Do not forget to pray for all our contributors, and our readers too. They all need more grace and faith.

"What a friend we have in Jesus,

All our sins and griefs to bear;

What a privilege to carry

Everything to God in prayer.

Oh, what peace we often forfeit,

Oh, what needless pain we bear—

All because we do not curry

Everything to God in prayer."

WHEN IS THE CHURCH PROSPEROUS?

IN this idea, two things present themselves: When is the church prosperous, numerically? and when is it prosperous spiritually? The church, the "one body" of Christ may be prosperous in numbers, and very deficient in piety—in holy principles; or it may be prosperous in principle as well as in number. To be prosperous in numbers and also in vital piety, is "like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in due season" (Psalm 1: 3). The Jews, were, perhaps, the most stubborn people in all the world, to bring over to Christ. Ordinary means could not move them to accept Jesus—to believe and obey Him. Superhuman means, not only while Jesus was here personally, but after He ascended to His Father, had to be used to convince Jew and Gentile. In the midst of all difficulties imaginable, Christ and the Apostles succeeded in turning many to the water of life. About three thousand—more than there are members in this part of the State, heard and obeyed in a single day. Here numbers frightened not the Apostles; for this great number had been moved by the powerful appeals of Peter and others, and no doubt truly repented. It may take some time to get the proper knowledge to arrive at a proper stage to repent, but that a man must take weeks and months to repent is not warranted by Apostolic usage. Show a man that he is a sinner, get him to believe this, and the fruits of repentance will soon show themselves.

As already noted, the church may increase in numbers, yet not in "like precious faith," not in piety and holy zeal. This kind of progression could not be put down as Bible progression, and not being Bible progression, the church is not prosperous. But the church that steadily increases in numbers and in holiness, is prosperous without a shadow of doubt. The church that is at peace, is zealous in trying to save others, leaves nothing undone to become rich in love and good works is truly prosperous. Such a church is a blessing to any community, is an honor to God and greatly to be admired.

We shall now look at some of the elements necessary to a prosperous church. A church consists of a number of members of the body of Christ, united together by faith, for two grand purposes: To have communion with each other, which communion shall become perfect in eternal glory, and second: To be able to spread the truth, planting it in other hearts for the same noble purpose. This union of members constitutes the Lord's house, the one body, in which Christ dwells (1 John 4: 19; Eph. 3: 17). To carry on the work of sowing the seed in other hearts, and to take care of the things of the house, members are chosen, such as bishops, deacons and ministers. Here lies the great secret of a prosperous church. If those who are set apart to look after the welfare of the Lord's house, are holy men, are full of patience, love and sound judgment, the church will be prosperous. But on the other hand, if the servants lack any of the qualifications noted by the Gospel, then there will be confusion, and confusion brings not prosperity. Should the servants or any of them be proud and haughty, some of the congregation will be proud and haughty too; "Like priest, like people." If any of the servants be light-minded, self-willed or soon angry, the church cannot prosper; for it will not receive the proper instruction, the food that strengthens, the words that edify.

Then to prosper, the pure Gospel must be preached, the apostolic order strictly followed and practiced towards those without and within. The doctrine that brings men and women into the church must be preached with God's wisdom, God's power. Then when they have been baptized into Christ—have put Him on, they must be treated with all kindness, all love, all patience and as beings possessing equal rights with us. The hardest lesson for any servant to learn, is the lesson of equality—the lesson of equal rights. Every act concerning the church should be open to the church. Secrecy has well-nigh ruined the country, and the church should jealously guard her interests from this evil. I have never found in an official capacity a single important thing, relative to church government, brotherly love, unity of the spirit, peace and prosperity of the church, that would have, in my judgment, been in the least injurious to lay before the church. The servants that aim to do the church's work in secret, to withhold from the church the work that properly belongs to it, cannot count on prosperity. So far as I am concerned, I have never found occasion to mistrust the church. I believe the "one body" is strictly honest, is desirous of doing right, and will do right if properly instructed. Many of us have yet to learn the power of kindness. When we learn this lesson thoroughly, we shall find prosperity in truth and in deed. Often we pine and lament the want of prosperity, lament because the church does not increase in numbers, in piety, in holiness and good works. The reason, perhaps, may be found within ourselves. Our lives may not be after the apostolic model, may not be consistent and fixed upon the truth. Any errors in the body, tolerated by the body, will prevent prosperity. Exact justice by the church, for the good of the church, will make the church prosperous. It is not so much the getting into the church, as the proper living after being in, that makes a church prosperous. God has prescribed the method of getting into the church, and the method is therefore perfect. To work by this perfect rule will bring prosperity so far as members are concerned, but the proper feeding, nourishing and preserving must be followed by the servants of the church, if the prosperity in holiness and integrity would be maintained. Divisions, seeming difference of opinion must be avoided, for nothing destroys the hopes, the prospects, the brightness of young members, of bodies in Christ, so much as those little strifes concerning judgment. Then if you want prosperity in the body, cling to the Word of God, seek the Lord often in prayer, be courteous, be kind, be earnest, be watchful, be pious. Act not as superior in authority, but let your actions declare that you have become a man in Christ Jesus. Here is prosperity. In the next, the relations of the laity and the servants will be more particularly noticed.

PROTRACTED EFFORTS.

"Some time ago I was talking with a brother from Illinois. He said some of the brethren had been holding protracted meetings there, and received many converts during the excitement, but in a short time they had to expel some of them. That is the result—making the latter end worse than the first. I fear these protracted meetings are calculated to open the door a little too wide, and so let the wolves come in and destroy the flock. Why is it that the brethren cannot see when Jesus so warned them to be not deceived?"

THE above, clipped from one of the Brethren's papers, misrepresents the condition of things among the churches in Illinois. We do not know so much about Southern Illinois, but we do know it to be untrue of the Northern district. We are familiar with the results of every protracted meeting held among the churches here during the last few years, but do not know an instance where some of the new converts had to be expelled in a short time.

We know of one meeting where fifty-two were added, another thirty, some others twenty-five, and some less, and not one of those churches regret the protracted efforts made. And we believe the same to be true of the churches in Southern Ill. They have four missionaries in the field, and have been putting forth great efforts toward converting sinners, and we are glad to know that their labors were not in vain.

But supposing that in course of time a few should be found unfaithful. Would that prove protracted efforts wrong? If so, then that protracted meeting held by Philip at Samaria was all out of order, for one of the converts was found to be in the "gall of bitterness" only a few days after being baptized, and surely no one will say that Philip did not understand the Apostolic order.

That some are received into the church too carelessly we admit, but that does not prove protracted meetings injurious. Churches can be just as strict about laying the order before applicants received at protracted meetings as at any other time. We much regret that the old-time practice of rigid examinations for applicants for baptism is beginning to fall into disuse in many localities, and thus bring reproach upon the cause of Christ. It is right that candidates should "bring forth fruit meet for repentance," and show by their actions that they are fully resolved to forsake the world with all its allurements. It is expedient that the order be laid before them fully, and that they know just what they are doing.

As to how many should be received at one meeting, the Bible precedents show not over 3,000, nor less than one. As long as we do not receive over 3,000 in one day we need not fear of transcending the privileges vouchsafed to the church by the Apostolic example on the day of Pentecost. But we mean that they must come right, and show that they are sincere. Of course some may be in the gall of bitterness, which will not manifest itself till after baptism, yet that should not deter any from pushing the Lord's work forward. Let us learn to do our work well, and in the name of the Lord for the glory and honor of God, and then we will not regret having taken the right course. J. H. M.

"It is a most wonderful fact, that, although the Jews have had no distinct political government for more than eighteen hundred years, and have mingled with the citizens of every nationality on the globe, they are to-day as clearly marked as a peculiar and separate people, as in the days of Solomon."

JERUSALEM.—Mr. Simon Stampfer writes to the Jewish Chronicle from the Holy City, that the turning-point in the high price of the necessities of life, which had prevailed in Jerusalem for some months past, has at length been reached. Prices of breadstuffs are drooping, and sanguine hopes are entertained that the coming harvest will be bountiful. The Committee of Raddis continue to import from Trieste and elsewhere cereals which are sold to necessitous persons, below the market price.

Fossil fish have been found on the lofty heights of the Rocky Mountains, 6,000 or 8,000 feet above the present sea-level. Of course, this proves that the water at one time covered the Rocky Mountains, yet, some years ago, there were those who maintained that the flood could not have covered the higher mountains as there was not water enough on the earth for that purpose. When the Bible speaks of the waters covering the whole earth, these learned skeptics cannot believe it, but when they find fossil fish on the top of mountains then it is all right. They can see how the water got to the top of the mountain, and how those fish got up there, 8,000 feet above the level of the sea, but for their lives they cannot see where the water came from to cover the whole earth.

LYMAN Abbott's commentary on Luke, published by A. S. Barnes & Co., New York, is the most interesting volume yet received at this office. The mechanical part of the book is good, being printed on good paper and well bound. The arrangement of the book is the best we have seen. The notes are short, but to the point, and in the main correct, though we cannot expect commentators, whose faith partakes of the general popular turn, to be very explicit on the doctrinal practices of the Bible. The book, we think, will supply a long-felt want. We are exceedingly anxious to examine the comments on Matthew and Mark, and also the volume on John, and then may have something more to say about the plan of the work. In our opinion it is well adapted to the use of Bible classes. Price $1.50, and may be had of the publishers.

The Independent, a religious weekly, published in the city of New York, is disposed to throw fun at the plain head-dress usually worn by our sisters, and even stoops to ridiculing. It calls one of our leading ministers "a mighty ball of Basha among the people," just because he advocates plainness and simplicity among the people of God. We think the Independent, when it resorts to such slangs as that, is lowering itself considerably in the estimation of good-meaning people. If it cannot sanction our mode of dress, it certainly can use respectable language when speaking of us. We could not expect any thing better from some secular papers, but when it comes from a high-toned religious journal, we are led to conclude that even finely educated and polished editors, will sometimes forget that Christian courtesy and purity of motives that should characterize the molder of the opinions and conduct of the reading people of our land.

HAPPY WOMEN.

IMPATIENT women, as you wait
In cheerful homes to-night, to hear
The sound of steps that, soon or late,
Shall come as music to your ear!

Forget yourselves a little while,
And think in pity of the pain
Of women who will never smile
To hear a coming step again.

With babes that in their cradles sleep,
Or cling to you in perfect trust;
Think of the mothers left to weep,
Their babies lying in the dust.

And when the step you wait for comes,
And all your world is full of light,
O women, safe in happy homes,
Pray for all lonesome souls to-night!

BREVITIES.

—John Wolfe, the ballad entitled the "Railroad to Heaven," was published in the BRETHREN AT WORK last year.

—From the Vindicator, we learn that a man ninety years old was lately baptized and received into the Blue River church, Ind.

—The Free Masons in France have fully adopted the atheistic principles; have voted God out of existence, and proceed to do homage to Voltaire.

—The health of Pope Leo is reported as declining daily. He will soon leave the Vatican for his health. In some quarters fear is entertained that a new Pope may be elected before the first year of Leo's pontificate is ended.

—Brother S. C. Keim, of Elk Lick, Pa., is now at Dr. Walter's Mountain home, Berks Co., Pa., under treatment, and will likely remain some time.

—All the money sent to Denmark for the poor, is placed in the hands of the deacon of that church there and applied by him as directed by the church.

—Spend the money for bread, clothes and home comforts that is now spent for strong drink, and not a single person in the whole land need ever suffer want.

—Of nearly $80,000,000 spent yearly, in this country, for intoxicating drinks and tobacco, the larger portion is spent by our employed or laboring class.

—Another attempt has been made to assassinate Emperor William. Thirty large and small shot were fired into his head, arms and body, but none of them seem to have wounded fatally. The old man is quite weak from the loss of blood. He may yet recover.

—The Postmaster General has given orders that hereafter postmasters will not be allowed to attach stamps to letters for any one. The order is given so that no blame may be attached to the officials in case letters should miscarry.

—The committee engaged in the revision of the Old Testament, at Westminster, England, have concluded their fiftieth session. They have revised the translation of the historical books from Genesis to Nehemiah, inclusive; the Psalms, Isaiah, Obadiah and Jonah. The work is thus making slow but sure and steady progress.

—Some articles written with a pened have to be rejected on the account of being too illegible. The best and safest way, is to use good black ink.

—A severe storm passed over Quincy, Ill., on the morning of June 2nd, doing considerable damage to property.

—Our correspondent, who does not give his address, but has written a short article entitled, "Hints to Young Ladies," will please try his hand on another subject. With proper training he may become a good writer. This is the only way we have of reaching him.

—Some of our correspondents take the common note paper, spread it out and write the lines clear across both pages. This makes it very inconvenient for our compositors. The common note paper page is sufficiently wide for manuscript purposes without spreading out.

—The Brethren at the Waldman's Grove district, Stephenson Co., Ill., will hold their Love-feast at their meeting-house, two miles North of Lena, on the 20th and 21st of June, commencing at one o'clock. A general invitation given.—E. Ely.

—In answer to an inquiry, we will state that Bro. B. R. Gerhart's address is Danbury, Neb. It will be found among the gleanings in No. 20.

—A correspondent of Eel River township, sends the Fort Wayne, Ind., Sentinel, an account of the death of a young man, named Perry Koltz, who died some little time since at the age of 20 years. On Friday night Koltz had attended a dance. On Saturday morning he got up and while putting on his shoes, one of his shoestrings broke, when he began to curse and swear in a terrible manner. He was instantly stricken with a fit, and died without speaking another word. The people of Eel River township regard this strange death as a sudden and awful dispensation of Divine Providence, and a terrible warning to profane swearers. Truly God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap.—Herald of Truth.

They were refugees from the famine-stricken district, and sheltered in a large relief depot, surrounded with a strong fence of reeds and millet stalks plastered with mud, and having but one place of exit. THE GROWTH OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

FEW scholars even are aware of the great changes through which the English language has passed in successive centuries. Following are specimens of the Lord's Prayer as used at various periods in English history:

A. D. 1158.—Fader ur in hevene, hale weide beith thi neune, cumin thi kuneriche, thi wille beoth idon in heune and in erthe. The curyen dawe bried, gif ous thilk dawes. And vorzic uer dettes as vi yorsifen ure dettoures. And lene us nought into tentation, hot delyvor eus of evel. Amen.

A. D. 1300.—Fadir ure in hevenc, Halewyd be thi name, thi kingdom come, thi wille be don as in hevenc and en erthe. Our urche days bred give us to daye. And forgive oure dettes as we forgive oure dettoures. And lead us not in temptation, bote delyvor us of yvel. Amen.

A. D. 1370.—Oure fadir that art in hennes hollowid be thi name, thi kingdom come to, be thi wille done in erthe as in heune, geve to us this day oure breed oure other substance, forgene to us oure dettes as we forgaune to our dettouris, lede not into temptation; but delyvuer us yvel. Amen.

A. D. 1524.—O our father which arte in heven, hallowed be thy name. Let thy kingdom come. Thy wyoll be fulfilled as well in earth as it is in heven. Give us this daye our dayly brede. And forgive us our trespaces even as we forgive our trespassers. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from vell. For thyne is the kingdome and the power and the glorye for ever. Amen.

A. D. 1581.—Our father which art in heaven, sanctified by thy name. Let thy kingdome come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, in earth also. Give us to-day our superstantial bread. And forgive us our dettes as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation. But deliver us from evil. Amen.

A. D. 1611.—Our father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day dayley bread. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lede us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thyne is the kingdome, and the power, and the glory for ever. Amen.

The above is worthy of preservation. It shows very vividly how the English language, as we now have it, has changed and grown in 700 years, until it has reached its present form and shape. All living languages are subject to slow changes—hardly noticed by one generation of men, but plain enough when we institute a comparison between distant times. The English language is not yet perfect, and will probably undergo as great changes in the future as in the past.—Religious Telescope.

"The church is God's jewelry—His working house, where His jewels are polished for His palace; and those He especially esteems and means to make most resplendent He hath oftenest His tools upon them." Let none of them shrink from the Master's touch, though it be the severest affliction. Those whom he loveth he chasteneth."

"Truth will not arrange any person's opinions in the capacity of a target of error, for some other erring gunner to shoot at. It will simply, kindly shine, and lovingly enlighten all concerned with it. However rusty any may be, few, or none will sit willingly still, and quietly be rubbed until they shine brightly; for they will think, and with some good reasons too, that the dust, made in the process of scouring, will so blind the eyes of the operators, that they will never see the shining."

The German Baptist Publication Society of America, have recently completed and dedicated a handsome and costly building in the interest of the Society. The organization of this enterprise took place in 1866, and it has enjoyed a career of remarkable prosperity under the superintendence of P. W. Bicknell. The number of German Baptist ministers since 1851 has increased from 5 to 134; and the number of church members from 401 to about 8,000. So says one of our exchanges, which proves that there is another body of religious people known as German Baptist, but we, who have been formerly called German Baptists, prefer to be known by the endearing appellation of Brethren.

A HOME.

WHAT is a home? A guarded space
Wherein a few, unfairly blest,
Shall sit together, face to face,
And bask and purr and be at rest?

Where cushioned walls rise up between
Its inmates and the common air,
The common pain, and pad and screen
From blows of Fate or winds of care?

Where art may blossom strong and free,
And pleasure furl her silken wing,
And every laden moment be
A precious and peculiar thing?

And past and future, softly veiled
In hiding mists, shall float and lie,
Forgotten half, and unassailed
By either hope or memory.

While the luxuriant present weaves
Her perfumed spells untried, untrue,
Broilers her garments, heaps her sheaves,
All for the pleasure of a few?

Can it be this—the longed-for thing
Which wanders on the restless foam,
Unsheltered beggars, birds on wing,
Aspire to, dream of, Christian "home?"

No. Art may bloom, and peace and bliss;
Grief may refrain and Death forget;
But if there be no more than this,
The soul of home is wanting yet.

Dim image from far glory caught,
Fair type of fairer things to be,
The true home rises in our thought
As beacon for all men to see.

Its lamps burn freely in the night;
Its fire-glow unhidden shed
Their cheering and abounding light
On homeless folk uncomfited.

Each sweet and secret thing within
Gives out a fragrance on the air—
A thankful breath, sent forth to win
A little smile from others' care.

The few, they bask in closer heat;
The many catch the farther ray.
Life higher seems, the world more sweet,
And hope and heaven less far away.

So the old miracle anew
Is wrought on earth and proved good,
And crumbs apportioned for a few,
God bless, suffice a multitude.

THE CROSS AND CROWN.

BY E. L. T. WESTZ.

IN reading about the suffering and death of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, we find in the 19th chapter of St. John, these words: "And he bearing his cross, went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha: Where they crucified him, and two others with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst." How humiliating, thus to die! Dear readers, when we think of the boundless love of our heavenly Father, who gave His only begotten Son to be sacrificed on the Cross as an atonement for the sins of a lost and ruined world, that we, through Him, might be saved from everlasting misery and woe; and think of our blessed Redeemer—the meek and lowly Jesus—who for love of us, in obedience to His Father's will, was willing to bear the Cross, to bleed and die upon the Cross—guilty of no crime, that we, through His suffering, might be made free, and inherit eternal life. Should not our hearts be filled with love and gratitude to that Supreme Being who has thus opened a way whereby sinners may be saved from death and destruction? Should not we be willing to bear the Cross, to give up the vain and sinful pleasures of the world which can give us no true happiness, and strive to obtain that perfect joy that remains for the children of God? Yes, it is our duty, as well as privilege to accept this kind offer of salvation before it is forever too late. We are naturally prone to wander, and Satan is ever ready to lead the wandering feet astray. Especially does he try those who have made a public profession of religion, to get them to turn aside from that straight and narrow path that leads to heaven. But we should stand firm; ever looking forward with an eye of faith to that beautiful world where we shall be free from the tempter's snare. Our Savior has said: "No man having put his hand to the plough and looking back, is fit for the Kingdom of God" (Luke 9: 62). It therefore becomes necessary that we fight valiantly to overcome every obstacle that Satan may place in our way. We must expect trials as we journey through life; they are sometimes sent to check us, to bring us nearer to the Cross, and help us more plainly to see our unworthiness, and seek help from on high. Oh that we could be more faithful in doing our duty! The Savior says, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily, and follow me" (Luke 9: 23). Again He says, "Whosoever doth not bear his cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple" (Luke 14: 27). What is to be our promised reward, if we prove faithful to the end? A spotless robe and a crown of glory will be ours eternally in heaven. Jesus has borne the Cross, endured the pain, and is now wearing the crown, sitting at the right hand of God; and we are to be heirs and joint heirs with him in glory, if we do our Father's will.

We are very apt to complain, and think our trials very great, forgetting that without a contest there can be no victory, and without victory there will be no crown. May we ever strive so to live, that we may have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city.

EXCUSE-MAKING.

BY D. M. BUTTERBAUGH.

THE subject that I have selected to write upon is a very important one—one that is of far greater importance than many think. Look and see what Luke has to say about this matter of excuses (Luke 14: 18-25). Look again at Rom. 1: 20; 2: 15; 2 Cor. 12: 19. Read and see what our Lord and Savior says about this matter of excuse-making. We find people making a great many excuses in this day and age of the world, as well as in Christ's time, that do not amount to anything.

I find that in getting subscribers for the BRETHERN AT WORK, those brethren who are the best off in this world's goods, make more excuses than those who are poor. They are sometimes, like this: The paper costs too much, and that they can get the Post and Mail of Chicago, or some other paper for half the money. Now, those papers are very good in their place, but they do not contain reading matter that is of any use to the Christian, or the building up of his soul's welfare. Those very brethren have large families growing up around them. They must and will have something to read; if they do not have suitable books and papers placed at their disposal, they will be very apt to take to reading novels or other worthless books; for this world is full of such books, and when children once get their minds centered on these books it is no easy matter to get them back into the right channel. Brethren, do not let your children rise up in the judgment, on that great day and say, that "You did not provide for me suitable books and papers, and encourage me to read things that would have been of some benefit to me. You did not do so, and now I must go down to destruction." O, brethren, there will be no time then for you to make excuses.

Let us do what we can in this world for the cause of our Master, and then we will have nothing to regret of in the world to come.

The BRETHERN AT WORK makes its weekly visits to our home, and is read with great pleasure by all of the family. May God bless the dear brethren editors, and may they be the cause of bringing many souls to Christ, through the medium of their paper.

ON PRAYER.

BY D. S. T. BUTTERBAUGH.

PRAYER is the greatest privilege that the Almighty has granted unto us creatures. By prayer, we can hold, as it were, sweet converse with our heavenly Father. By prayer, we can obtain forgiveness, through Christ, for all our sins. By prayer, we can call down the grace of God to assist us in time of need, and to prepare us for eternity. Prayer, secures the protection of heaven. Prayer, teaches us to be dependent and submissive to higher powers. Prayer prospers all our works, and invokes the blessing of God to rest upon them. Prayer is the greatest consolation in danger, necessity, or tribulation. Prayer spiritualizes the mind, purifies the affections, enlightens the intellect, and secures for us the assistance of God, without which we can do nothing.

CLOSE COMMUNION.

C. H. KINGEY.

IT is often asked why we hold close communion? One reason is, this: sometimes there are members excommunicated from the church, and then join other denominations without even making satisfaction to the church, and then to commune with such members, would be inconsistent. And how could we avoid it, if we would hold open communion with all that wanted to? Again, there are but few other denominations that believe in the Lord's Supper, and Feet-washing as we do, and for them to come and engage in washing feet, and partake of the Lord's Supper merely to commune with us, and not believe in the two first ordinances, would be to commit a great sin; for Paul said that "work without faith is sin." It would cause such to eat and drink unworthily, and not discern the Lord's body, therefore would eat and drink damnation to themselves, and we do not want any one damned, but want all saved.

THE SAVIOR.

Description of Jesus by Publius Lentulus, President of Judea in the reign of Tiberius Caesar.

THERE lives, at this time, in Judea a man of singular virtue, whose name is Jesus Christ, whom the barbarians esteem as a prophet, but his followers love and adore him as the offspring of the immortal God. He calls back the dead from their graves, and heals all sorts of diseases with a word or a touch. He is a tall man, and well shaped; of an amiable and reverend aspect; his hair of a color that can hardly be matched, falling into graceful curls, waving about, and parted on the crown of the head, running as a stream to the front after the fashion of the Nazarenes, his forehead high, large and imposing; his cheeks without spot or wrinkle, beautiful with a lovely red; his nose and mouth formed with exquisite symmetry; his beard thick, and of a color suitable to his hair, reaching below his chin, and parting in the middle like a fork; his eyes bright blue, clear and serene; look, innocent, dignified, manly, and mature; in proportion of body, most perfect and captivating; his hands and arms most delectable to behold. He rebukes with majesty, counsels with mildness, his whole address, whether in word or deed, being eloquent and grave. No man has seen him laugh, yet his manners are exceedingly pleasant; but he has wept frequently in the presence of men. He is temperate, modest, and wise; a man, for his extraordinary beauty and divine perfection, surpassing the children of men in every sense.

The Savior is so seldom recognized in profane history that this confirmatory contribution to his perfections is especially valuable.

CHURCH-MEETINGS.

BY J. S. SHELLY.

IN holding church-meetings, we find that always some are staying at home and seem to be careless about matters pertaining to the church. I have been asked what we should do with those members? Our old brethren answered very nicely, working under the Spirit of God, when they said: "Lay the matter before such members, admonish them from time to time to be more faithful; induce them to come, tell them the evils that might be derived from such conduct." But we might here ask ourselves two questions:

1. What is the reason for them staying away?
2. How should we induce them to come?

Is not the reason for them staying away, perhaps, because we do not regard them as we should, in being humble enough to help bear their burdens? Is it not because we are thinking ourselves further advanced than our brethren, and give no heed to what they have to say? Or if they say something that does not just suit us, give them a short answer and give no heed to the proverb, "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but harsh words stir up anger?" Is it not because we do not pray aright for them, that we drive them away, instead of drawing them there? Are not these some of the reasons? It is only too often the case that members are careless and unconcerned, but for such we ought to pray to God, that He should give them a new heart, a willing, helping hand, that they might help to work in the cause of Christ. Admonish them, and if they are not willing, God has His own appointed way. But what shall we do with those that are drawn away by these reasons, with those that, instead of feeling a desire to go, would rather stay at home? For them we ought to pray that God might give them an obedient heart, that He might give them such a desire to come and help, that they could not stay away; and pray Him that He should give us an humble, contrite heart, drive away all self in every matter pertaining to the church and our brethren. We should show them that we have a loving kindness contained in us, that reaches not only to the more prominent members, but also to those who feel that they are not standing as high in positions in the church as others, and we ought to give them to feel, and feel it ourselves, that God has created us all alike in His own image, and that we have all an equal right to express ourselves.

Although He gave five talents to one, and two to another, (for He gave us the talents according to our ability). He gave us all the same promise, if we all work faithful with them; for when that man came home from his journey and found that the one with the five talents had won five more, and the one with two, two more, he did not say to the first, go and rule over the second, but he said to them both, "Go and enter into the joys of your Lord; for you were faithful over a few things, I will make you ruler over many things." O, brethren, let us show love towards each other, that we work not against the will of our Savior, but that we treat all alike, as He does. Make our church-meetings as loving and attractive as possible. If we all had a love in our heart as Christ has, for us, we would all bear each others' burdens, help those along who are weak, and would not want to have some way to force those brethren and sisters to come, for we would all feel, out of love for each other. If we would feel hurt by some brother in meeting, we would forgive him and instead of passing by him, and not seeing him, would clasp hands, administer the kiss of brotherly love, and so work together diligently, that we might receive the reward in these precious words: "O, thou good and faithful servant, thou wast faithful over few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." But to those brethren and sisters that stay away, as it seems, on purpose, to keep ignorant of the rules of the church, I will say, trifle not with the Word of God; trifle not with Christ's church, for trifling with them is trifling with God and His Son, and the punishment of such, will be everlasting destruction.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS.

BY SARAH M. SAUNDERS.

WHILE reflecting on the church and its many privileges and duties, we are made to ask, Do we, as a church, exhibit to the world that degree of holiness that we should? We profess to be followers of the Holy One, and yet it seems that, in some things we may be in danger of paying "tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and yet omit weightier matters." We are very zealous with regard to plainness in dress, especially among the sisters, (which is right), but is that all that is required of the sisters? We think not.

We meet for worship, sing hymns, (which alone the sisters engage in), read a portion of Scripture, unite in prayer, but I have never heard a sister's voice in oral supplication; and why not? Is it because our preacher's or deacon's wives are not competent or gifted enough? or is it because the Gospel says, "Let the women keep silence?" If the latter, then, sisters, let us not attend church-meetings, as we can ask our husbands at home; nor engage in singing in church, for that is not silence.

But as it is right for women to pray in private, so also in public, provided she dishonoreth not her head by being uncovered. Therefore let us improve our talents, though we possess but one, by weekly prayer-meetings in every congregation in the brotherhood; thereby increase our faith, confirm our hope, and perfect us in love. Let the old sisters, minister's and deacon's wives set a godly example for the weaker ones.

THE HOLY LAND FAMINE.

AT the last meeting of the Board of Deputies, the periodical report of the Holy Land Famine Relief Fund was presented together with a large number of letters and telegrams received from Palestine through Sir Moses Montefiore and the Rev. Chief Rabbi. The latter described a state of misery and want which is truly appalling. When we are told that the famine is so severe that from three to seven people die every day, we cannot but come to the conclusion that a calamity has fallen upon the Holy Land which, except in extent, is as terrible as that which recently ravaged India. Mere wordy appeals may now cease, urgent telegrams full of the imploring paraphrase of anguish are now unnecessary; the Jewish communities of Europe are face to face with an awful and terrible fact—their co-religionists in the Holy Land are absolutely dying from want.

—London Jewish World.

If we disobey the dictates of conscience even in the most trifling particular, or allow ourselves to do what we have some fears may not be quite right, we shall grow more and more sleepy, until the voice of conscience has no longer the power to awaken us.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Plattsburg, Mo.

Dear Brethren:—

I having been requested that I should give a report of our District Meeting, I will now proceed to do so.

The meeting for the Northern district of Mo. was held with the Brethren in Harrison Co., this Spring, on the 17th and 18th of May. — Most all the churches throughout the District were represented by delegation. The meeting was in session two days, and some important business was transacted; a number of queries were considered and disposed of by the meeting in a very satisfactory manner indeed, there was that good feeling manifested through the deliberations, that is commendable to such bodies. — There seemed to be such a oneness as a body, that we felt to say as Jacob did when he laid down on the rocky knoll, "The Lord has been here."

Among the most important business that was up, was the mission work of Northern Mo. — For a number of years this matter had been considered, but nothing could be accomplished to get the mission in a good co-operation with the District. At this meeting there was such a feeling in favor of the mission, that the meeting thought the time had fully come to open the door for the work, that it might commence in a way that all could assist in the noble work of evangelizing the District and preaching where the Gospel has not been preached by the Brethren.

There were two set apart for the above work, namely Bro. W. B. Sell and C. C. Root as evangelists, and also a board of directors to manage and control the mission. Upon the whole the meeting was a pleasant one, and the Brethren at Long Branch did all to make their guests comfortable, that could be expected, and at the close of the meeting we all partook of a Love-feast together, which made the occasion one, long to be remembered.

Bro. John Forney was with us, and gave us his experience and fatherly advice in many things, for which he has our heart-felt thanks. When the time for separation had arrived, there seemed to be such a feeling of sorrow and sadness, mingled with gladness and joy, that no tongue can tell or pen describe. We all left for our various fields of labor again, trusting we will act out our part in life, and finally be happy on the evergreen shores of eternity.

Fraternally,

D. D. SELL.

Another "Candlestick."

Dear Brethren:—

MAY 3rd, had been appointed for organizing a church in Bro. John Barnhart's neighborhood, Piatt Co., Ill., and according to appointment I met Bro. John Metzger at the house of Bro. John Barnhart. By ten o'clock the brethren and sisters had come together, and proceeded to hold a choice for a deacon, which choice fell on Bro. John Horsh, who accepted the position and was duly installed into the office of deacon.

The organization stands as follows: John Barnhart, minister in the second degree; Christian Barnhart in the first degree; John Horsh, deacon. This congregation is to be known as the Blue Ridge church, Piatt Co., Ill. May the great head of the church work mightily through those instrumentalities to the building up of a large church in Piatt and Champaign counties! Take courage, brethren, and not only preach, but live out the principles of our holy religion, and God will bless you.

The same evening, myself, Bro. John Metzger, John Barnhart and Christian Barnhart, went to the Urbana church, and on the 4th met the brethren in church council. Considerable business was before the meeting, which was disposed of harmoniously. One was baptized. Myself and Bro. John Barnhart went to Ogden, while Bro. Metzger and C. Barnhart stayed at the Urbana church, conducting the services on the 5th, and in addition anointing with oil, sister Bishop, who was very low at that time, but has since recovered.

We found large congregations at Ogden, who gave due attention to the Word preached. Had four meetings in town and one in the country; made some acquaintances and were pleased with the prospects generally. God bless the people; may they take Christ's yoke upon them and find rest for their souls. T. D. LYON.

From English Prairie, Ind.

Dear Brethren:—

WE rejoice to say that the good cause of the Master is on the progress here. To-day one more soul was made willing to be regenerated and to walk in newness of life, and gain a mansion with the blest. We have also organized a Sabbath-school, which, we think, if properly conducted, will result in doing some good. It is truly a good place to instruct the little children, far better than to let them run in evil company.

In order to have a good attendance and good interest, the parents should take an active part; for the young need an example, they need admonition, more especially those that are going on in all the wickedness and folly of this world. How sad it is to hear a young man denounce the religion of his parents, and see him walk in the broad road that leadeth to destruction. Let us think of death, and prepare for it; and after time's changing scenes have all passed away, we shall meet in the presence of our heavenly Benefactor, — our joy and happiness shall be eternal and complete! A. E. KEAGY.

From Liberty, Illinois.

Dear Brethren:—

LAST Saturday, a week ago, the 11th, inst., we held a little communion meeting near Loraine, some twenty miles North of here, at the house of Bro. H. W. Strickler. The attendance was not very large, owing to the unfavorable weather, I suppose; as it rained most of the time. The best of order prevailed during the evening services, better than I ever witnessed before. The audience was so very attentive that not a whisper was heard during the entire evening.

I do not suppose that more than half a dozen of the entire audience ever saw the like before. Four sat at the Lord's table for the first time in their lives. I hope they may so conduct themselves that they may live to enjoy many such communion seasons. May we all so live as to be counted worthy of a seat at the great Supper, at the end of the world.

The ministering brethren present, were, D. Wolfe; W. R. Lierle; John Clingsmith of Barry, Pike Co.; and H. W. Strickler. Brethren Lierle and Clingsmith did nearly all the preaching, as Bro. David's health was too poor to labor much. None joined the church, but many deep impressions were made among the audience. I think there was seed sown, that in time will grow and yield much fruit for the Master's use. JOHN WOLFE.

Dear Brethren:—

ON this beautiful Sabbath morning I will try to let you know how Zion is prospering in this part of the brotherhood. Though we are but few in number, we are still trying to live in such a manner as may be well-pleasing in the sight of God, and a light to the children of man.

Bro. S. C. Stump from Falls City came to us May 4th and held some meetings at Dorchester and vicinity, which resulted in some good, as there were three made willing to come out on the side of the Lord, to declare by the act of baptism, that they were tired of the sinful pleasures of the world. This gave us much cause to rejoice, and I believe that not only we were made glad, but that also the angels in heaven rejoiced to see sinners turn to Christ.

Two of those baptized were man and wife, and while witnessing their baptism, we were made to think how appropriate and evangelical it is, to see the heads of a family enjoying the same privilege of worshiping, and engaging in all the other ordinances of God's house in the same manner. Surely, the blessings of God will rest upon every family, where His name is honored.

I do wish that our Brethren would send out more missionaries into all the world to proclaim the Gospel of peace to every creature, for it is often asked: "What kind of people are the Brethren? The doctrine is so strange; we have not heard such preaching before." There is a great anxiety manifested by all, to hear the Brethren preach, and it is our prayer to God, that their desire may be satisfied at no distant day. L. SUTTON.

Dear Brethren:—

I LEFT home May 15th, to go to Ashland, O. Arrived safely on the 29th. First, after taking a little rest, went to visit the College building that is now being erected by the Brethren at Ashland. It is a very fine location, elevated above the city and surrounding country, and can be seen for miles around. They have twenty-seven acres of land for college purposes, with an excellent spring on the premises, from which water can easily be carried to the top of the building. I feel confident that it will prove a success, and will certainly afford a very pleasant place to attend school.

Then went four miles North to their church-house and continued meeting until June 2nd. The Lord blessed the labors, and fifteen dear souls were added to the church by baptism, and others promised that they would come soon. — May the good Lord bless them and may they soon come to Jesus.

We had a Communion June 1st. It was indeed a feast of rich things. May the Lord bless all the brethren and sisters for their kindness, administered to us while among them. On Sabbath evening we bid one another farewell; perhaps never to meet anymore on earth. Arrived at home June 3rd and found all moderately well, thanks to God.

Meditations.

Dear Brethren:—

AS I walked through the Public Park of Quincy, in the shade of the evening, after the great luminary of the day had drawn around him his evening mantle, and sunk to rest in the far West, there was heard a mingling of voices and tinkling of cimbals. I looked and beheld, like one of old, the vanity of vanities.

I was made to think how many precious moments were being lost forever and forever; how many pennies or widow's mites might have been cast into the Lord's treasury, instead of being squandered for worse than useless amusements. Yes, I thought, how many poor and helpless creatures were hid away in close garrets, and other dismal places, wanting for the necessaries of life. Even while looking down upon the scenes of mirth, they see their fellow-men surrounded by all the luxuries, wealth affords; while the poor have to suffer for the want of the necessary means of subsistence.

Then I wondered how long these things would be suffered thus to continue? But after a prolonged consideration, I was forced to leave it with one, who is able to solve all problems. My thoughts were carried back to my youthful days and actions. How many moments, hours, and even days were spent in idleness, when we might have studied? How many rich laurels and bright gems might have crowned our age, if we had only put the spare moments to the best advantage.

Can we ever recall the lost moments, can we ever find a place in which we could have inserted the sparkling gems, which are to form our crown of life? Let us not neglect our opportunities. A man wakes up at the age of forty, and finds that his youth has been wasted. He then strives to get back his early advantages. Does he get back the days of his boyhood, his school-time, and the time for the acquirement of useful knowledge?

Many a one exclaims: "If I could only get them back again, the days of my youth, how I would improve them." My dear young friends and fellow-travelers, you can never get them back again. They are gone forever, though you may be very sorry for it, and God may forgive you, so that you may at last reach heaven; but you will never get over some of your mishaps that have come to your soul from neglect of early duty. You may try to undo it, but you cannot.

When you had a boy's arms, a boy's eyes, a boy's heart and mind, you ought to have attended to those duties. How often do we hear a man at the age of fifty years say: "I do wish I could shake off those evil habits of indolence." If we ask him, where he got them, he will inevitably declare, "twenty-five or thirty years ago." If we urge him to shake them off, since he has now become stronger, he will tell you he cannot; they cleave to him as the skin to the bone, their presence will continue to the verge of death.

If a young man, through a long course of evil conduct, undermines physical health and strength, and then repents of it in after-life, the Lord may pardon him, but that does not bring back good mental and physical condition, so that he may enjoy the bliss of a well-spent life.

Ask some of our ministering brethren to-day, why they are so early disabled from performing the precious duties to which they were called, they will tell you, they are suffering from the physical effects of early sins: "I cannot preach now, I am sick, etc." A consecrated man he now is, but means bitterly over early sins. — That however does not arrest their bodily effects, the simple fact is, that men and women often take twenty years of their life to build up influences that require all the rest of their lives to break down.

Talk about a man beginning life when he is twenty-one years of age, talk about a woman beginning life when she is eighteen years of age; from my observations I would say, not so, for in many instances that is the time they close it. In very many cases all the questions of eternity are settled before that date. Talk about men losing their portions between thirty and forty, they often get and lose their portion between ten and twenty.

When you tell me a certain man is just beginning life, I perceive he is just closing it. The next fifty years will not be of as much importance to him as the first twenty.

Now some one may ask, "Why do you say this? Is it for the annoyance of those who have only a baleful retrospective?" No, that is not my intention. I simply say it for the benefit of those young men and women, who are so recklessly and thoughtlessly rushing headlong into the deceits of vanity and idleness. My desire is, that they should understand that eternity is wrapped up in this hour, that the sins of youth will leave their puns, even in after-life, that you are now fashioning the mold in which the great future is to turn.

You see, therefore, what dignity and importance this gives to the life of all our young men and women! In the light of this understanding, life is something, not to be idled away, not something to be smirked about, not something to be danced or flirted out, but something to be weighed out in the balances of eternity. O young man and young woman, the sin of yesterday, the sin of to-morrow will reach over ten thousand years, will reach beyond the grave, yes, will reach over the never-ending eternity.

The time may be coming when you will say: "I am very sorry that I was not a better man and woman in my younger days; now I am an old man, an aged woman, I do wish I had not committed those sins, they press me sore, and hang horribly over me." But what does all that amount to? True, God may pardon you, but undo them you cannot; hence take warning. Go not in the paths of the evil one, shun the paths of vice and folly, improve your time while you may; for soon you will be called up by your great Teacher and review the days of your pilgrimage, which will close with the going down of the sun of your life. May God help us all to spend our time to the good of our souls, and the glory of His holy name.

Dear Brethren:—

HERE it goes: Tick! Tick! Tick!—There are some flies buzzing at the window, some birds singing outside, but how calm and still, how quiet within.

I am lulled into a reverie. We have been contending for the Sabbath-day, have been wielding the sword of the Spirit. The battle is fought and the mind reposes, seeks rest,—wonders what the Lord's reward may be. Rest? Yes, rest.—"There remaineth a rest for the people of God." It seems to be stealing over me. There! One, two, three, and still the wire rings. O how solemn! My pen has paused till the reverberations have crept far away in the dim distance. Now I only hear it ringing in my ears. The hour is gone nevermore to return.

Will it return? It seemed to me that I would like to follow it, as I heard it ascending, stealing away. But the Spirit seems to say, "Not yet." "Yet a little while." Aye, 'tis so, that calm quiet hour makes way for another and another, and that brings us to another spiritual conflict, that is to be fought to-night,—Sabbatism, Sabbatarianism, Soul-sleepism, Judaism, and many other "isms," all to be met to-night by our brother, "Captain Valiant for truth;" weapons, the Word of God on the one side and the steam printing press at Battle Creek, Michigan on the other. Seculars, the Holy Spirit and the eleven-foot. Ground, right at the margin of the beautiful, clear Gospel-field, where Satan has entrenched himself in the thick ragged jungles of sectarianism. This affords ample facilities for dodging the home-thrusts of the two-edged sword.

But so it is. We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against spiritual wickedness everywhere, in high places and in low places; and while we wrestle, we pray that our thigh may not be put out of joint.

Bro. Miller had his Walker, Quinter his McConnell and Snyder, Stein his Ray, Paul his Tyrannus,—and we have some of his scholars.

To Bro. W. Spangole I would say we desire your spiritual labors, and have much need of your help. Our field is very large, and many points within ten or twelve miles have no preaching at all. We thus publicly extend to you a hearty welcome to come and make your home among us. We shall do all for you, temporally and spiritually, that we can do. We are still limited in means and have to be contented to rank with poor churches, but we have a good country, a good God and a good will to do good. May God bless us!

Praternally,

GLEANINGS.

From LaGrange, Ind.—I have been thinking of writing you for some time past, from this part of God's moral heritage. It has been about a year since I counted the cost, turned from my evil ways, and have now found the peace as it is in Jesus. There are a few of us (Brethren) living on the dividing line between the Lapold church and the Hawpatch church. We have meetings here every two weeks, conducted by Bro. Lair; and prayer-meeting every Tuesday night at our school-house. I take the paper and would not do without it in my family for double the cost.

W. A. PAYSTER.

From Iowa Center, Ia.—The good cause here in the Indian Creek church is still advancing. I think we have never, in the history of our little church, had brighter prospects for a large ingathering of souls than at present. Since last Christmas, we have received seven into fellowship, with several more applicants at present. Our members all seem to be in sympathy with the Danish Mission. At present we are having much rain, though crops all look quite promising. Fruit somewhat damaged by frost on the 12th of May. Some small fruit will be very abundant.

D. E. BRUBAKER.

From David Norcross.—We as a little band of brethren and sisters feel somewhat encouraged and built up. Bro. Joseph B. Sell and family, of Elk Lick, Somerset Co., Pa., arrived here on the 24th of April 1878. He seems to have learned of Christ after the Apostolic pattern, is frank and open-hearted. His appearance and manner of daily walk and conversation does not give any foundation to think that he is in possession of a narrow or contracted soul, but is in good keeping with the Scriptures which says, "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." Our desires are that we may soon have the privilege of sending you the good news that many are turning from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God.

Shoals, Ind.

From Henry C. Swank.—Bro. John Metzger has been here several times preaching to the people. It has a good effect. He baptized two, which makes nineteen members here now. Myself and wife were the first here. Prospects good for more. One year ago there were no members here.

Maryville, Ill.

From South Bend, Ind.—Bro. Robert Miller came to us on May 29th, and preached one sermon. One applicant came forward to be received into the church of the living God, which was attended to yesterday, after our Sabbath-school closed. We left the meeting-house and met at the liquid stream, with almost the entire school to witness our young sister entering into covenant relationship, by faith, repentance and baptism. What a grand thought, and how consoling it is to know that the Saviour has provided salvation, and says: "Come, for I am meek and lowly in heart."

D. WHITMER.

From C. H. Balshagh.—In writing of human destiny I do not forget that what suits man's constitution, does not always suit his condition. Grace is slowly preparing him for all the objective grandeur and beauty which symbolizes his inner being as God made it. What would have only fed my vanity twenty years ago, now nourishes my soul. All the splendors of the celestial architecture, all the gorgeonsness of color that floods the saints and their everlasting Home, are in perfect harmony with what grace is almost imperceptibly making now. If sin had not corrupted our moral nature, there would be no necessity of sackcloth and self-crucifixion. Just in proportion as we can enjoy anything in God, we bring so much of the gold and gems and brilliancy of the New Jerusalem into the present.—No Christian is permitted to covet or indulge what is intrinsically wrong. But all the great and glorious items of our original inheritance become a lance by sin.

Self-righteousness was the glory of primeval man; now it is destruction. He was originally a universal free-holder, now it is easier for a camel to pass through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to be saved. And yet there are rich saints. And all saints acquire in Christ a righteousness which is properly their own. So with many other things. As we grow in grace, become truly self-possessed in the second Adam, we return to our primitive condition and privileges. It is the most difficult thing in life to get all our tastes and preferences out of the new creature. Likenesses and wall pictures are in many families in the brotherhood an unmitigated curse. There is nothing Christian in the principle of their selection or exhibition. But the pictorial representation of a sacred fact is not inherently wrong, but vice versa; only it is generally unsafe to indulge this central but corrupted element in our nature, this side of the great Picture Gallery of the Upper Temple.

From E. Shuck.—I would say that your paper is giving good satisfaction here to all who read it. We have a small but earnest church here, and also a Sabbath-school which is doing well and growing in favor. The season is very forward, but the month, so far, has not been as April. Crops are fine in appearance, and harvest will be very early. Fruit will be in abundance if not yet destroyed.

Several scores of preachers are needed in Kansas, and we don't care if they are not the very best of orators. If they only preach and live Christ and Him crucified, they can do much good in this State. Send them along.

From J. W. Metzger.—I went to West Lebanon, Warren Co., Ind., May 18th. Met Bro. R. H. Miller and father there. Had several meetings, and on the 21st met in church council; held an election for two deacons. The lot fell on brethren William B. Goodrick and Jeremiah Ransom. Hope they may be faithful in their calling. There was also one added by baptism. May the good Lord bless the little flock and hold them together as His dear lambs. There were also arrangements made to give them monthly meetings.

Bible Translations.

The following is abridged from a sermon, delivered in Chicago by Philip Schaff, and is given here on account of its interesting contents:

"As long as the true religion was confined to the Hebrew race, that language was sufficient as a medium, and as long as the Apostles made themselves understood in Greek, that was sufficient; but as they scattered, it became necessary to translate the Hebrew Scriptures into Greek, which was done 300 years before Christ.

When the Christian religion spread among the Romans, a translation into the Latin became essential; and when Christianity spread among the Northern and Western barbarians, the task of the church in civilizing them, required translations into their languages. The people in the dark ages depended for much of their knowledge of the Bible on preaching, as copies which were written out, were possessed by but a few, on account of their expensiveness. The translation of the Bible into a language, was generally the beginning of the literature of the nation which spoke the language. The first English translation was made in the eighth century by the venerable Bede.

Those of the sixteenth century were greatly superior to the previous translations, since the renderings were not mechanical, stiff, starchy and heavy, but fresh reproductions of the spirit of the original. The English version, upon the whole, was the best ever made,—the most accurate, and an unspeakable blessing to the Anglo-Saxon race.

But the question arose, whether Christians were to be satisfied with a version coming from a single denomination, the Church of England? Should not all denominations have something to say in the version to be used in the churches and families? Could the old Bible be made clearer and stronger, without introducing confusion and strife? The language had sufficiently changed within the last 250 years to justify and necessitate slight changes in the present translation with a view to make the Bible generally intelligible.—The idiom and vernacular were the best we could have, and would be good to the end of time. Any change in them would grate upon the ears and disturb sacred associations. Some attempts had been made to change to the idiom of the nineteenth century; but substituting "a certain excellent gentleman," for "a certain rich man," would not do.

What was needed, was simply a revision of the old version. Quite a number of the words were obsolete; others had so changed their meanings, that they now conveyed the very opposite ideas from what they did in the Bible.—There were certain errors of the translators, resulting from imperfect knowledge of the original languages; and there were also printer's errors, and a great many inconsistencies,—one and the same word being translated in different ways, thus giving the reader the impression, that different ideas were to be conveyed.

Distinctions between the Greek and Hebrew were obliterated. As an instance could be mentioned, Hades and Sheol. The former meant the unseen world—the world of the departed—the spirit world; and Gehenna the place of torment; yet in our version these two words were translated alike. Sheol meant hell, grave, death and should be kept distant from Hades. The words devil and demon were also confounded. There were also a great many infelicities and inaccuracies in rendering the Greek particles and tenses. Intelligent people believed that the italicized words denoted emphasis, whereas they were interpolations of the translators for the purpose of making the meaning clearer. In most cases, they were of no earthly use whatever, and in many weakened the original force of the language. Another defect was the obliteration of all distinction between poetry and prose. There was room for a great many real improvements in our version, which would make it more intelligible, clear and forcible, and bring the Word of God nearer to the heart and mind. The only question then is how to bring this about.

Terrific Storm in Ray Co., Mo.

A terrific cyclone struck Richmond at 3:30 o'clock P. M. June 2d, 1878. It swept through the central portion, leveling everything in its path, a breadth of 300 yards, demolishing buildings to their foundations, stripping trees of their bark and foliage, and leveling everything as it swept by a torrent. It came in the shape of funnel, and formed about two miles from the city, the morning having been intensely warm, and approached slowly, destroying everything by its whirl, and was at least five minutes sweeping through the town, numbering among its victims some of the best citizens. The cyclone literally destroyed one-third of the place, embracing the postoffice, Presbyterian and Baptist churches, and at least seventy-five private residences.

The cyclone was the color of steam, and at times the funnel shape cloud would break open in places and emit what looked like black smoke, then gather together again, and with increased force continue on its march of destruction. At first it approached slowly,—not faster, perhaps than a man could walk. Then it moved faster, leveling everything in its path with the ground, and producing almost complete devastation.

Debris of the city have been found fourteen miles away. A perfect panic prevailed for a time, but order and comparative calm was restored, and the killed and wounded provided for. Amidst the wails of women and children and the groans of the dying, strong men shed tears to witness the general destruction, and the death and suffering of relatives and friends. Some fifteen were killed and about forty wounded more or less.

Whooping Cough.

The Herald of Truth, published at Elkhart, Ind., gives the following simple method of curing Whooping Cough:

"Make a tea of the heads of red clover when in full bloom, sweeten with good white sugar, and drink freely of it. A cure will be effected in a few days.

This simple remedy has been tried by a number here, and in every case it proved successful.—As the clover is now in bloom it is the right time to gather and dry them for a time of need."

The Doctrine of the Brethren Defended.—This a work of over 400 pages, lately published in defense of the faith and practice of the Brethren on the following points: The Divinity of Christ and the Holy Spirit, Immersion vs. Albatism, Trine Immersion, Feet-washing, the Holy Kiss, Non-conformity or Plainness of Dress, and Anti-Secretism. The work is complete, and is so arranged that the arguments on each subject may be easily found and understood. It should have a wide circulation, both among members and the world. The work is printed in large, plain type, is neatly bound in cloth, and sells at the low price of $1.50 per copy by mail. When ordered by the dozen, a reduction of 10 per cent and the express charges will be made. The work may be had at this office or from the author, R. H. Miller, Logansport, Ind.

One Baptism.—A dialogue showing that true immersion is the only ground of union, that can be conscientiously occupied by the leading denominations of Christendom. By J. H. Moore. One copy, 15 cents; 10 copies, $1.00; 25 copies, $2.00.

Brethren's Hymn Books.—1 copy Turkey Morocco, post-paid, $1.00; per dozen, post-paid, $11.00; per dozen by express, $10.00. 1 copy Arabesque or Sheep, post-paid, 75 cents; per dozen, post-paid, $8.25; per dozen by express, $7.25. When ordering hymn books sent by express, it is expected that the purchaser will pay the express charges at the office where the books are received.

Sabbatism.—By M. M. Eschelman. 16 pages, price 10 cents; 10 copies $1.00. Treats the Sabbath question, briefly showing that the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath passed away with all other Jewish days, and that the "first day of the week," is the preferred day for Christians to assemble in worship.

The Brethren at Work.

A RELIGIOUS WEEKLY.

EDITED AND PUBLISHED BY

J. H. MOORE & M. M. ESHELMAN.

THE BROTHERS AT WORK is an uncompromising advocate of Proactive Christianity in all its ancient purity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice.

And maintains that the sovereign, unmerited, unsolicited grace of God is the only source of pardon, and

That the vicarious sufferings and meritorious works of Christ are the only price of redemption.

That Faith, Repentance and Baptism are conditions of pardon, and hence for the remission of sins.

That Trine Immersion or dipping the candidate three times face-forward is Christian Baptism.

That Feet-Washing, as taught in John 13, is a divine command to be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening, or after the close of the day.

That the Salvation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That a Non-Conformity to the world in dress, customs, daily walk and conversation is essential to true holiness and Christian piety.

It maintains that in public worship, or religious exercises, Christians should appear as directed in 1 Cor. 11:4, 5.

It also advocates the scriptural duty of Anointing the sick with oil in the name of the Lord.

In short it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the Apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe.

THE OLDEST CHRISTIAN HYMN.

This hymn was written in Greek. It is regarded as the most ancient hymn of the early Christian church. The earliest record we have of it, is one hundred and fifty years after the apostles, by Clement of Alexandria. It is stated in connection with it, that it was still of much earlier origin. It may have been sung by the "beloved disciple" before he ascended to his reward. The following version will give some imperfect idea of the spirit of this Christian lyric:

Shepherd of tender youth,
 Guiding in love and truth,
 Through devotions ways;
 Christ, our triumphant King
 We come thy name to sing,
 And here our children bring
 To silent thy praise.

Thou art our holy Lord!
 The all-subduing Word,
 Healer of strife!
 Thou dost thyself abase!
 That from sin's deep disgrace
 Thou mightest save our race,
 And give us life.

Thou art wisdom's High Priest!
 Thou hast prepared the feast
 Of holy love;
 And in our mortal pain,
 None call on thee in vain;
 Help thou dost not disdain,
 Help from above.

Ever be thou our Guide,
 Our Shepherd and our pride,
 Our staff and song
 Jesus, thou Christ of God!
 By the perennial word,
 Lead us where thou hast trod,
 Make our faith strong.

OUR HIGH CALLING.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

WHEN God blows the trumpet, He gives no uncertain sound. When He undertakes to make man, it does not turn out an ape. His eagles are not hatched into butterflies. We were created in His image, and needed anew in Christ Jesus to higher than primeval glory. He is to be conceived of by His works. Rom. 9: 20. His highest work is the incarnation—the revelation of His Personality in human mould. "As He is, so are we in this world." 1 John 4: 17. Born of God, enshrining God, like God—this is our high calling.

Emmanuel is not only "God with us," but in our nature. This is the Commission of Redemption. Not only in our nature, but in personality; this is the habitation. The "high calling of God" is a call to Divine continuity on the basis of the incarnation, through the dwelling of the Holy Ghost. The first indwelling of Deity in Eden, although the communication of an immortal essence, was no incarnation of the Divine Personality. The inspiration of that constitutional element was the ground or possibility of the wonderful permanent, redemptive becoming of Deity through the flesh and blood of the Virgin Mother. The real indwelling of God in our nature is a fact so transcendently sublime and awful, and its participation as the absolute condition of salvation so overwhelming solemn, that it is astounding that any can claim brotherhood in this mystery of mysteries while the manifestations of their life indicate the incarnation of selfishness. It is a daring, soul-blighting mockery to put ourselves forth as the representatives of Jesus, while in spirit, aim, conversation, and dress, we dally with the "Mother of Inebriates," and drink of the bitterness of her abominations. The purple, the scarlet color, the trappings of gold, the precious stones and pearls, and all other self-pleasing, world-alluring, soul-forming gewgaws, are seven heads of self-idolatry, and ten horns of defiance, upborne by a blood-dyed monster full of the images of blasphemy, a coming out of the bed-tombless pit, and going into perdition (Rev. 17: 3-9). It is of no avail that we ransack history for pleas of self-indulgence, or exhaust the lexicons of fashionable poetry for terms of justification in our adultery with "the great whore"; the Cross repels them all. Whoever contemplates the life of Jesus, and gazes on His death-agonies, and maintains that in either can be found the faintest support for a lust-gratifying deportment, or a world-mimicking apparel, is a wretched self-deceiver. The "high calling of God in Christ Jesus" is the everlasting condemnation of "the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life." "These are not of the Father, but of the world." 1 John 2: 16, 17. They are the Devil's Trinity—the trident of Appollyon, with which he drags his millions of victims to hell.

"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world;" not only the condemnation, but the sin itself. What a deprecation was that! Hold your breath, ye angels. Be astonished, ye devils. Be amazed, O earth. Behold a groaning, sin-bearing, hell-tasting, wrath-smitten, expiring Godman! Well may Heaven and earth and hell stand agliss, exclaiming, "EURE HUMO!" To choose, defend, and exculpate what caused the humiliation of Emmanuel's life and the horrors of His death, is Decide, O ye flesh-pleasers, ye mammon-worshippers, ye cross-despisers, ye lust-pampering provokers, ye are guilty of the most aggravated first-degree murder. You are spitting in the face of Jesus, laying the lash on His back, thrusting the thorns into His temples, mercilessly driving the nails through His hands and feet, and making the laterness of death more bitter with the gall and myrrh of your derision and spiritual callousity. To "contend with flesh and blood" when we have God humanized for imitation, and the Holy Ghost given as the Inhabiter of "all the fullness of God," is the consummation of folly. The same Spirit that overshadowed the virgin, superintended the ante-natal development of the Divine-human embryo, imparted to the Boy Jesus His "increase in wisdom and stature," kept Him "holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners," and wrought out in His life the perfect Ideal of God, is vouchsafed to all who are born into Divine Brotherhood and fellowship, and with like results according to the measure of each. As in Adam all were sinned, and in him all fell, so all the saints are born of the virgin, actuated by the Spirit of the All-holy Generator, and conformed to the type of "God manifest in the flesh," this is the cycle of Redemption. Outside of this is the blackness of darkness forever. A world-lover, a mammon-idolator, a truth-server, a flesh-pleaser, a fashion-doctor, has no more share in the character and glory of Jehovah-Jesus, than the devil has a right to the beautiful robes of holiness.

That such things must be fought against in the church of God, is a humiliating and freightful consideration. The sigh of the great Apostle comes floating down the ages: "I would they were even cut out as chaff from the mill." Gal. 5: 12. "God is love," and "affliction is not withoutly," "lowly suffering," but when it must, nothing strikes so compassionately. The final love-union of an afused, melted God, will drive the bolt of Eternal Justice irreversibly athwart the everlasting doors of Hell. What He has revealed must be honored. "His word will not return into Him void." It will lift to Heaven or crush into the wrath-flaming abyss. Fundamentals with Him must be fundamentals with us. In the unrevealed He allows us our own judgments. But the non-revelation of the use of our scissors and needles, does not put the humbuggery, flummery, and Christ-coming gauds of the world at our disposal. Emmanuel must have appropriate adjective attestations. Without these He would have been an impostor. Square antagonism to the sinful practices of the world is the leading characteristic of the great Exemplar. Self-sacrifice and humility as expressive of the Divine Mind in relation to the wants of humanity, and the high calling that visits it in the incarnation, are absolute tests for every soul as to its fitness for the fellowship and enjoyment of God. To be saved by the blood of Jesus while we contravene His life, is as impossible as for God and Satan to hold co-equal empire in the person of Emmanuel. To allow regnancy to the corrupt, self-serving elements of our nature in the Mystical Body is a dire calamity.

Sardis is a moral cemetery, and must either slough off, or be revivified, if Smyrna is to be saved from a deluge of profligation. The ecclesia is the palubum of life and the basis of unity. The unconquered is no ground of estrangement or detestation. It is a sad mistake to shift the conditions of the revealed to the unrevealed, and assume prerogatives which God has withheld. But to contend that a Christian can vie with the world in dress and equipage, flare into passion when his will is crossed or his opinions sifted, indulge his lusts under legal cover like any voluptuary, and grasp as greedily for wealth, and cheat God of His tithes, as remorselessly, as any worldling, is a total misapprehension of the nature and purpose of "the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

It is enough to make the angels wring their hands to witness the spectacles around the Lord's Table in some churches. What an array of millinery and God-adorbed vanity! What a contrast to the manifestation of the Divine Ideal of life in Christ Jesus! The swells, and carnal fungi, and lust-flourishing placards that characterize this solemnity in some localities, are as alien to the symbolizing of the Atoning Death, as the whistling of Yankee Doodle by Christ while hanging on the Cross. What is meaningless in the death struggle of the Godman, is not a matter of immateriality to us. To partake of the awful emblems of a sin-bearing, sin-atonement Redeemer with our persons loaded with the emblems of lust and self-worship, is horrible mockery. The fellowship of the Cross does not mean the canonization of the God-dusting, flesh-serving, soul-blackening customs of the world. "O wretched Gadarians, who hath bewitched you?" The high calling of God links us to the consummation of His ends according to the object of the Cross. To ignore this, we falsify our profession, disappoint the angels, and cheat the world. The "principalties and powers in heavenly places" are the pupils of Divine Wisdom through the evolution of His purpose in the church. Eph. 3: 10, 11. What an eyesore and heart-ache are fashion-mongers to the angels. We deal treacherously with God by unrepresenting Him to the world. He asks exhibition of the beauty of holiness through us. Our high calling is to mirror the glory of God, the majesty of righteousness, the winning pathos and grandeur of self-sacrifice. What are some of us doing but belying our profession, caricaturing the Godman? A saint in robes and ruff, a 22-year-old devilment, vanity-fostering, flesh-salving paraphernalia. The elect of God blotting in the morning soldiers of sanctity at picnics and world-sapping excursions, and Christ-mocking coverses. Is this our high calling? Is this exhibiting to a sin-cursed, hell-throated world the portraiture of incarnate Holiness? Is it not the most shocking, most guilty, God-grieving, soul-ruining delusion conceivable? Can it be possible that the amazing sacrifice of God cannot win us to His high calling—the bliss of glory of His Eternity?

FORGIVENESS.

BY SAMUEL BUREMBAUGH.

THE most glorious and blessed of all the attributes of God is that of forgiveness. What would be our condition to-day, were it not for forgiveness on the part of our heavenly Father? When the human family was down deep in sin with no one to help, God in His mercy looked down upon them in love and opened again the way to the Tree of Life; all through forgiveness. Oh what love and mercy the Father had for His own, sending His only Son to suffer and die on the cross that we might be forgiven of the sin that rested upon us. Oh what an example of forgiveness the Son set forth when He was sent below; when He was insulted on every side, and finally was captured, and after being buffeted and spit upon and punished in different ways, He was taken by those wicked persons and painfully nailed to the cross, and while there writhing in agony, He prayed to His Father to "forgive them, for they know not what they do." And glory be to God forgiveness has not ceased, but God is still willing to forgive all who wish to be forgiven. And forgiveness is not confined to God alone, but He wants us also to forgive our fellow-men. "If ye forgive men their trespasses your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

Now how does this strike us, do we forgive men their trespasses? If not let us be earnest when we pray, "forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us"—likely we would rather not have that prayer answered, "as we forgive." Has your neighbor done you a wrong, have you from your heart forgiven him? or have you become offended at him and given him a bad recommendation to others and likely returned evil for evil, in thought if not in deed? Do you want your heavenly Father to forgive you in that way? If not, forgive him as you wish to be forgiven? Do you harbor any unkind feelings toward any one, and will not grant him forgiveness? Hear the great and awful voice that comes to you, "neither will I forgive you!"

Forgiveness is powerful as a punishment. If a man does you a wrong, forgive him, and ten to one he will ever afterward be a firm, true friend to you. Some hearts have become so hardened that force even dissolve them; but love and forgiveness will. Let us not do as the servant spoken of in Matthew 18: 23-35. Open the reader, look down deep into your hearts and see if there is any obduracy existing to be against a fellow-man, and if there is, cast it out, because if you hold little grudges against your brother, just so sure will your heavenly Father hold them against you. And how would you feel if God would not forgive you? "Put on therefore as the elect of God holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness and long-suffering; forbearing one another and forgiving one another, as Christ forgave you, so also do ye" (Eph. 3: 12, 13). "He that saith he is in the light and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now" (1 John 1: 10). "If any man say I love God and hateth his brother, he is a liar" (1 John 4: 20). "If any man shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also, and if he take away thy coat give him thy cloak also." Some will think this a hard to live up to, yet how long must you live here compared with eternity.

BY JAS. V. DECKLER.

WHAT night when Jesus was betrayed,
And in a purple robe arrayed,
A crown of thorns was on His head,
When Pilate to the people said,
"Ecce Homo."

Behold the man of sorrows now,
In agony and patience bow
Unto His holy Father's will,
That He the Scriptures may fulfill,
Ecce Homo!

There Pilate said, "Behold the man!"
Perceiving he could by no plan,
For His release to gain, or make,
He therefore to the people spake,
"Ecce Homo!"

To please the people he must try,
And he must hear our people's cry:
He also would be Cesar's friend,
And court his favor to the end,
Ecce Homo!

There Jesus stood amid the crowd
Of Jewish priests and Rabbis proud,
Despised, insulted and accused,
Bespit, derided and abused,
Ecce Homo!

How patiently the loving Lamb
Endured the accusations, calm
And cool His temper, not a word
Of harsh resentment once was heard,
Ecce Homo!

The Jews were bent to have Him slain,
To die in agony and pain
Upon the cross; the Roman way,
Convicted criminals to slay,
Ecce Homo!

He bore the sins of all mankind,
Was to His Father's will resigned,
Endured it all without complaint,
And conquered death for every saint,
Ecce Homo!

He trod the winepress for us all,
To raise us up from Adam's fall,
And paid our debt by His own blood,
To have us reconciled to God,
Ecce Homo!

O, hardened sinner, could you see
What Jesus bore for you and me;
And how He suffered, bled and died,
And was for our sins crucified,
Ecce Homo!

methinks, if you could see your sin,
And your corrupted state within,
You could not rest another day,
But would exclaim, to weep and pray,
Ecce Homo!

Your sins that, like a load of guilt,
The Savior's precious blood had spilt,
If you repent, will be forgiven,
And you at last may enter heaven,
Ecce Homo!

THE TWO WITNESSES, THE TWO OLIVE TREES, AND THE TWO CANDLESTICKS.

BY MATTIE A. LEAR.

"And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and three score days, clothed in sackcloth. These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth" (Rev. 11: 3, 4)

NUMBER 11.

THE device of the Waldenses, it is said, in their chief town, Lucerne in Switzerland, is a candlestick with a lighted candle on it, surrounded by this motto: "The light shineth in the midst of darkness." This device, we are informed may be seen to this day. Paul tells us that, that wicked one which he already saw, should be revealed when that which hindered its development should be taken out of the way; accordingly we find that when the nominal church was basking beneath the sunshine of royal favor, the true church with her spiritual, but unseen beauty, was retreating into the wilderness; the true witnesses of Jesus prophesied, clothed in sackcloth. Milner says, of this period, "Godliness lived obscure in hermitages, and abroad; the Gospel was almost buried in faction and ambition;" and Mosheim says, "Good men were mixed with the bad; but, by degrees the bad so multiplied that men truly holy and devoted to God appeared more rarely, and the pious few were almost hidden by the vicious multitude."

It is said in verse 7, "And when they had finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, shall make war against them, and shall overcome and kill them." After they have prophesied 1260 years they shall be slain, their enemies shall have a short triumph. Well we find by a reference to history that after the Waldenses of Piedmont and the Lollards of England had, by the great council of the Laterans, been declared exterminated, the Bohemians, who alone remained, were summoned by that council to appear on the 5th of May 1514 in the forum or market-place at Rome, and plead their cause before the representatives of all people and nations and kindreds and tongues. Did they do so? they did not. Such was the depression of the witnesses of Christ at that time, that not one witness appeared to testify for Jesus and against the superstitions of the Papacy. The testimony of the witnesses was for once suppressed. Error had triumphed and truth was apparently leveled to the dust. After the heretics had been thus summoned, and made no response or appearance, the council proceeded to write their epitaph, the orator of the council arose amid the applause and plaudits of the assembled bishops, and said, "Not one protests; not not one opposes."

The above date May 5th 1514 appears to be the time when the testimony of those witnesses who for 1260 years, had, clothed in sackcloth, opposed the errors and superstitions of the papal hierarchy, was suppressed. A new era was soon to commence, different and quite opposite forms of error were gradually to be developed. An era of ignorance and superstition was to be succeeded by an age of knowledge and skepticism. Men from believing everything without inquiry or investigation, have gone to the opposite extreme and refuse to accept anything that they cannot thoroughly and fully comprehend. It would be indeed difficult to determine which of the above extremes were most productive of evil.

Again, it is said in verse 9, "And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves;" and in verse 11th, we read, "And after three days and a half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet." Now from the time heresy was pronounced extinguished, and the papacy uttered its epitaph i. e., from May 5th 1514 until Martin Luther posted his ninety-five theses upon the gates of the churches of Wittenberg October, 31st 1517, was precisely three and a half literal years. And the posting of these theses by Martin Luther is generally, if not universally, considered the commencement of the Reformation. The ushering in of that era of innovations, of the insurrection of human intelligence; an era that changed the whole aspect of things throughout Christendom; when the dead calm of men's minds was smitten by some unseen mysterious power; when men aroused from the slumber of ages, and a new impetus was given to every branch of knowledge.

The superstitions of Rome received a terrific shock from this general expansion of human intelligence. She could no more bear the light of science than she could bear the light of the Gospel. This new class of witnesses or protestors shook the very foundations of the papacy.

We will next notice the power that is ascribed to these witnesses. "And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies; and if any man will hurt them he must in this manner be killed." Perhaps the best explanation of the above may be found in 2 Cor. 2: 15, 16; the apostle says, "They, the faithful messengers of God are a sweet savor to God, of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish." That is, if we discharge our duty faithfully, and preach the Gospel in its purity to the children of men, our labors are acceptable to God, whatever effect it may have upon our hearer; for God will not reward according to our success, but according to our faithfulness. The same preaching will be a savor of life unto life to some, and a savor of death unto death to others; whether the truth presented will prove a blessing or curse, depends entirely the hearers, it will accomplish something. "My word," says Jehovah, "shall not return unto me void; but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." So the words of eternal truth which are proclaimed by these faithful witnesses, shall be to their enemies, to those who despise and reject them, a withering, blighting curse. The Savior said, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin." So, had not those witnesses borne unequivocal testimony to the truth, there might have been some excuse for error, but there was none.

Verse 6th, "These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy; and have power over waters to turn them into blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will." We find the saints of old literally possessed this power, instances, Moses, Aaron, and Elijah; and James tells us that Elijah was a man subject to like passions as we are, and that he prevailed through earnest prayer, and tells us that "the fervent effectual prayer of the righteous man availeth much." Our Savior tells us that, "All things are possible unto him that believeth." The words under consideration are no doubt figurative, designed to show the great power that is inherent in the faithful followers of Jesus.

The world has often felt this power. Mary, Queen of Scots, used to say that she feared the prayers of John Knox more than she feared the requirements of England. And the fervent effectual prayer of Luther made the pope tremble on his throne. The power that is wielded by the saints of God, is indeed the power of Omnipotence. A power that the world can neither break nor overthrow. Verse 7, "And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them." But not until they had finished their testimony; not until they had accomplished the specific work which God had given them to do, could the powers of darkness for a while triumph over them. But when they had accomplished their special mission, when that chapter of protests which they were to utter, and which the age required, was filled up, and closed, these standard bearers were overcome and killed, yes the powers of wickedness for a while prevailed over them, as it had done over their glorious Master. The facts collected from history showing that at this period the beast did indeed make war against the saints and overcome them.

At the close of the fifteenth and commencement of the sixteenth centuries the crusades and persecutions against heretics were peculiarly sanguinary. We will produce a few testimonies, says Milner, "The sixteenth century opened with a prospect, of all others, the most gloomy in the eyes of every true Christian; corruption, both in doctrine and in practice, exceeded all bounds; the Roman pontiffs were the uncontrolled patrons of impiety. The Waldenses were too feeble to resist the popedom, and the Hussites were reduced to silence." Another testimony, "At the commencement of the sixteenth century, Europe reposed in the deep sleep of spiritual death under the yoke of the Papacy. That haughty power like the Assyrians of the prophet said, in the plenitude of insolence, "My hand hath found as a nest the riches of the people, and as one gathereth eggs, have I gathered all the earth, and there was none that moved the wing or opened the mouth, or peeped." Still another, "At the commencement of the sixteenth century, no danger seemed to threaten the Roman pontiffs. The agitation previously excited by the Waldenses and the Bohemians was suppressed by the council and the sword, and the surviving remnant was an object of contempt rather than fear."

Verse 8, "And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which is spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where our Lord was crucified." Now what is meant by this great city? Rome is called in the Apocalypse Mystery Babylon, and it was common for the writers of the sixteenth century to call Rome, Egypt and Sodom; and the despotism of Rome, Egyptian bondage. And these names were applicable, for Rome possessed all the worst features of every former despotism and tyranny. Her system of absolutism was indeed the very quintessence of injustice and cruelty. Such a monstrous evil had never before been concocted. The expression, "Where also our Lord was crucified," is perhaps best explained by the parallel passage, "Ye have crucified Christ afresh and put Him to an open shame." As Christ was literally crucified in the capital city of the apostate Jewish church, so he is spiritually crucified in the capital of the apostate Christian church. What is meant by the street of the great city? We are informed that the word here translated street is plateia in the original, and the meaning is market-place or forum, the place where justice was administered. It was the tribunal of the judge, the place in which equity was dispensed. As the Jews looked to Jerusalem of old as the great centre of all justice, and took all their disputes there for final settlement; so Christendom looked in the Middle Ages to Rome as the great seat of all power and justice, and took their dispute there for final settlement. Verse 9, "And they of the people, and kindreds, and tongues, and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves." It is not said, "The people, and tongues, and kindreds, and nations shall see their dead bodies," but "They of the people," that is the representatives or deputies of the people, tongues, and kindreds, and nations, shall see their dead bodies. We have here the idea of representation, and we are informed, that the only idea of representation in the Middle Ages was that exhibited in a general council. Now we learn that a part of the sentence pronounced on the heretics in the third and fourth Lateran, and in other councils, was that heretics should be denied Christian burial.

The body of Wicliffe, for instance, was by order of the council of Constance exhumed and burned; and the ashes of John Huss were cast into the Lake of Constance. During the three and a half prophetic days that Rome swayed an undisputed scepter; we may well imagine that this sentence, as well as all others was carried out to its fullest extent, no indignities nor insults were spared. The prescriptions of Rome extend even to the dead; she will not allow the ashes of a hated heretic repose in peace.

EARLY CHRISTIAN ASSEMBLIES.

MOSHEIM.—“The places in which the first Christians assembled to celebrate divine worship were, no doubt, the houses of private persons.” p. 124.

“In these assemblies the holy Scriptures were read, and for that purpose were divided into certain portions or lessons. The part of divine service was followed by a brief exhortation to the people, in which eloquence and art gave place to the natural and fervent expressions of zeal and charity.” pp. 124, 125.

Hawies’ church history, vol. i. p. 150. “Nothing could be more unadorned than the primitive worship. A plain man, chosen from among his fellows, in his common garb, stood up to speak, or sat down to read the Scriptures, to as many as chose to assemble in the house appointed. A back room, and that probably, often a mean one, or a garret, to be out of the way of observation, was their temple.”

“As pride and worldly-mindedness must go hand in hand, assumed pomp and dignity require a sort of maintenance very different from the state when the pastor wrought with his own hands to minister to his necessities, and labored by day that he might serve the church by night. The idea of priesthood had yet scarcely entered into the Christian sanctuary, as there remained no more sacrifice for sin, and but one High Priest of our profession, Jesus Christ. But on the dissolution of the whole Jewish economy under Adrian, when the power of the associated clergy began to put forth its head, the ambitious and designing suggested, what many of the rest received in their simplicity, that the succession to these honors now developed upon them, and that the bishop stood in the place of the high priest; the presbyters were priests; and the deacons, Levites, and so a train of consequences followed. Thus a new tribe arose, completely separated from their brethren, of clergy distinct from laity—men sacred by office, exclusive of a divine call and real worth. The altar, indeed, was not yet erected, nor the unbloody sacrifice of the eucharist perfected; but it approached, by hasty strides, to add greater sanctity to the priesthood, and the not unpleasant adjunct of the divine right of tithes, attached to the divine right of episcopacy.” pp. 181, 182. —A. THE WORLD VIEWED IN THE LIGHT OF ETERNITY.

BY JAMES FOX.

ONE who enjoyed more of earthly happiness and glory than any man can now hope to attain, who surrounded himself with every luxury that earth could afford, has left on record his own affecting testimony of the utter incapacity of all the pleasures of life to afford solid comfort to the soul, and written over them, “all vanity of vanities.” They could not meet the exigencies of his spiritual nature, nor fill the mind with that food which it craves. When therefore towards the close of life, he reviewed its scenes and pleasures in the light which eternity began to shed upon his path, he gave to the world the results of his experience, and warned the young of the danger which would attend them, if they gave themselves to seek after worldly pleasure, and of the disappointment which they would surely meet in its pursuits.

Summoning before him the youth in all his round of enjoyment, he uttered the solemn warning, “Rejoice O young man in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou that for all these things, God will bring thee into judgment.” He would have him amid all the enjoyments of life, use the good things of this world with moderation, and remember the life to come, and the judgment to which we are all hastening, when every act of life must be distinctly recalled—strictly scanned and justly finished or rewarded. Man is reminded that, though he may pass through life walking in the ways of his heart deceiving himself; it may be with hopes of future happiness; while yet a slave to lust, he must be compelled at last to look back upon every act and scene of life, and hear the irrevocable decision as to its character and desert. What should this thought be to sin, and to every pursuit or pleasure that may possibly interfere with the salvation of the soul? How often would the victim of appetite dash the bowl from his lips, could he but have the words of wisdom! For all this God will bring thee into judgment. How often would the youth turn away from the haunts of dissipation and folly and vice; from the scenes of the revel and the resorts of the abandoned, did he hear the echo of these words upon his heart and conscience?

It is wise to look at all the actions of life in this light, to take the instructions of Revelation; and with them anticipate that solemn day when the Judge of the quick and dead shall descend from heaven on His great white throne, and summon us to His bar. We ought as rational and immortal beings, thus weigh every object of life, and decide in reference to our conduct, as we shall wish we had done when we shall be deep within the secrets of the eternal world. And while we are permitted to rejoice in all the goodness that a beneficent Providence spreads around our path, while we may indulge in any innocent and healthful recreation that invigorates the mind and invigorates the body, and prepares us the better to resume the active and stern duties of life. Let the Christian who is doubtful as to the propriety of certain courses of pleasure for which he finds neither a warrant nor prohibition in the Scriptures, and whose heart is, or may be strongly inclining him to tread on uncertain ground; carry himself forward to that solemn event to which all are hastening, when he shall have met the last enemy, and his soul has tried the realities of eternity, and from the hushed repose of the grave; he comes forth with the countless hosts of the dead to look back upon life.

Viewed in this light, he will find that worldly pleasure is not the great end of existence. God has not placed us here that we may say, “Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die.” He has formed us for high and noble purposes; He has breathed into us His own spiritual and intellectual nature, making us rational and moral beings, giving to us souls that shall live when the heavens are no more; and He has fitted us to perform a part in the great and eventful scenes of life; not like the moving images of a pageant, but like living and sentient beings capable of thinking and acting under the power of truth and motives, and He has given us affections and powers of mind which find their noblest fields for exercise in loving and serving Him, whom angels love, and before whom seraphs bow and archangels worship. He has given us nature that can reason, and think, and love and soar upward in their search for truth, until they approach His throne and draw from Him exhaustless stores of knowledge and light and happiness. He has given us souls that we may by His grace rise to glory unseen by mortal eyes, and unconscious by the heart of man or that if neglected, will suffer in endless misery and all the pains of the second death. He has given us affections which should fasten upon Him as the supreme object of love. He has endowed us with talents for the right improvements of which we are responsible to Him, an influence which is to be used for the good of our fellow-men, and the promotion of the highest interests of our race. Even a consideration then, of what we are and may be, and of what we may and ought to accomplish, is enough to indicate the propriety of the great rule that assures us that man’s chief end is not to seek after worldly pleasure, but to glorify God and enjoy Him forever. When we come to stand and look back on life from the light of the eternal world, shall we not acknowledge that worldly pleasures and selfish gratifications, were a most unworthy part of existence, and that he who lived for it alone, or who allowed it to interfere with the high and holy duties of life, falls far short of the station for which God designed him, when He made him a living soul.

What if we were permitted to enjoy every sensual delight and all the joys that earth can afford, would it have met the aspirations of the immortal soul, and fulfilled its glorious destiny? Who would not prefer the sad career of Paul in all his self-forgetfulness and self-sacrifice as he walked with God, and glorified Him to that of the rich man clothed in purple and faring sumptuously every day, even could he at last have been saved as by fire? The one living for eternity, and the other for time; the one finding his pleasure in the service of God, and the other in the service of appetite and of self; the one preparing himself for high and glorious communion with his Maker, and with the spirits of just men made perfect; the other surrounding himself with objects which at the best could afford but a short lived gratification, and which made heavenly things and eternal realities distasteful and unwelcome to his thoughts. Oh how little does he fulfill the great end of life, who goes with the multitude, saying, “who will show as any good, and who in the search and enjoyment of worldly pleasures, robs his soul of spiritual food and of holy enjoyment.” With what wonder must the angels look upon such an one who has tasted that the Lord is gracious; going from the sanctuary and the blessed ordinances to mingle in the vain and trifling amusements and pleasures of life. How strange must appear to them the conduct of him, who while possessing noble spiritual powers and faculties that make his nature but a little lower than their own; busies himself with bubbles and carelessly wastes the precious hours of a life none too long to fulfill its great purposes in vain and foolish enjoyments which tend to wear the soul from duty, and to unfit it for the scenes and employments of heaven. Go even to the sick-bed and sit before the sufferer, the gay recreations of life, and how utterly inappropriate are they to the place. Enter the room where he is struggling with disease and fearing the approach of death; draw aside the curtains, look upon his face pallid with exhaustion or flushed with fever, and while anxious friends are softly treading around his couch and tenderly ministering to his wants; tell him of his gay boars that have been spent by his companions in the place of worldly mirth and joy; describe to him the signal triumphs of the lost, new competitor for the applause of the fashionable world, the wonderful power of her voice, the appropriateness of her actions; tell him of the brilliant scenes of the ball-room or the exciting contents of the card table, and how utterly devoid of interest is all this, in such an hour, and amid such dark scenes of suffering. Oh what an utter and appalling contrast does it afford to that darkened chamber—that sad care-worn countenance, and troubled and beating heart. What an unwelcome intruder is worldly pleasure in such scenes as this. And yet we are all hastening to the same sick and dying hour, it ill becomes us to permit our hearts to be absorbed in that which will make the thought of death and eternity, unwelcome to us or which shall unfit us to meet the solemn issue of life, and to enter upon the realities of the future world. It should be then a serious question with him who is about to enter upon any pursuit or pleasure in regard to which his conscience is not fully enlightened. Will it fit me for a dying hour, will its memory be a source of happiness to me in that solemn occasion when my soul shall stand in the dawning light of the eternal world?

Such thoughts while they will not hinder the Christian from the enjoyment of any rational pleasure, will temper his relish for earthly things, and will assist him greatly, when tempted by the world to turn aside after its follies and vanities. It is wise for us to act as we shall wish we had done when time shall be no more, and when we shall have entered upon that state of existence for which this world is but the portal.

God has a great enemy. This enemy is also man’s enemy. God hires all who will, to work for him in His vineyard. Here this great enemy also works, but what does he do? He deceives. He told our mother Eve they should not surely die. He only told part of the truth, and what did that do? Ah, it made an untruth. See, it deceived. What trouble then followed.—C. C. Miller.

CHRISTIANS should work for their Creator, Redeemer and Preserver, and for the up-building of His cause. To be a good servant does not mean for one to do merely as he is told, but he must also work in the right spirit. We may do everything we are commanded to do literally speaking, and still not be good servants. We must not only do, but we must love to do.

LANARK, ILL., JUNE 20, 1878.

The Annual Meeting for next year will be held with the brethren in the Second District of Virginia.

The brethren and sisters from this part of the country, who attended the A. M., have now reached home. They feel highly pleased with their trip, and say the meeting was the best they ever attended. Their confidence in the general brotherhood is greatly strengthened.

Do not fail to read Bro. Balsbaugh's article found on the first page of this issue. It rings out no uncertain sound, and should prompt every would-be fashionable member to send their Christ-mockery fashions where they belong. We never could blame the wolf very much for appearing in sheep's clothing, but why a sheep should want to look like a wolf, and with the wolves act, has always been a mystery to us.

The late A. M. appointed brethren James Quinter, B. H. Miller and E. K. Buechley a committee to visit and confer with the Brethren in California. It is hoped that the visit will be a profitable one, and add much to the love and fellowship that should exist between our beloved brethren on the Pacific coast, and the general brotherhood. God grant that we may be of one mind, united in one body by the strongest ties of Christian love and fellowship.

Brother Esheleman reached home from the Annual Meeting last Saturday morning, feeling well, though much fatigued by his trip, and the great amount of business he had to attend to. He expresses himself highly pleased with the meeting, saying that the best of feelings prevailed, and that to-day the brotherhood is more firmly united in faith, love and practice than it ever was before. Most of our people had looked to this Annual Meeting with anxious feelings, fearing that some things might come up that would not be for the better, but thanks be to our heavenly Father things went off generally smoothly, and we all feel much encouraged, and more determined to press on in the great and good work in which we are engaged. When Bro. Esheleman gets rested up a little he will have considerable to tell our readers about the meeting. What we publish this issue was prepared in haste while at the A. M.

SOME PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS

A SHORT lesson on practical Christianity will not be amiss just now. There are subjects over which we need to study and pray much.

1. There is too much loose living among professing Christians. Their lives are not marked by that true vital piety that should characterize the saints on earth. True holiness and humility do not always constitute their adornment. Of many it can be truthfully said, "They are not shining lights." Practically some men appear no better after conversion than before. If religion makes people no better, it is practically of no use to them.

2. Christians are not sufficiently careful about letting their light shine before the world. With many of them, their light has turned to darkness. They let the world see many of their bad deeds, and but little of their good works. I fear that we do not fully realize the responsibility resting on us as the light of the world. Better lose a few dollars than have our conduct evil spoken of. A religion that is not worth making a sacrifice for is not worth having. The great sin will not willingly deny his self of some comforts for his religion has a poor conception of its real value.

3. Christians are not the living epistles, known and read of all men, that they should be. Every professed follower of Christ should be a credit to the cause. We generally determine the merits of a mill by the quality of flour it turns out, but were we to judge of the merits of the Christian religion by a large percentage of those who claim conversion, we would certainly have a poor opinion of it. Every Christian should so live that it would be safe to point him or her out as a sample of the effects of the Christian religion.

4. In many instances the discipline of the church is too loose. Great regard should be paid to the character and reputation of the church as a body. It should not be marred by the conduct of unruly members. The church was not intended for unholy people. Unless a man is a credit to the cause his claims to membership could be called into question. The church should be composed of none but shining lights, as no others will ever reach heaven. The virgins who had no oil in their lamps were rejected. If the tares can be pulled up without injuring any of the wheat, it would better be done, but do not destroy the wheat just to get rid of the tares.

5. In many instances churches are too careless regarding the selection of their preachers. Ministers should be men of exemplary holiness. In fact they want to be examples to the flock. The Holy Ghost had recorded in the Scriptures just what kind of men are wanted, and if each member, when casting his vote, would see to it that he voted for one having Bible qualifications, the church would be much better off. The Lord wants ministers who preach by example as well as word. The preacher whose conduct does not accord with his preaching is not the man the Lord wants. There are too many in the world who say and do not. No man should be kept in the ministry who is an injury to the cause. Better have a good man who cannot talk, than a great talker who is impious. The church should keep a careful watch over her ministers and see to it that the cause does not suffer by their misconduct. Ministers, who become involved in a difficulty that is calculated to injure the cause of religion, should be relieved of their office till their matters are properly adjusted. A course of this kind would make ministers more cautious, and show to the world that the church is zealous of her good name.

6. In many instances ministers are too loose with what little piety they have. They do not watch their conduct as they should. At times they will allow themselves to become involved in trouble without taking into consideration the amount of reproach they may thus bring upon the church. If they do not think enough of the church's reputation, to make some sacrifice for it they need to spend more time at the foot of the cross.

7. Ministers are too loose about their preaching. Many are too much disposed to compromise with the ways of popular religion and thus destroy the line of demarcation that should exist between the church and the world. Ministers want to be bold enough to preach the truth whether people like it or not. The man who will shun to declare the whole counsel of God is not worthy of his position. Most ministers spend too much time over knotty questions, and not enough with the plain, simple, practical truths of the Bible. About three-fourths of them put the feed up too high; the lambs cannot reach it, hence the little creatures go to other churches for mental and spiritual food. The generality of ministers do not study enough. They read much and study little. Many of them spend a week studying up a sermon. They would better take the Bible and hunt up the sermon. A good sermon, like gold, often requires much hard labor to get it. Ministers should be careful what they preach. They should never tell a thing till they know it to be correct. God never requires a man to tell a thing that he does not know.

8. As a rule, ministers do not mix enough among the poorer members. The rich get most of the company. The poor should not be neglected, especially by the church.

9. Most people are too slow to learn that our Maker has endowed each of us with different gifts and capacities, and that there is a special calling for each of us. The church should see to it that she gets the right man in the right place. If the church finds that she has made a mistake in selecting a servant to serve in any capacity she should be free to correct her error, and not lay the blame on the Holy Ghost, as is the manner of some. If a man has been chosen to fill a position, and it is afterward apparent that he is not adapted to that calling, but can do something else much better, prudence would demand a change at once. That is the way we do in temporal matters, and certainly religion is vastly more important than worldly things. If the church, in these things, would be as "wise as serpents," it would add much to her prosperity. Every thing in its place is not less important in religious matters than in worldly things. That which is worth doing at all is worth doing right, and the right way is always the best.

10. We need more of Christ and less of self behind the table. Less opinion and more faith will do any congregation good. Ministers want to show to the congregation that they respect each other. Like priest, like people. The lack of love behind the table is enough to paralyze any congregation. More love, more faith, and much more prayer are indispensable elements to all true holiness.

WHEN IS THE CHURCH PROSPEROUS?

NUMBER II.

HERE I promised to notice the relations of the lady and the servants of the church. As members of the same body they are one—are equal. Their rights and interests are the same. They drink from the same Fountain, eat of the same Bread, shall receive the same reward. They practice the same ordinances, enjoy the same rights and privileges, are made partakers of the same hope. The church that fails to recognize these facts, cannot be prosperous. So far, then, we see that prosperity will come if these facts are duly recognized. There is but one Gospel, one rule of faith and practice for the church. To get two rules of faith and practice into the church would cause division, and where there is division there is not prosperity.

The servants of the church must be chosen in the church, by the church. Servants that are not chosen by the church are not the church's servants; and the Gospel recognizes no servants not of the church, by the church. When the Lord "ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men," and he gave some apostles. The church in its infancy, He gave prophets; and to "some" He gave prophets; others, evangelists, pastors and teachers. Why? "For the perfecting of the saints." This is one reason. A second reason why He gave some teachers, pastors and evangelists was, "for the work of the ministry," and the third reason was, "for the edifying of the body of Christ." This last reason found in Ephesians 4: 12, is applicable here. Those given "for the edifying of the body of Christ" are such who shall be blameless, apt to teach, grave, sober, vigilant, of good behavior, not greedy of filthy lucre, not self-willed, not soon angry, but lovers of hospitality, lovers of good men, just, temperate, holy, patient. Such servants the church shall choose for the edifying of itself. And the church that is cautious in this respect, the church that thinks more of its edification and prosperity than it does of own, will ever seek such as are in full possession of these qualifications. It is not safe to choose a servant with the hope that he will seek and find these qualifications when given a servant's duties. Such is not, I think, the apostolic order. A man should be found possessing these qualifications, and then called to edify the church. Happy is the church that follows the apostolic order in all things.

The relation that exists between the lady and the servants is that of brothers. Servants are to serve the church—not to govern in the sense of human government. Christ came to do the will of His Father—not His own. In this coming, He was the servant of God. The servants of the church in like manner are to do the will of the church—not their own will, for if they do their own will, they are no more servants, but lords.

The servants of the church are not above the church. This is because they are a part of the church, and a part can never rise above the whole. Were they above the church, greater than the church in power, they would no longer be servants of the church, but lords of the church, and lords of the church have no promise of the peace of this world, nor that of the world to come. Thus the idea of equality, of equal rights and privileges between the lady and the officials is a Bible idea; and the church that recognizes this idea and faithfully adheres to it will be prosperous. But if a church should forget this, should place judgment, and execution wholly in the hands of its servants, or if the servants should usurp their authority, and assume all matters of judgment, then that church would not be prosperous as the Bible teaches prosperity. Servants or officials may suggest to the church what they think for its best interests, but in no case should they assume to do the work of the church. A man when called to perform some special duty for the church is simply the church's agent, the church's servant subject to the bidding of the church. He has not become a law-maker, for Christ and the apostles made all the law the church needs. No man can make a perfect law; but Christ did, and the perfect law is far better as a rule of faith, practice and judgment than any imperfect law can be.

The apostle says, "Obey your guides, and be submissive; for they keep watch on your behalf, as going to render account." (Heb. 13: 17). This the lady of the church are commanded to do, providing the leaders possess all the qualifications laid down in the Holy Scriptures. But that they shall obey leaders who possess not the qualifications given by the Holy Ghost through the apostles, is not at all evident. The kind of leaders they are required to obey, are such as are humble, and themselves entirely submissive to the will of God.

Leaders, however, sometimes find themselves in difficulties, not because they have conducted themselves in a disorderly manner at home, but because they mistrusted the church, because having failed in gentleness, long-suffering, goodness, meekness, or some other point. Whenever leaders, the servants of the church, lose confidence in the church, mistrust the church, and resort to their own judgment as to the church's interests, they are more likely to throw safeguards around their own interests than around the interests of the church. The servants and those who gave them authority to preside over, and look after the church's interests, must labor together, must be gentle to each other, for their interests are the same. Servants lose nothing by consulting the church, by permitting the church to do its own work, by abjuring to faithfulness, holiness and good works. But on the other hand, should servants so far exceed their powers and duties as to attempt to control the church, to assume its duties and privileges, then vexations and troubles arise, and where these are, there is no prosperity.

The relation of servants and lady do not require that either do aught in secret that pertains to the other. There are not two distinct bodies in the church. The church is "one body;" and officials are simply persons chosen by the church to execute the will of the church, and the will of the church must be in perfect harmony with the will of God. The church that recognizes this fact will be happy, and being happy will prosper.

Again, if a church would prosper, would see little trouble in church government, let it be cautious in the selection of its servants. To choose for a servant one who had not yet learned to be patient, who had not yet learned to be gentle, kind and forbearing, and willing to confide in the church, would not be choosing in the direction of prosperity. As before stated, few persons fully learn the power of kindness. The servant who has learned this lesson well, is in possession of a power for good far beyond him who relies upon the rigor of law, or his own peculiar advantages. There is one thing more that I wish to here impress upon the minds of all who have been chosen by the church to perform its duties. And to maintain the respect of the church for the position you occupy. Just so soon as you attempt to swerve from the church's best interests in order to subserve your own, just that soon will you bring division into the church, and division being there, prosperity is a stranger. Let no one attempt to do the church's business, unless the church says so. Let none secretly scheme for his own aggrandizement, nor attempt to draw honor to himself by any other means than love, faithfulness and good works. Fear not that you shall not be counted worthy of either single or double honor, but perform the duties of a servant faithfully, and the church will not be ungrateful. Should a church be ungrateful to its servants when they have faithfully carried out the will of the Lord, then the Lord will speedily avenge His elect, and that church will fall beneath the justice of a true God. That servants sometimes suffer for wrongdoing is a fact, but it is rare that they suffer for well-doing. Keep the church in the front, respect the rights and privileges of the laity, my dear brethren, and the church under your care will prosper. Should any step aside from the old beaten pathway to glory, go plead with them; point them to Jesus, show His love, your love, the crown of glory in the end, pray with them, and rest assured prosperity will be inscribed on the banners of that church. TRIP TO THE ANNUAL MEETING.

ON the morning of the 6th, several of us from Northern Illinois on the way to Annual Meeting, were safely set down at North Manchester, Ind. Bro. S. S. Clery took care of us and in the afternoon conducted us to the Ogan's Creek communion, where we were made happy in meeting many loving brethren and sisters. It does one good to meet and become acquainted with the readers of the BRETHERN AT WORK. We are not only glad to meet such, but all who have obtained "like precious faith," and possess the same Gospel hope with us. But our readers are somewhat more endeared to us, because of our weekly talks.

The feast was truly an enjoyable one, and by all appearances those who participated in it were all profited. Only those who throw open their hearts to the Lord, invite Him in and sup with Him, can express the comforts and strength of a communion meeting. The ministerial force was strong at this meeting, and the simple, effective manner of their working is well worth remembering. When old brethren—those who have for a score or more years withstood the trials, temptations and vexations of life, kindly and earnestly plead for unity, love and brotherly kindness,—for zeal in spreading the truth of Jesus, one is made to thank God and take courage. And more: when they declare that they have confidence in the church—have confidence that the younger brethren and sisters want to do right, have confidence that when they lay down to rest in their graves, the younger ones will take up the mantle and battle just as nobly for the distinctive plea of the church—yes when they utter such confidence, we are humbled, inspired and more firmly resolve to hide continually under the cross. These old veterans not only thus speak, but act and appear just as they declare with their voices. They believe that the church existed and flourished successfully before it was placed in their care, and that it will go on successfully after they are gone. They are only concerned that it shall go out of their charge in good order, and fall into well-prepared hands; and that it may go on and on with care, they encourage those who must follow after, not by suspending them, not by questioning their motives, but by love and confidence. God bless all the brethren who do not mistrust their younger brethren. O, brethren, you do not realize how much good your kind words, your loving actions are doing! In eternity all will be clear.

On the morning of the 8th, brethren from all parts of the country assembled in the Ogan's Creek meeting-house to consult in reference to the best method of spreading the Gospel, of sowing the good seed. This meeting had been called by the officers of the "Church Extension Union," and as many did not fully understand its aims and methods, they came to learn. Bro. Quarter explained the object of the meeting to be in the interests of mission work, and to more fully carry out the plan adopted by the A. M. of 1868. This plan was read and approved as being good; and in order to carry it into execution, some additional resolutions were adopted. These will be given in full in the future.

The plan adopted at Meyerdale, Pa., and known as the "Church Extension Union," was substituted by the one above mentioned, and will be known as the "Brethren's Work of Love Union." The design is not to interfere with the organizations now existing in several Districts, but is presented as an effective means of extending the leaders of the church.

AT ANNUAL MEETING.

On Sunday morning June 9th, the people began to gather at the large tent two miles West of North Manchester, as it had been announced that brother S. H. Bashor would preach in the meeting-house near by. The house was soon densely packed with anxious hearers, and as many could not get into the meeting-house, it was thought good to go to the tent and hold meeting there also. Here brother Moses Miller addressed an attentive audience, and as the day was cool and rainy, the people were slow in dispersing. Meetings were held at eight or ten different points in the vicinity during the day and evening.

Early on Monday morning, the large and commodious tent was filled with persons from all parts of the country, and as the Standing Committee could not arrange to open meeting until Tuesday morning, it was deemed good and expedient to spend the time in preaching; hence brother S. H. Bashor preached at 10 A. M., on the authenticity of the Bible, followed by S. C. Stamp. At 2 P. M., brother S. Z. Sharp addressed the vast multitude, on "Rightly dividing the Word of Truth," followed by A. J. Hixon, Howard Miller and J. W. Stein—the last two dwelling upon the importance of mission work. A synopsis of some of these discourses will be given as soon as possible.

Tuesday 8:30 A. M. the Standing Committee entered the tent, and so dense was the congregation that it was some time until the Committee could be seated and the audience quieted sufficiently to proceed to business. Bro. Enoch Ely announced the 253rd hymn which the audience sang with great warmth. It reminded one of the great meeting promised us all in heaven, when the saints shall, with one voice, sing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

The Moderator then said that, no doubt we all have long looked forward to the time when we could meet and enjoy each other's company. But we have not only assembled to see each other, but to labor for the good of the church in general. Looking at the matter thus, we will feel that we are in the immediate presence of Him who has called us here; hence I trust that every brother in divine presence, as well as your unworthy servant, will feel the need of asking God to be in our midst. In view, then, of the importance of this great work before us, let us bow before God and ask His blessing upon us. Prayer by brother Ely, after which the fifteenth of Acts was read by R. H. Miller. The organization was next announced to be as follows: Enoch Ely, Moderator; R. H. Miller, Reading Clerk; James Quarter, Writing Clerk. The Moderator then said, that we had heard the Scriptures read, giving an account of a difficulty in the church and that the apostles, and elders with the church met to arrange matters satisfactorily. They gave a decision and sent it to the church from whence the difficulty came; and as differences of opinion prevailed among those assembled on that occasion, it could not be expected that we should arrange matters without some differences of opinion also; but it would be good if we could present our views from a Scriptural standpoint, always giving the word of God as proof of our position rather than the Minutes of Annual Meeting. Be kind and courteous in your remarks, for soft words turn away wrath, but harsh words stir up anger.

The Clerk then read the programme of the meeting. Paper relative to a change in the manner of holding the Annual Meeting was read, the main features of which are, that each congregation in the brotherhood be permitted to send a delegate in connection with the present District system, which delegates shall constitute the Conference in rendering decisions, but questions to be open to discussion for all. Subject deferred until Wednesday morning.

Papers relative to divorces and the propriety of innocent parties re-marrying were presented and deferred indefinitely. The question of advancing ministers outside of the congregation in which they reside, was considered and decided to be unwarranted according to the usages of the church.

VEGETARIANISM.

The first subject under consideration was in regard to those who travel among churches and teach contrary to the usages and practice of the church. It was unanimously agreed that such work is not in harmony with Gospel order, and that those who thus persist in violating good order shall not be regarded as one of us. The integrity and purity of the church should ever be kept in view, and no one should even presume to go beyond good order, peace and harmony.

The justice and propriety of first presenting the decisions of the church to a member who has been tried for disobedience, before asking him whether he will accept it, was given consideration, and it was agreed that by all means should the decision be made known before asking any one whether he will comply with it. The wisdom and justice of this decision is so clear that it will be generally accepted. From henceforth the decision of the church must be presented to the accused, before asking him to comply. No man should be asked to consent to a thing of which he is ignorant. Tell him the demand and then ask him whether he will accept. The third subject related to receiving pensions from the government; and the fourth struck at expensive feasting at funerals. This was a timely warning, as many poor families are burdened in the vain effort to keep up with the times. It is time that we, as a church, raise our voice against this growing evil.

North-western Ohio District petitioned A. M. to change Art. 16 of 1871 in order to enable poor brethren to obtain a committee from A. M. through the District Meeting. Often those who are poor cannot afford to go to A. M. for a committee, and by calling for one through the D. M. may be able to obtain justice more readily. Request not granted.

Several churches requested permission to ask applicants the usual questions on the bank of the stream instead of in the water. This subject elicited a lengthy discussion in which the Scriptures and ancient church history were brought forward. Tertullian, Chrysostom and other notable ancients were referred to, and it is worthy of note that in doing so, the idea of trine immersion was also brought before the vast assembly. It was evident that as to the matter of asking applicants questions, the church is of one mind; but where to ask them is a matter of opinion. Though the discussion was quite protracted and brought out many good points, it was evident that the subject required considerable study and reflection in order to reach just and true conclusions. The meeting concluded to make no change. This was the last subject for the first day's session, and the multitude dispersed to find places of rest.

THE TENT.

In which the meeting is held, together with the dining room, is 272 feet long and 80 feet wide. About one half, or 136 feet by 80, is used for the covered. This was completely filled and thousands stood outside. Persons with strong vocal organs could be heard throughout the tent, but those of less capacity were only heard in their immediate vicinity. The discussions thus far have been made in a Christian spirit, and, notwithstanding the immense audience, pretty good order has been maintained. More next week.

COMMUNISM.

Compiled.

BY many who have given the subject considerable thought, it is believed that our country is to-day on the very crest of a volcano, which may burst forth any moment. And from present indications it is safe to conclude that before the expiration of many months, this pent up subterranean fire will burst forth, causing a shock from one end of the land to the other. Already the rumbling is beginning to be heard in the far off Europe, and the very kings upon their thrones are becoming alarmed.

We believe there is danger ahead. Here we are in the second year of our centennial glory with the country seething like a caldron. At Washington the political parties are falling to pieces by their own inherent corruption. The Presidential chair has a torpedo under it. Representatives of the nations come into the halls of Congress drunk. Drunk! Great heavens! has it come to this, that drunkards shall sit on the throne of Christian America? Representatives! Yes, so they are; to our disgrace be it said, in more ways than one. Infidelity and Sabbath desecration are growing. Spirituality is so faint and attenuated in many of our cities that it cannot even reflect the truth. The land is over-run by thieves and vagrants, labor and capital are at sword's points, and beneath all this cracked crust of Republicanism, there are smouldering the volcanic fires of Communism.

No danger! Have the signs of the times no voice of warning?

Their number at the present is not known; it is supposed to be two or three hundred thousand. They are all oath-bound and worked by secret wires that the masses of our readers know not of. Their work is done in the profoundest secrecy, and the Lord only knows what their strength is. They have been hard at work during the last twelve months, and now have organizations in nearly all the leading cities of the land. They drill in secret. They are said to be organizing armies, and in Chicago have a force of several thousand. At that place they have been seen drilling in public.

They are armed with breech-loading rifles, and revolvers, and are drilling, they say, with a view to self-protection in case their plans are interfered with. In Cincinnati the Communists have three thousand men enrolled. Large numbers of them are organized into military companies, which meet and drill in secret. The Knights of Labor, an organization whose object is similar to that of the Communists, are also drilling and arming in preparation for an impending crisis. In St. Louis large street meetings are held and inflammatory speeches made, stirring up riot and sowing the seeds of discord and outrage. They laugh at the power of the police to coerce them. In New York the same thing is seen, and revolutionary measures are openly avowed.

Can we stand up in the bold presence of these startling facts and say there is no danger? What is the meaning of all this organizing, and arming, and drilling from the Atlantic to the Pacific? There is no foreign army approaching. There is no war in our own land. The President has not called for militia. What does it mean? It means revolution, and that at no distant day. It means the upheaval of our liberties and laws; the war of classes; the poor against the rich; the laborer against the capitalist,—anarchy, self-handed, ghastly anarchy. It means riot, and murder, and pillage, and sacked cities, and a dismembered government.

But what is the cause of this threatening trouble? We answer, it is monopoly. The working class has been abused, and the wealth of the land is rapidly going into the hands of a few. The wages of the poorer class have been cut down that the rich might have more money to squander. The poor and their families have been almost starving while the rich are building fine mansions and investing their wealth in bonds. We believe the whole thing can be remedied by wise and judicious legislation. But how can we expect this to come to pass when our nation is reeling from the effect of the liquor traffic and pride of every order? Our country needs a reformation which may yet come after it is too late to avert the pending evils that are now awaiting her.

The work wants to be brought about by the Gospel of peace, and not by carnal weapons as is now threatened. We are satisfied that the Communists will not succeed in overrunning this country, but they, if once aroused, will cause irreparable damages. What a blessing it would be if all men would learn to do unto others as they would that they should do unto them! There would be no trampling of the poor under foot by the rich, but there would be work and plenty to eat and clothing for all.

Just take the money that is squandered for strong drink and spend it for food and clothing and not one need suffer. There would be plenty and to spare for all.

These are perilous times. What meaneth the great famines of earth? What meaneth this of thousands dying daily? What meaneth the great subterranean rumbling of socialism in Europe? and What meaneth this secret rattling of arms and secret workings all over our land? Who cannot fail to read the signs of the times? Watch and pray. There is danger ahead.

CONSIDERABLE matter prepared for this issue has been crowded out. Will appear next week. — The Minutes and Report can be had at this office. Particulars next week. — This is all the room we have left to say anything in this issue.

POETICAL ENIGMA.

GOD made Adam out of dust,
But thought it best to make me first:
So I was made before the man,
To answer God's most holy plan.
My body He did make complete,
But without legs, or hands or feet.
My ways and actions did control,
And I was made without a soul.
A living being I became;
'Twas Adam that gave me my name,
Then from his presence I withdrew,
No more of Adam ever knew.
I did my Maker's laws obey,
From them I never went astray.
Thousands of miles I ran, I fear,
But seldom upon earth appear.
But God in me did something see,
And put a living soul in me.
A soul of me my God did claim,
And took from me my soul again.
But when from me my soul had fled,
I was the same as when first made;
And without hands, or feet, or soul,
I travel now from pole to pole.
I labor hard both day and night,
To fallen man I give great light.
Thousands of people, young and old,
Will by my death great light behold.
No fear of death can trouble me,
For happiness I never can see.
To heaven I shall never go,
Nor to the grave, nor hell below.
The Scriptures I cannot believe;
If right or wrong I can't conceive;
Although my name therein is found,
They are to me an empty sound.
And now my friends, these lines you'll read,
And search the Scriptures with all speed,
And if my name you don't find there,
I'll think it strange, I do declare.

PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

HAVING noticed in No. 19 of the BRETHERN AT WORK, that the above was suggested as a good subject to write upon; I remembered seeing an article in the Gospel Visitor which I will present to the readers:

At an association of clergymen on a certain occasion, it was proposed to hold a meeting for the purpose of considering the words of the Apostle, "Pray without ceasing." The meeting was to be held in a month, and in the meantime each clergyman was to write down his opinion and bring it to be read. A religious servant girl, who lived in the house of one of the clergymen, overheard him talking about the matter, whereupon she exclaimed:

"What! A month wanted to tell the meaning of that text? It is one of the easiest and best texts in the Bible."

"Well, well, Mary," said the old minister, "what can you say about it? Let us know how you understand it. Can you pray all the time?"

"O yes, sir; the more I have to do, the more I can pray."

"Indeed! Well, Mary, do let us know how it is—for most people think otherwise."

"Well, sir," said the girl, "when I first open my eyes in the morning I pray. Lord, open the eyes of my understanding; and while I am dressing I pray that I may be clothed with the robe of righteousness; and when I have washed me, I ask for the washing of regeneration; and as I begin work I pray that I may have strength equal to my day; when I begin to kindle up the fire I pray that God's work may revive in my soul; and as I sweep out the house I pray that my heart may be cleansed of all its impurities; and while preparing and partaking of breakfast I desire to be fed with the hidden manna and the sincere milk of the Word; and as I am busy with the little children I look to God as my Father, and pray for the spirit of adoption, that I may be His child. So on, all day; everything I do furnishes me with a thought of prayer."

"Enough, enough," cried the old divine, "these things are revealed to babes and hid from the wise and prudent. Go on, Mary," said he, "pray without ceasing—and as for us, my brethren, let us bless the Lord for this exposition, and remember that He said that the meek will be guide in judgment."

So, dear brethren and sisters, you can see from the above, that the Lord, through the Apostles, has not required of His followers that which we cannot perform; that if we act consistently with the Gospel, we will not engage in any business whatever, that we cannot ask the Lord to help us.

The love of heaven and the love of earth are like the scales of a balance—when one rises the other falls.

THE TWO.

IT is indeed a funny and ridiculous sight to see a lovely woman stop at a crossing, give her body a fearful twist, stoop low and reach backward and downward nearly to her heels, and grab from five to forty pounds of dress-trail full of dirt and shake it five or six times, like a buzzard fixing its wings to fly, then hobble across the street to the other side, then to let go, turn around four or five times and start off like a stern-wheel boat in a storm. Such fantastic fashionable freaks of folly as we see sometimes upon our streets, are certainly very unbecoming in all that is modest, beautiful and lovely in women. Look at that modestly-dressed, sweet-faced, humble girl, walking homeward, having been on a mission for her mother, perhaps. No foolishness about her; she lives, dresses, acts, and looks plain. She and fashion are strangers. Loafers do not stare at and after her. Not she commands respect by her dress and conduct upon the public streets. See her in spotless white, looking like an angel, kneeling at her bed-side with her face and eye, lifted heavenward, and in accents low and sweet-breathing from her pure lips the language of her soul in humble prayer, "Our Father who art in heaven." Angels put their ears to the twinkling stars and listen to her prayer.

The one, a meek, humble, Christian young woman, whose affections are fixed upon things above the foibles and follies of a fashionable world—whose very soul pants for the light and love of a "home over there." The other, a thin-visaged, "made up" woman of a fashionable world, whose whole heart and soul is engulfed in the great whirlpool of muck happiness and folly; who never looks in the Bible one-hundredth part as much as she does a looking-glass. The one breathes her prayer and lies down upon her downy bed to sleep and dream of heaven and the angels. The other comes out of the parlor at a late hour, like a tired and hungry coach horse, rushes to the pantry, grabs a pickle in one hand, a cold ham bone in the other, then to her room. She swings her "harness" over the backs of half-a-dozen chairs, forgets the duty she owes to God and herself, and then retires to rest.

Now which of the two, think you, God and the angels smile upon the most—the beautiful woman or the fashionable young lady?

ABOUT LITTLE CHILDREN IN THE BIBLE.

BY MATTIE A. LEAR.

My Dear Little Hilary:—

HAVING promised, when I was with you at Hudson, to write you a little letter, I will now redeem my promise. And as your dear mamma said you were very fond of Bible stories, I will give you one, a sweet, touching, little story which we hope will deeply interest you. And I will just here say, dear Lizzie, when I hear of a child who loves to hear Bible stories, my interest in that child is immediately aroused.

Our story is of a little girl, a little older than our little Lizzie, she being twelve years old. The name of this little girl's father was Jarius, he was a man of prominence, and distinction, being one of the rulers of the synagogue. A synagogue was a place where public services were conducted, all the exercises of religion, except the offering of sacrifices, could be conducted in synagogues. Sacrifices could only be offered in the tabernacle or temple. A ruler of a synagogue was one who presided over the assembly, and who conducted the religious services. A sort of minister, we presume.

Well, this little girl was perhaps an only child, she was loved and petted by her dear papa and mamma. Methinks I can see her sitting on her papa's knee, her arms around his neck, as I saw you, dear Lizzie, I can see him impart on her sweet face kisses of affection. She was her father's joy, her mother's pride. But this dear child was stricken down with disease. She lay moaning on her little bed, the roses had fled from her cheek, her bright dark eyes were glassy with the film of death, her little thin hands were folded languidly over her heaving bosom, her fond father and mother, in agony, beheld their drooping flower, physicians could do nothing for her, and the dreadful agonizing thought burst upon their minds, our darling must die; but oh, one ray of hope penetrated the darkness by which they were enshrouded. They hear of Jesus, perhaps He can save our child; we will appeal to Him. And they did appeal; how earnest is the petition of that grief-stricken father. It is said that he fell at the feet of Jesus, and besought Him greatly, saying, "My little daughter hath at the point of death; I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed, and she shall live." The dear Jesus heeded this earnest call, but ere He could reach her side, she was cold in death; her friends were weeping around her. But Jesus taking with Him three of His disciples and the parents of the maiden, entered this chamber of death; He went up to her, took her cold, lifeless hand in His, bent upon her His pitying gaze; then we hear the words, "Damsel, I say unto thee, arise." And what now! What sight meets the gaze of her astonished parents. Their little girl, whom they had so lately seen in the agony of death, who lay still and cold before them, now rises up in bed; and assisted by the hand of Jesus, she steps upon the floor, and walks about, and at the direction of Jesus, food is given her; and she eats.

This was one of the acts of kindness, dear Lizzie, which Jesus did while here on earth. It is said of Him, that He went about doing good. Oh how many happy hearts did He make; how many tears did He dry; He never looked upon suffering without sympathy. He is the same, sweet, loving Jesus yet, though we cannot see Him with our natural eyes. He loves you, dear Lizzie, and He loves all children now, just as He did when He was here on earth.

A HOME IN HEAVEN.

BY HARRIET RUCK.

WHAT a soul-cheering thought! to know and feel that if this, our earthly house or tabernacle, was dissolved, we have a home, a house not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens, for all who are willing to accept it. The Lord of that beautiful mansion has shown us the way and the terms by which we can obtain a permanent home without money and without price. Many of us, you, very many have loved ones who have crossed the river of death, and to-day, may be exploring that heavenly home, and singing praises to God and the Lamb that taketh away the sin of the world. But oh! let us pause a moment and think of the many poor, benighted souls throughout the world who never hear anything about that heavenly land, but are groping their way in sin and darkness, ignorant as to whom they are indebted for life, health, strength, and all that they have. O, may the time soon come when the true Gospel can be preached unto them, that they may be brought from darkness into light, and from sin into salvation, that they may share the bliss of that beautiful home.

But, dear brethren and sisters, let us ask ourselves, are we obeying the commands, or following the examples so clearly taught us in the divine Scriptures, in a way and manner that will secure for us a share in that blessed abode whose maker and builder is God? O, let us be up and doing, for the night of death draweth nigh. May we be enabled by His Spirit to obey, and we shall be abundantly blessed in this world and in the world to come. Although clouds and storms may sometimes obstruct our journey to our heavenly home, we may work our way so faithfully through all, that we may at last gain a happy entrance there and join the songs of the redeemed, and possess forever one of the many mansions prepared for the faithful.

May the Lord send some brother to preach for us here. Hear the Savior's solemn injunction, "Feed my sheep." May God bless us all and still guide us by the divine Spirit, and in the end may we find that rest that awaits the people of God.

WORKS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

QUERY ANSWERED.

I wish to know, through your paper, the meaning of the fifth verse of the third chapter of Titus.

W. B. GARDNER.

THE verse referred to above, reads as follows: "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost."

The "works of righteousness" spoken of in this passage, have reference to the old Jewish or Mosaic dispensation. In Romans 3: 20, Paul says, "By the deeds of the law there shall be no flesh justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin." He speaks of the deeds of the law, which has reference to the old dispensation. God had given them a work to do, viz: the ten commandments and the ordinances to be performed literally, and for the faithful observance thereof, they were to enter the promised land. We have to perform some things spiritually. They could not do it spiritually, because Christ had not made the way to heaven as plain for them as He has for us since His death on the Cross. Therefore they had to execute the will of God literally, while we do it spiritually also. Since the death on the Cross, we,

to enter the "promised land," must be "born again." We must be "transformed by the renewing of our mind" (Rom. 12: 2).

God had mercy on us; He pitied poor, fallen, degraded man, and by sending His Son into the world, opened the way to heaven.

We must be born of water and of the Spirit. The new birth is the meaning of "regeneration"—baptism of water, and baptism of the Holy Spirit. Baptism of water is for the "remission of sins," and baptism of the Holy Spirit is to bring "all things" to our remembrance, and to keep us free from sin, and fit us for the kingdom of heaven.

D. O. FRETZ.

WHY A WORKING-MAN SHOULD NOT ENLIST IN THE ARMY.

1. Because peace on earth is the highest aim of Christian civilization.
2. Because I have no right to endanger or destroy the lives of others.
3. Because there can be no glory in the slaughter of men or in the destruction of their works of industry.
4. Because barrack and camp life is demoralizing.
5. Because it is a folly to fight at all, more particularly against those with whom I have no quarrel.
6. Because I should have to quit all occupations for a life of uselessness.
7. Because the poor soldier has only in prospect the savage work of the battle-field; and as its reward mutilation, penny and dependence.
8. Because war between nations is productive of waste, want, and woe; and this enormous waste, both of men and money, has to be borne chiefly by the industrious classes.
9. Because war does not decide who is right or who is wrong, but simply who is the strongest.
10. Because war very seldom settles disputes between nations, as one war generally begets another.
11. Because if working-men refuse to enlist and fight about the disputes of others, rulers will be compelled to settle their disputes by peaceful means.
12. Because in time of war soldiers may be flogged or shot for the slightest act of disobedience.
13. Because at the command of my superiors I should have to fight even in an unjust cause against my conscience and my religion, and I might even be compelled to kill father, brother, or dearest friend.
14. Because by the "Regimental Exchange Act" officers are allowed to pay others to fight for them, but the poor soldier is denied the same privilege.
15. Because officers can marry whenever they please, but by military law the private soldier may not marry without the officer's consent.
16. Because crimes are generally kept up by rulers to keep down the liberties of the people.
17. Because fighting forces, instead of preserving peace, are, as history demonstrates, eventually calculated to provoke war.
18. Because if I enlisted I should in some degree strengthen the army, but if I refuse I shall, by withholding that strength, be doing my duty and setting an example to others.—The Abolitionist.

CAN CHRISTIANS FIGHT?

MAY God hasten the time when war shall be buried—that grim old breaker of hearts. Carry him out on a rusted shield. Put him down in the most desolate part of all the earth. Bury his sword with him. Heap on his grave-stone broken chariot wheels. Let widowhood and orphanage clap their hands over his burial and the winds howl for requiem.—Talbot.

War is the fruitful parent of crimes. It reverses all the rules of morality. It is nothing less than a temporary repeal of the principles of virtue. It is a system out of which almost all the virtues are excluded, and in which nearly all the vices are included. The morality of peaceful times is directly opposite to the maxims of war. The fundamental rule of the first is to do good; of the latter to inflict injuries.—Robert Hall.

Whence is it that wars still disgrace the self-styled Christian world! It is owing to the doctrine of expediency. If Christians had boldly looked in the face of their duty, as developed in the New Testament, this senseless, infernal system of wholesale butchery must long ago have ceased.—Redeem Smother.

True zeal is a sweet, heavenly and gentle flame, which maketh us active for God, but all ways within the sphere of love.

The Physical Culture of Women.

THIRTY-THREE years ago Dr. Hawes prepared, and delivered on a Sabbath-evening, a discourse, which he was pleased to call, "A Looking-glass for Ladies." It contained many practical and wise suggestions and was well received, producing at the time most happy results. We give below what he said upon the physical condition of women at that time, and we wonder what he would say if he were now living and should walk our streets, enter our schools, and visit our drawing-rooms with the average girl of sixteen, and young mother of twenty-five as a subject for observation.

How the virtuous woman strengthened her limbs and her arms, or how she acquired and maintained firm and vigorous health, we can be at no loss to know, after reading what is said of her occupations and habits. Though evidently of a high rank in society, she did not think it beneath her station nor inconsistent with her views of decency and refinement, to occupy herself in domestic affairs. From the whole description given of her, we are warranted to say that she was what is sometimes called, a "stirring body"; one who had always something to do, and was always doing it; not wasting her time and strength in ease, in indolence and inefficiency, but busy, active, industrious; rising early and seeing that all concerns of the household were attended to at the right time and in the right manner; and not unwilling when there was need to put a helping hand to whatever work was demanded to be done. This secured her health, kept her from enani, and the diabolical train of ills included in nervous affections, made her strong, vigorous and cheerful, and qualified her to fill, with usefulness and honor, the station assigned her in Providence.

The virtue, for such I must call it, here referred to, is sadly neglected in the training of our daughters at the present day. At least one would think so, from seeing the puny forms, and feeble frames and sickly faces of great numbers of our young females, especially of the higher classes. Account for it as we may, the fact must be admitted, that the muscular vigor and strength of our fair country-women have for a long time past been undergoing a melancholy change.

Our grandmothers, should they appear among us would scarcely recognize many of descendants as belonging to the same race with themselves, so diminished are they in size, vigor and early gait. But a small proportion of our adult females enjoy complete health for the stations they were called to occupy. The evil here complained of, is no doubt, to be traced chiefly to bad training in the nursery and in the family; to an ignorance or disregard of the laws of our physical system in respect to health. But the mischief commencing here, is often aggravated in schools and higher seminaries of learning, and receives its finish in the intercourse and habits of fashionable life. The mind, or brain, as the physiologist would say, is too severely taxed, is overworked in its tender age; sole attention is not paid to air and exercise; and in the eagerness to have the pupils compass the whole curriculum of knowledge in a given time, it is often forgotten by parents and teachers, how easily the health may be impaired by such a process, and so impaired, that the mind, the heart, the whole character shall shrink and dwindle into feebleness and inefficiency, and the life becomes vapid, useless and miserable. The evil here suggested is an appalling one. It deserves the most serious attention of all who wish well to the rising generation. It acts not on the body alone, but on the mind, on the intellectual and moral character, not on the fair sex alone, but on the other sex also, and is raising up a race of feeble and sickly beings, as unfit for the serious duties of life, as they are to enjoy the blessings of full and vigorous health.

My Secret of Success.

AN influential minister, being asked for the secret of his success wrote the following:

"The question has often been asked, 'What is the secret of the success attending these meetings?' As it cannot do any injury to the Master's cause, and might result in much good among our young ministers, and perhaps some others, I wish to make known what I believe to be the great secret.

"I put my heart, entire consecration to the service of God. This divests me entirely of my will, and gives me no cry in my heart, 'Thy will, O God, be done!'

"Secondly, I very often ask God for Jesus' sake to guide and direct me in everything; and I know He will do it, just because He said He would; and it is wholly impossible for Him to be

Thirdly, I do not pray to the people, but to God in the name of Jesus and for His sake; and I confidently expect to get what I ask for either just as I ask it, or in a much better way. — Same reasons as above.

Fourthly, I measure the length of my prayers by my faith; that is, when I get to the end of my faith I stop. This causes my prayers to be very short. If all would adopt this as a rule and never violate it, a great deal of good would be saved.

Fifthly, When I lack wisdom, and this is very often, I do not go to St. Peter, St. Paul, nor St. Mary; neither do I go to Adam Clarke, John Wesley, C. H. Spurgeon, nor to any D. D.; but I go right to God, because He has commanded me to do so. When I used to live in the country, I always preferred to go to the spring or well, rather than have water brought to me half a mile through the sun in a gourd. I don't object to reading good books; but I ask God to filter them well, so that I may not swallow any trash.

Now I have given my honest convictions; and if am wrong, I pray God, in Jesus' name to forgive me for His sake."

The article breathes a commendable spirit, showing an entire submission to the will of the Father. We need more of such submissive wills among the ministry. In the preaching of the Word their motto should be: "Not my will but thine be done."

We like his remarks on faith and prayer, but think him mistaken about not going to "St. Peter and St. Paul," for knowledge. They were earthen vessels chosen of God, and wrote as they were directed by the Spirit. They were agents of the Spirit to record and teach the Words of the Spirit, and to refuse going to them for knowledge, would be refusing the Holy Spirit's direct agents. Clark, Wesley, Spurgeon or the D. D.'s may be wrong, but Peter and Paul cannot be.

Water, taken directly from the well is always the best, but I see no use in discarding the pump, just because it is not the well. Those who discard Peter and Paul, reject God's divinely appointed agency used in conveying the Word of Life to mankind. Faith, prayer and works want to go together.—Bis.

Nearness of Death.

WHEN we walk near powerful machinery we know that one misstep and those mighty engines will tear us to ribbons with their flying wheels or grind us to powder in their ponderous jaws. So when we are thundering across the land in a railroad carriage and here is nothing but an inch of iron flange to hold us on the line. So when we are in a ship, and there is nothing but the thickness of a plank between us and eternity. Whether on the sea or on the land, the partition that divides us from eternity is something less than the oak plank or a half-inch iron flange.

The machinery of life and death is within us. The tissues that hold the beating powers in their places are often not thicker than a sheet of paper, and if then this partition be ruptured it would be the same as if a cannon-ball had struck us. Death is inseparably bound up with life in the very structure of our bodies. Struggle as he would to widen the space, no man can at any time go further from death than the thickness of a sheet of paper. How important then that we be ever ready to meet the silent messenger.—The Guide.

The subject of this notice was a member of the church for a number of years and in his death the church loses an exemplary member. Among his Christian virtues, meekness and kindness were prominent traits. He would seldom if ever, allow a harsh or unkind word to escape his lips. Being kind and sociable, all who knew him, (and he was well-known throughout our county) were his friends. His wife preceded him about twenty years, having lived only a few months after their marriage.— He lived only five days after he was stricken with paralysis, and although his mind was very much confused, we have the hope that he has met a reconciled God. His remains were followed to their last resting place, by the largest concourse of friends and relatives, we have ever witnessed on a similar occasion. Funeral services by elders Daniel Snowberger and George W. Brumbaugh from Heb. 9: 27. C. L. BUCK.

HIXON.—Near Blairstown, Iowa, Bro. Isaiah Hixon, March 3, 1878, aged about 50 years. Left a widow and five children to mourn their loss, which, we hope, is his great gain. Funeral services by Bro. P. Farney from 1 Cor. 15: 22. S. JOHNSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Madison, Kansas.

Dear Brethren:— I LEFT home on the 25th of April for Cana church in Elk Co., a distance of sixty-eight miles, had meeting from the 26th to the 29th. On the last named date met with the Brethren in church council to set things in order. The church here, has been for some time in a rather dilapidated condition, but everything now seems to turn out more favorable, so that some thanked God and took courage.

From here we went to the Silver Creek church, Cowley Co.; distance thirty-five miles. Found the little band of brethren and sisters in love and union. Spent a short time here, during which an election was held for a speaker. The lot fell on Bro. E. Prickett; also advanced Bro. J. J. Troxle to the second degree; baptized one sister.

From here we went to Sumner Co., fifteen miles North-west of Wilmington, and forty-five miles from our last place of meeting. We met here with Bro. Bashor from Mo. Spent a few days with the Brethren, organized a church, elected two deacons, and Bro. J. Troxel to the ministry at this place. There seemed to be good interest manifested, and there were three applicants for baptism to be attended to on Sunday following.

From here we went to Wickata, distance forty miles. Would have organized here, but Bro. Reath did not meet us as we expected at Sumner to make arrangements. We had only a short time to stop at this point. We spent what little time we had, visiting members among whom were some old acquaintances.

From this place we went to Reno Co.; distance fifty-five miles. Here we also organized a church, elected two deacons. Here quite an interest was manifested, and we felt somewhat reluctant to leave. We felt that good could be done here, but other fields of labor still ahead, bade us take the parting hand. At this place Bro. J. H. Fishel is their minister in the second degree.

From this place went to Peabody, by way of Hutchinson and McPherson Co.; distance 82 miles. At this place met with the Brethren in church council; only stopped one day.— Left Peabody for home, a distance of sixty-one miles. Traveled in all 380 miles; got home on the 18th of May. Found all well, thank the Lord. J. BUCK.

From Newton Church, Ohio.

Dear Brethren:—

IT may not be amiss to give a little description of this arm of the church, situated in Miami Co., Ohio. We number about two hundred members, and are apparently in a healthy and flourishing condition under the care of our faithful and much respected elder Samuel Mohler of the Covington church (of which district this was formerly a part). We had our yearly visit several weeks ago, and found the members in love and union. Our church meeting passed off without an unpleasant feeling; excepting one case, and that was in regard to a young brother who was so blinded by the god of this world, that he could not see any harm in belonging to a secret society, and so was more willing to lose his membership with the church of the living God, than lose his (imaginary) interest in a worldly organization, that, in the judgment of the church is anti-Christian.

Our Love-feast came off on the 5th and 6th of June; had very beautiful weather and a very large congregation. Between three and four hundred members communed. Most of the preaching was done by Bro. James Quinter of Pa.; Bro. Z. Sharp of Tenn.; and Bro. Jesse Stutzman of Dark Co., O. The house was much crowded at night, but the order was good inside, though the crowd outside, became somewhat unruly before the close of services. E. BEERY.

From Union Church, Ind.

Dear Brethren:—

WE will try and give you a brief account of our Love-feast which is now among the things of the past. On the evening of the fourth, at an early hour the people began coming in, so that by five o'clock, the time appointed to begin, our large meeting-house was filled. There were present with us five ministering brethren, Jesse Calvert, David Ruppel, D. Whitmer, D. Freeman and another brother from Illinois, whose name I have forgotten. Our brethren labored for us very earnestly. Six precious souls were made willing to forsake sin and follow Jesus and were, with nine more, baptized next morning. O how it made our hearts rejoice to see so many come out on the side of the Lord! Our communion was the largest ever held here in this district; it is said that there were about 550 surrounding the table of the Lord. Our mind was carried back to Calvary's mount, while our blessed Savior was suffering upon the Cross for the sins of the world, and then again we can look by an eye of faith to the evening of the world when we shall be seated around the table of the Lord.— Then Christ will gird himself and serve us, and dear brethren and sisters, what a glorious time that will be, when we shall all meet around the great white throne, there to sing the praises of the Redeemer forever and ever. J. APPLEMAN.

Read and Make Notes of.

MY eyes fell lately upon a dilapidated paper, entitled Farmer's Review, which had been mysteriously placed before me. My attention was at once attracted by the above text. I saw at a single glance that some worldly enterprise was being imposed upon or being counterfeited. The thought like lightning flashed through my mind: how many men and women are to-day sailing under false pretences, and have, ever since the days of our Saviour, the time when He instituted that eternal enterprise which cannot be counterfeited, though men may tamper with it and work it over and over in every conceivable form that their devices can mould, it still retains its purity in which all may find a common interest, and all may be entitled to one individual and equal share and become stockholders of the one great enterprise which will secure for all a fortune, a mansion, a home beyond the skies. There will be no spurious and defective organizations, but all will be governed by one who is above all. Everything is under the leadership of one, who has before told you that He is King of Kings, and Lord of lords; one who will trample under foot every building, that is not founded on the everlasting Gospel.

But to the text. Since then, there have from time to time appeared numerous companies, uniting themselves in strong bands to take upon themselves the name of Christ; but attempt to build upon some other foundation than the one given by Him. My mind is now wandering over this vast world, from East to West and from North to South, in the hilly country and in the vales, in the cities of the old and new worlds, in the public parks and in the places of worship; how many are sailing under false colors, and seem to be marching under the banner of Christianity. They appear to be beautiful for a while, but when the chilling blasts of temptations overshadow them, they find their hands becoming loosed, and they begin to fall like the vessel, now standing in the sun; once it contained the water from which so many quenched their thirst, now it is of no use. Like the flowers of the field that once so beautifully east forth their lustrous hues, but when the heat of the sun scorched the ground and absorbed the moisture, the beautiful flowers began to droop and fade into a colorless and lifeless bit of decomposing matter.

Is it not a plain fact that hundreds and thousands of professing Christians to-day, do not know the importance of the Constitution and By-laws of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, and they have not the courage to examine the Statutes for themselves; but will depend on a non-elder that will, for a given compensation, agree to expound the law, with all its latest additions and amendments up to a given time. Such is the confused state of Christianity at this present time and enlightened (?) age!

Then, my Christian friend and kind reader, when we look at all the vain allotments, the follies, the evil temptations, the fashionable gewgaws, the places of amusement, such as theaters, fairs, bar-rooms, ball-rooms, church-festivals, and things pertaining thereto; we feel sad, and are made to compare them with such scenes as that of Abraham in Gen. 22: 10.

Yes, there is a great difference between the worldly amusements and the solemn scenes depicted in the Bible. Imagine Christ, standing before Pilate; call to your remembrance His sufferings on the cross, where he atoned for the sins of the whole world, and how could any one cling to the world and its vanities, instead of accepting this loving Saviour? Let us turn our eyes to the blood-stained banner, the bleeding form that was pierced and nailed to the cross; let us behold the crown of thorns that decorated his head, and then think of the precious truth, that all was for the love of his people, and that it was for the sake of redeeming fallen man from eternal perdition.

Our eyes often sicken in beholding the vanities of this world, and we dive deeply into the sacred truth of the great Law-giver, that we may realize the blessings with all those that keep His laws and continue therein.

Now the article above referred to, (speaking of insurance companies) says, that the agents understand these things, but we learn of some who endeavor to mislead the people; so say we, for we have been told by one before us, that there shall grievous wolves enter in among you, and shall not spare the flocks. "Even of yourselves shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them." Therefore watch, and remember there is but one policy and insurance company in which to insure, and that is the policy of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, all others are spurious.

Dear brethren and sisters examine your policies carefully. Are you sure that they contain all the conditions that are in the original, that when the storm of this life is over, and the devouring flames of death shall almost overwhelm you, you may pass safely through them. Order all your transactions in the right manner, that when you are called before the great Judge, to show your claims, they will be accepted of Him, and that you may receive the reward of eternal Life; for greater insurance than this, can no man have. — Then beware of false colors, and make notes, is my prayer. H. W. STRICKLER.

GLEANINGS.

From Milledgeville, Ill.—Our Love-feast is one of the things of the past. It was a feast to our souls, more so, because two souls became willing to enter into covenant relations with Christ, to live faithful until death. One dear, young sister on the morning of our feast, was called to cross, the river of death, to meet those who have gone before. She left many friends to mourn their loss, but our loss, we hope, is her gain. She left no evidence that all was well. Oh, may God help us all to so live that we need not fear death. What is life? It is but a vapor, soon it vanisheth away. May the Lord ever keep us in our line of duty, that we may be able to say, Come, welcome death! J. E. STURGEON.

From E. A. Orr.—Please correct the following in my article, entitled: "Let us measure up." "Fruit of our life," should read, "Fruit of our lips." "It tells everything that is measuring," should read, "necessary for measuring." To "comparing ourselves," should be added "among ourselves."

From I. F. Kelso.—In No. 28 of your paper my name is printed "I. F. Kelso." It should be "L. F. Kelso." Also in No. 13, in the poetry, entitled evening hymn, the name should read, "Isabella F. Kelso," instead of "Sabella Kelso."

From W. A. Peters.—Our church is in a prosperous condition; moving steadily onward in the Master's cause. We have had twenty-four accessions to the church by baptism in the last four weeks. Two the first Sunday in May, one the second, one the fourth, and twenty to-day.—Bro. John Elder and John Naff were with us to-day. The Word was preached in its purity with great power to a large audience with many good impressions, which we believe will result in more additions soon. We rejoice to see that there are some willing to enlist under the banners of King Jesus, and take His yoke upon them and learn of Him the way of salvation; for it is promised only through obedience to the Gospel of Jesus; neither is there salvation in other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved. Then it is our duty to obey the Gospel of Jesus, if we would be happy with all the sanctified and redeemed of the earth.—The Brethren here are attentive to the home mission. May the Lord bless them in their labors in bringing souls to Christ. Big Creek, Va., June 2, 1878.

A Mountain Split Apart.

The following is clipped from the Breton and Herald.

A great excitement prevails throughout the Western portion of this State, N. C., particularly along the ridge of Bald Mountain. About two years ago, it will be remembered, great excitement was created on account of the wonderful and explicable noises heard in the bowels of Bald Mountain. Scientists from all sections of the country visited the neighborhood where these strange sounds were heard, but never gave any intelligible reasons for the strange phenomena. On Saturday these amazing sounds in the bowels of the mountain were again heard, and the people along the mountain side and in the villages became excited, hundreds of them seeking places of safety. These sounds resembling thunder apparently proceeded from the inmost depths of the mountain. On yesterday the mountain range began to yield, and to-day it was literally split in twain, leaving a chasm three hundred feet in length and twenty feet in width, the depth of which seems a bottomless abyss. No smoke or lava has yet been thrown from the crater. Bald Mountain bids fare to become the American Vesuvius.

At a recent noonday prayer-meeting in Chicago, the following statements were crayed on a black-board: Strong drink costs $1,000,000,000 a year in money; it makes fifty per cent. of our insane; it makes sixty five per cent. of our paupers; it causes directly seventy-five per cent. of our murders; it makes eighty per cent. of our criminals; it sends forth ninety-five per cent. of our vicious youth, and it sends one every six minutes into a drunkard's grave, or nearly 100,000 a year.

—The destructive wind storms that have visited various quarters of our own country have been small compared with one which occurred in April in China, which proves to have been even worse than the telegrams reported at the time. Seven thousand bodies have been taken from the ruins and buried and many yet remain. Besides not less than one thousand perished upon the water. The force of the wind was such that not only houses but stone walls of the heaviest character were leveled.

THE COMFORTER.

IN God let all His saints rejoice,
With thankful heart and cheerful voice;
Thou, O God, art so kind, so true,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

Sweet words! O, let us bless His name,
And joyful all His praise proclaim,
These words shall foes and fears subdue,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

Are you in darkness and distress?
Has Satan won and break your peace?
Be not sad, but still His truth review,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

Do long afflictions on you lay?
And pungent sorrows day by day?
Look to the Word, I will bear you through,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

Is death in gloomy form appear,
And o'er your helm grim soul with fear,
Let this sweet word your faith renew,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

Thus while you sojourn here below,
As pilgrims in this world of woe,
Make this your song the journey through,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

THE BEAUTY OF MORAL CULTURE.

BY E. C. HOLLEMBERGER.

"MAN," it has been said, "is the noblest of God's terrestrial work;" and the truthfulness of the statement strikes us more forcibly when he is viewed in a moral sense. He is the only being that possesses moral power; the only one that possesses a cognition of right and wrong. It is this that distinguishes him from the lower species of animals, and lifts him into a sphere infinitely more exalted than that occupied by the brute.

Viewed as a social being he is interesting and amiable, kind and loving to all who are related to him by kindred ties. Willing, at any time, to sacrifice his life, health, wealth, honor, power, and, if need be, his life, upon the altar of his relations. But viewed in a moral sense, how much brighter does he shine! Deprive man of his moral faculties, and he will be, of his nature, the most miserable. But with them he becomes related to Him, who is the Creator of all minds; becomes akin to angels; for He made them but a little lower.

Seeing, then, the beauty and, in fact, the necessity of moral culture, how assiduously should we labor to attain to that moral eminence, which is a marked characteristic of the true man? The moral faculties may be likened unto a garden, in which the choicest virtues germinate, grow, and yield abundant luscious fruit. Hence grow charity, faith, justice, abstinence, gentleness, constancy, hope, and if these be properly cultivated, what a noble character they will produce! Their fruits, how delicious! They will yield a harvest, upon which the hungry soul may feast throughout the ages of eternity, and yet not be exhausted. But instead of these virtues growing in this garden, how often is it the receptacles of vice, fraud, envy, malice, deceit, jealousy, slander, and all that is evil and debasating! This should not be. It was not the design of our Creator that our hearts should be so corrupted. He created us pure, with not a blemish upon our infant hearts, and it was His design that we should remain so; but owing to evil surroundings and associates, and a want of proper moral training, our hearts become stained, polluted and filthy, which the blood of Christ only could purify.

The cause of so much immorality in the world, is owing to parents failing to see the importance of subjecting their children to a moral and moral training. The moral influence of a great many parents of today is alarmingly deficient. Were it otherwise, many of the sins and vices that blacken the hearts of our youth would even cease to exist. The mother does not seem to realize that the sleeping infant in her arms enshroues a spirit that is destined to live through the countless ages of eternity, either for weal or woe; and not like our mighty works of art, perish, and all this material world, pass away. If parents could only realize this fact, and when the child begins to develop self-will, anger, revenge, apply the proper moral restraint, that seems so necessary in many households, how much better would our young men and women become! If they were properly trained, they would grow up into affectionate, energetic, self-denying men and women; be a blessing to their associates, loved by them while living, and when the brief dream of life is over, be remembered long after the roses on their graves have ceased to bloom. How despicable is the wretch who debases all moral influence, and cultivates only the baser part of his nature! He extirpates all that is good and noble, like the rank weed chokes the growth of the beautiful rose by its side, and you see a life far worse than worthless.

But this downward course is not abrupt. It had a simple beginning. The heart of the felon, the murderer was once as pure as an angel; but the first approach of evil was not sternly repulsed. If we would not take the first drink, we would not become drunkards; and if we would never commit the first wrong, we would never become bad men and women. It is the first step in crime that swings us from the girdle. Evil is generally clothed in splendid attire. We embrace it, but like the gorgeous monuments that visit along the departed, beneath nothing but corruption and decay. It comes to us robed in glowing colors, and we bow to him who yields. How truthfully has the gospel port declared:

We are not worse at once. The course of evil begins so slowly, and from such slight sources. An infant's hand could stem its branch with clay. But as the stream grows deeper, and philosophy, Aye, and religion, to a small tribe in vain, To stem the headlong torrent.

In order to attain to any degree of morality, our minds must be enlarged. Intellect must be developed. When the basilar region of the brain is very large, and the frontal deficient, physiologically speaking, you will find but little morality in such a being. To develop intellect, exercise and proper food are necessary; to develop intellect it must be exercised, and to develop the moral part of our being, it must be exercised and fed with nutritious food. As our bodies would languish without food that would produce tissue and fibers, so will our minds become debilitated, weak, and with material that stimulates and strengthens. According, then, to the foregoing premises, to develop moral power, our mind must be fed with such food as will produce morality, and we have nothing, just now, better to recommend than moral literature—literature that elevates and refines, instead of that which debases. But this, lamentable as it is, is not always the case. Our youth seem to seek for something exciting and of a sensational character. Instead of storing their minds with Scripture truths, they will indulge in some exciting and, perhaps, obscene story contained in the New York Weekly, the Sensationalist, or some other hell-begotten periodical. Such mental food will not make a moral man. It produces abnormal appetites. The more they devour, the more they crave. They devour bloody tales and romances with apparent relish, and still cry for more. With such diet, they become lean and wretched victims of a morbid appetite, which no gluttony can satisfy, and if they do not die at an early age of "mental dyspepsia," their existence will be ended in the State prison, or, perhaps, gallows. We think the picture is not one overdrawn. There are examples around us that corroborate every statement we have made. Thus, then, being the case, how assiduously should we labor to bring to bear upon us all that will contribute to elevate us in character; for character is everlasting. It should be our object to do all the good we can. Let it never be idle. If we can't make ourselves happy, let us try to make others happy. There are many around us who need sympathy.

"Count that day lost, whose low descending sun Vies from thy hand to noble actions done."

Let that be our motto. And while we are striving to educate the mind, let us not forget the heart, and the wider sphere of our affections. While we are endeavoring to improve our own condition, let us not forget the more unfortunate to whom we can always lend a helping hand, and by so doing,

"Earn names that win

Happy remembrance from the great and good—
Names that shall sink not in oblivion's flood,
But with their music, like a church-bell chime,
Sound through the rivers, sweep of onward-rushing time."

Hypocrite, Ill.

FAITH.

BY GEORGE WEAVER.

"FAITH is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (Heb. 11: 1). By it we see how the ancient worthies performed wonders. Abraham was willing to sacrifice his son, looking forward to the benefit to be derived therefrom; because God promised and Abraham believed, and because of his faith, the Lord said, "In blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying, I will multiply thy seed, as the stars of heaven, and as sand upon the sea."

By faith Noah, when he was warned of things to come, yet not seen, through fear built an ark for his temporal salvation, according to the directions God gave; and by that means was saved, while the flood came and swept away the ungodly as God foretold; so Abraham became the father of the faithful, all through faith. Peter says, "The like figure whereunto baptism doth also now save us." Paul says, "The just shall live by faith;" but James says, "Faith without works is dead, being alone, but without faith it is impossible to please God; for he that will come to Him must first believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of all them that diligently seek Him." Nature without revelation it seems to me would prove to every well balanced mind, the existence of a God; an ever-acting Providence, a mighty God and a merciful God. Now when revelation comes up and declares also the existence of a God, who created all things, visible and invisible, inspired men have told us—who placed the sun in the firmament to give us light by day, the moon and stars to give light by night; caused the earth to revolve upon its axis, so all the earth will receive the benefit of the sun once a day. The effects we see, but the Author we do not see, only with the eye of faith. Now in the face and eyes of all these evidences, who would not give reverence, honor and glory, such a supreme Being? He has given us the promise of eternal life upon the conditions of the Gospel.

Dear reader, cast not away your confidence which hath great recompense of reward; for we have need of patience that after we have done the will of God, we may receive the promise. Moses, also one of the ancients who refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, would rather suffer afflictions with his own people—the people of God, than be a son of the great and noble, seeing by faith a land out of sight flowing with milk and honey. The wonders he performed before he got his people started, are recorded in the Bible, esteeming the enjoyment of that land more than the treasures of Egypt. When the proper arrangements were made, he left the land of Egypt, not fearing the king. With rod in hand through the power of God, he smote the waters of the Red Sea, so they parted to make a highway for him to escape out of the land of bondage with all his people who had served the tyrant king four hundred and fifty years. When the waters obeyed, the people passed through as by dry land, which the Egyptians essaying to do were drowned, the waters closing over them. A song of deliverance was sung when they all arrived safe on the other shore. They were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea. Then the perilous journey through the wilderness began; it was not for the lath they had in God and their leader, Moses, they would perhaps have turned back, but seeing the land of promise afar off, they journeyed on although many fell in the wilderness; as we see many fall now, who start for the land of promise. Those that were faithful obtained the promise, saw the land of promise, enjoyed its sweets; yet instead of a forty day's journey, it required a forty year's pilgrimage, before they were permitted to cross over the Jordan. And why? Answer, because of unbelief; and then out of that vast number that left Egypt, only two got across.

O dear reader, here is a picture for you to look at. Out of six hundred thousand that were permitted to see the miraculous power of God, and the wonders of Moses and the mercy of God, all along their pathway,—that they should fall by the way, is indeed astounding, but the Bible narrative gives the fact, and we have confidence in the Word, and accept it as a warning to us, and send it out to you, friendly reader, as a warning, that, after we have passed over the Red Sea (baptism), we are only starting through the wilderness. This world of ours although we may see Him who is invisible by faith, we may receive mercy, and pass by the way; we sometimes get bitter water instead. We who have tried to serve the Lord a good while, know, and say for the good of those who have not been in the service so long, bitter with the sweet we must endure; but look forward by faith to Him who is able and also willing to give us eternal life. After we get through the wilderness, and pass over the Jordan of death, we shall look in the land of rest, where God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes, and lead us to living fountains, that never run dry, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

THE TRUE RESTING PLACE.

PERHAPS you may have heard some one say, "I would like to go to the land of rest." If you desire that, you will have a little farther, or a little higher, than you may make a change of place, that is, your home, but it will take a few trials, that you can't see to follow it, and will not succeed in it, unless you take wings of rest and fly quite away. Thus it is with us; when the Lord drives us from one creation-rest, we presently pick up another, but he will not allow us to rest upon any, at length like the bird, we can't rest; that we can have no safety, no stable place below; then our hearts take flight, and soar heavenward, and we are taught by the Spirit to place our treasures and affections in the reach of change.

IN MEMORIAM OF CHARLEY BAUMAN.

BY ARON MOSS.

SWEET Spring will visit hill and plain,
And summer flowers will bloom;
But Charley will not come again,—
He slumbers in the tomb.

He bade his dearest friends adieu;
No more we hear his songs;
His little grave is all we view,
Since he is dead and gone.

No more at home or school
His smiling face we see;
It makes us very sorrowful
To see his vacant seat.

O, where is Charley's spirit now?
What garments does he wear?
Does he with lovely angels bow,
And join his hands in prayer?

Say, is he in that heavenly land?
And will he never grow old?
And is there in his little hand
A harp of purest gold?

Is there around his infant brow,
A crown of diamonds bright?
Does he behold the Savior now,
And is it always light?

Is he where living waters flow,—
Where lovely flowers bloom?
No pain or sorrow does he know?
Lives he beyond the tomb?

The Bible tells us parents dear,
There is a land above,
Where Jesus dwells, they need no sun,
All there is light and love.

Dear little children he did bless,
And bade them come to Him;
He gave them robes of righteousness
His blood doth cleanse from sin.

The Savior spoke in accents mild,
To such the kingdom's given;
Except ye come, a little child,
Ye cannot enter heaven.

Then let us prize this heavenly friend,
For all His mercy shown;
His angels will our steps attend,
And bear our spirits home.

He leads where living waters flow,
And flowers forever bloom;
No pain or sorrow do they know,
Who dwell beyond the tomb.

THE TWO WITNESSES, THE TWO OLIVE TREES, AND THE TWO CANDLESTICKS.

BY MATTHEW LEAR.

"And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and three score days, clothed in sackcloth. These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth" (Rev. 11: 3, 4)

NUMERICAL.

VERSE 10, "And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another: because these two prophets tormented them that dwell on the earth." In all great conflicts the victorious party manifests its joy by similar exhibitions as that described above; the language is that of triumph—of hilarity and joy.

History informs us that at the close of the very council of the Lateran, which pronounced the epiphany of these witnesses, every exhibition of joy and gladness were made. The reigning pontiff Leo X, received splendid gifts from various realms, and especially from the king of Portugal, with congratulations that Rome was now supreme, and the pope conferred on the king in return half the Eastern world. The most splendid feasts, and the most luxurious dinners were given, toasts were drunk, elegant speeches were made, congratulations the most fervent were expressed, and the special subject of joy, says the historians, was the total resolution of the heresies, and the healing of the French schism. Dean Waddington, says, "At this moment the pillars of the papal strength seemed visible and palpable, and Rome surveyed them with exultation from her golden palaces." "The assembled princes and prelates separated from the council with complacency, confidence, and mutual congratulations on the peace, unity, and purity of the church."

Verse 11, "And after three days and a half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them." As we have before remarked, it was just three years and a half from the time the fifth Lateran council proclaimed the death of the witnesses, May 5th 1514, until Martin Luther posted his ninety-five theses upon the gates of the church at Wittenburg, October 31st 1517. The posting of those theses, then, the only mode of public advertisement, produced a wonderful sensation which was powerfully felt to the remotest bounds of Christendom; it wakened Europe from its sleep of ages; summoned, as it were, from their graves the slain witnesses, and again is heard louder and in more earnest tones their protestations against the errors and corruptions of the papacy. This voice, so suddenly, so powerfully, so mysteriously raised, awed, and amazed the worshipers of the beast. They had thought all opposition was at an end, and they had pronounced the words, "There is no more to appear," or to oppose, or as it might be exclaimed, "heresy is extinguished." What then must have been their surprise, their chagrin, when after three and a half years silence, they are opposed more earnestly, more eloquently, more powerfully than ever; like the guilty Herod they no doubt felt that their slain witnesses had arisen from the dead, and therefore mighty works did show forth themselves in them. "And great fear fell upon them that saw them."

The history of the Reformation fully verifies the above words; great indeed was the consternation, and perplexity that seized the votaries of Rome when they beheld their institutions attacked from this new source, and how the lion of Rome exerted all his strength to quell this expanding opposition. But his thunders were now comparatively demurred of their terrors."

Verse 12, "And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, 'come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them.' That the heaven here spoken of is not the heaven, the place where God's throne is, is evident from the fact that their enemies beheld these witnesses after their ascent. The expression is no doubt figurative. The best explanation of it will perhaps be found in Isaiah 54: 13. Here the proud king of Babylon is presented to us in all the glory and haughtiness of his power, he declares his purpose of ascending into heaven, of exalting his throne above the stars of God. That is, he resolves to occupy the very highest pinnacle of political honor, and power; he determines to establish his throne above every other throne. He will possess supreme power, and exercise unlimited despotism. By the expression, "they ascended up to heaven," means, we think, that now the church which had so long prophesied clothed in sackcloth; the church which had for 1200 years been in the wilderness, shrouded in a state of obscurity, wholly separated from the world, had in an humble and lowly capacity proclaimed the truth unmingled with error, was now about to obtain great national and civil power. She was now about to enter the political arena; she was about to occupy royal thrones, and be clothed in kingly purple; her sackcloth was now to be laid aside; she was no longer to be in a state of obscurity, but her place was henceforth to be in the cabinet of princes, and in the halls of legislation. What a change! But what was the result? Did the church retain her purity after she had parted with her simplicity? the sequel will tell.

The language used in Rev. 6: 12-17, is somewhat similar to that we are now considering. This language, we believe, is generally understood to imply the occurrence of a vast revolution; a revolution no less momentous than the transition from paganism to Christianity. The sun, moon and stars in the political firmament of paganism are about to be removed, and their place filled by the professors of the religion of Jesus Christ. But this stupendous revolution had no good to Christianity. The purest hours for the church, are her hours of persecution. When all the forces of the world were arrayed against her, she drew her beautiful garments closely around her, and nestled near the cross. There in that hallowed retreat, she grew more lovely, more unearthly radiant. But oh when the world took her beneath its fostering care, when she basked in the sunshine of royal favor, alas how soon was her beauty tarnished; the gold how it became dim, her spotless robes how they became soiled with the filth of the world. James says, "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend to the world, is the enemy of God." And surely the history of the church fully verifies this declaration.

We find that when pagan persecution ceased, and the church enjoyed royal favor and protection, she gradually lost her distinctive purity, and merged into the mere semblance of Christianity. So we find that the same pernicious effects followed, after papal persecutions ceased, and the protestant church, (that is the witnesses, for protestant is composed of two words, pro before, and testari to be a witness to testify, from testis a witness. Protestant then means a witness), and the church was placed beneath royal patronage. In proportion as her outward prosperity increased, so her inner purity and spirituality diminished. Soon the church became distracted by internal broils and disputes, factions and sects multiplied, rancorous, and stormy discussions took place. Gross errors of doctrine crept in, good works were gradually ignored; many of the plain commands of God's Word were subverted or obscured, and the whole plan of salvation became disjointed and disarranged, until now, what a confused, disconnected spectacle protestantism presents, a very Babel!

But Christ will always have a visible church, a church that will not shun to declare the whole counsel of God; accordingly when the protestant church lost her distinctive features, when she failed to bear a full and clear testimony to the truth, then God raised up other standard bearers. In the beginning of the eighteenth century, in an obscure town in Germany, there arose a little band of Christians deeply imbued with the spirit of Christianity. From this little church, this golden candlestick, the pure undimmed light of the glorious Gospel again shone forth. And we bless God, this little rivulet has increased and widened until now, it is in volume a deep majestic stream. And our sincere prayer is, O Lord preserve it pure, for bid that it should lapse into the condition of the Ephesian or Laodicean churches, or become like the church at Sardis, having but a name to live while she is dead; but oh may she be like the church at Smyrna, outwardly poor, but inwardly rich.

"And their enemies beheld them." The meaning of behold is, "To fix the eyes upon; to look at; to see with attention; to observe with care."—Webster. It expresses emotion, anxiety, wonder, astonishment. And we learn that when the adherents of the papacy saw the ascent of these witnesses, when they saw that heresy, which they had so long tried to crush, and which they had, as they had thought just succeeded in crushing, now arise from its deep depression, when they saw palaces admit it, kings listening to those who proclaimed it, the great ones of the earth protecting it, and giving it their earnest attention, they were filled with consternation and alarm. They beheld it with envy, with hatred, with vexation.

Verse 13, "And the same hour there was a great earthquake, and a tenth part of the city fell and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand; and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven." In Rev. 6: 12, it is said, when the sixth seal was opened, "lo there was a great earthquake." If the opening of the sixth seal portrays the overthrow of paganism and the establishment of Christianity on its ruins, then this earthquake must mean a moral earthquake, so in the verse we are considering, the language is no doubt figurative. It expresses some great moral revolution. This revolution took place in the forepart of the sixteenth century. Popery was in several countries of Europe superseded by protestantism.

And the tenth part of the city fell. The word city does not mean, a large corporate town, but it also means a state, the body of the country, a community of citizens, etc. A tenth part of the city then means, a tenth part of the dominions controlled by the papal hierarchy. Now the ten principal divisions of the Western half of the Roman empire, controlled by the papish influence, are the following: the Anglo-Saxons; the Franks of Central France; the Ulman Franks of Eastern France; the Burgundic Franks of the South-eastern France; the Visigoths; the Suevic; the Wandals; the Ostrogoths in Italy; the Bavarians; the Lombards. These divisions are generally acknowledged by most historians. The Anglo-Saxons now comprise Great Britain, and this division separated from the papedom A. D. 1535. The cause of this was, the quarrel of Henry VIII with the pope, the latter refusing to grant him a divorce from Queen Catharine. This division was the first that withdrew from the papacy in that great revolution, that great moral earthquake which shook Europe to its foundation, in the forepart of the sixteenth century. The peace of Pisan 1529, established protestantism in Germany, which was the next separation caused by this great earthquake. Again it is said, "in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand." It is said that in the original it reads, "seven chilids," denoting seven princelings under the dominion or rule of princes.

Now we find by referring to history, that in the year 1567 the Netherlands which were then subjects to Spain revolted. This revolt was caused by the persecutions, and cruelties of Philip 2nd. After a long and bloody war, the Dutch succeeded in throwing off the Spanish yoke. They then formed themselves into a confederacy, called the Republic of Holland. This Republic comprised the following provinces: Holland, Zealand, Utrecht, Friesland, Groningen, Overijssel, and Guelderland. These were the seven principalities or chiliads, which in the year 1579 split off from the Papal ecclesiastical tyranny. Another rent caused by the great earthquake; another dismemberment of the papal dominions.

It is next said, and the remnant affrighted, that is those who still adhered to Rome in those countries which had seceded from her dominions. Accordingly we find that when the Romanists recollect their former cruelties which they had perpetrated on the protestants, and now when they say those protestants raised the civil and political power, they were affrighted. As they were now the weaker party they expected retaliation; they expected the same treatment from the protestants, as the protestants had received from them, and we are sorry to say their fears were not groundless. Protestantism borrowed too many of Rome's weapons. In England particularly, during the reigns of Elizabeth and the Stewart Kings, the laws and enactments against the Roman Catholics were peculiarly severe and unjust. They were indeed made, to some extent, to feel the rod, which they themselves had used so cruelly.

Again, it is said, "and gave glory to the God of heaven." The sense seems to be, they the papists were affrighted, and they the witnesses gave glory to the God of heaven. From our common version, we would suppose the meaning to be the papists gave glory to God. But those who are acquainted with the original, tell us that idion and structure of the Greek will admit of the former signification, and this is a historical fact. When the church in the time of Constantine was raised to unclouded sunshine, and paganism was crushed; the triumphant Christians in hymns and songs every where expressed their gratitude to God. Eusebius a contemporary writer thus expresses himself: "Formerly we used to sing, we have heard what Thou didst in our fathers' days, but now we have to sing a new song of victory, our eyes have seen his salvation." So the protestant or witnessing church after their triumph over popery sang joyful songs and gave glory to God for their victory. Thus Elizabeth after the defeat of the Spanish armada, which came to papalize England again, went into procession to the cathedral of St. Paul's, and gave glory to God for this victory. But oh how baneful in both cases was temporal prosperity, and the fostering care of princes. In both cases the declension from Gospel purity and simplicity was rapid and alarming.

Now we have tried to explain this difficult chapter, it has caused us much labor and toil, but if we have thrown any light upon it, we feel amply repaid.

IMPROVEMENT.

BY E. C. M. W.

THE subject before us is one that takes in a vast field of thought, and one that can be applied to every human being over this wide and fertile world; one that will manifest itself in all of its outlines sooner or later; its fruits are bound to develop and manifest themselves.

Improvement is advancement; valuable additions or gaining knowledge, and the ways of applying it, are many and always within our grasp in some of its forms, so that we need not want for material to work with. God has placed us in this world for a noble purpose and not for the wasting of our mortal career, which would be to our utter destruction, both temporal and spiritual. We are such beings that we will not stand still; we will either advance or retreat; either gain knowledge or lose it; either improve our time or waste it; serve God or the devil. We who profess to be Christians, where are we, what are we doing, are we improving our time, are we living as God would have us live? or are we wasting those golden moments careless and unconcerned? We never should be idle, but improvement should always be uppermost in our minds, whether in the family circle or in church, or wherever we are in the shifting scenes of this mortal life. Whatever we do, we should do with the desire of doing it right; anything that is worth doing, is worth doing right. When we go to the house of worship, we should go with the desire of worshipping God, and insinuating into our minds more of the true principles of Jesus, and should not go there to talk about temporal matters, but to serve God, pay strict attention to what is read and preached, and not to be so careless that if a friend would even ask us what the minister's text was, we could not tell, but we should remember it and read it at the first opportunity, which will be very apt to freshen the minister's discourse and make it more lasting on our minds.

Reading we think is one of the best ways to improve our time, when not otherwise usefully employed. This is a world of reading, and it is very important not only how we read, but what we read, as some books cannot be read with profit, no matter how we read them. But there is one Book that can be read with great profit,—the Bible, which is the Book of books, which we should read daily, and for a noble design; not for pastime, but with great care and diligence. Some of its precious truths are buried deep, and to make them available we must search diligently and prayerfully, and have a great desire to understand its truths; we should feel and read it, as though God were present with us, and that He was revealing to us the great plan of salvation. If our minds are in such a state, we will undoubtedly realize a blessing, if we put in practice; and whatever we do and whenever we are through the journey and shifting scenes of this mortal life, we should act with that state of mind that God was an everywhere present God; and that all our acts and doings were open before Him, so that we might live a God-fearing life, that peace and happiness might be the result in this world, and the world to come.

BRETHERN, BE AT WORK.

BY E. C. M. W.

HAVING for sometime felt pressed, I have concluded that perhaps the enemy of the cross has succeeded to do with our backs and tongues, in giving our expressions in favor of primitive Christianity and the vindication of true tool-hiness in the church. There seems to be something working among us, which works very much like heaven.

Heaven, you know, is very small when first put into the lap of thought, when the woman was in her way, but it works on until the whole lump is leavened, and not removed, it is a leaven, and there is a leaven like this among us, as in the church and should be removed. Then I say, brethren, be at work, stand at your posts as valiant soldiers of Jesus. Stand without fear in holding up for humility, for "God giveth grace to the humble."

Humility is one of the prominent characteristics of the faith once delivered to the saints, which is the true one, and whereby we will obtain a good report at the last day. O, you who have been educated, as it were at the feet of Gamaliel, let your influence be used against such a growing evil,—against pride, against departures, against things which offend, or are a barrier against the advancement and increase of the true church of God.

The church I believe consists of brethren and sisters of Jesus Christ, for they shall be heirs with Him, having done the will of their heavenly Father. The will of God is, that we should not offend our brother or sister, but shall rather suffer self-denial than to have our brother offended at us for anything that is of no benefit to us to help us on to God, and our eternal welfare.

Let us then remove every bearing weight against the doctrine and the order of the Brethren, which I think and believe God sanctions. When we say, Brethren, we mean followers of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, as were our fathers in the faith, which ground I believe our church was built upon originally.

Admitting the above I think it would be well for us to renew our thoughts upon the promises we made in our baptismal vow. Did we not there promise and confess that we would subscribe to the doctrine of the church? I think if we all remember that promise, and were sufficiently instructed before vowing, we would not disobey the instructions of Holy Writ? You will find in Romans 16, "Now I beseech you brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned and avoid them; for they that are such, serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly, and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple."

Also 1st Cor. 1, "Now I beseech you brethren by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ that you all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." O brethren let us adopt the instruction of the apostle, who was instructed in the school of Jesus! Let us keep on the old paths. I fear too many are seeking new paths wherever they can take little packages along which really belong to the world, and are a hindrance to ourselves and the church.

In conclusion, I would say, let us love one another, preferring one another as soon others more than ourselves, and I think the brethren will have no need of correcting us so often as to give some occasion to say that they are "fault-finders." God helps us to be of one mind, and so to walk that His name may be glorified.

EACH IN HIS OWN WAY.

ALL great works are done by some one. God with what we have seen, Moses was keeping sheep in Midian, and one day he saw a bush burning from the undergrowth. Was youpe haze with it? He saw an angel standing over him, owning not a lamb that he watched. He had nothing but a shepherd's rod cut out of a thicket, the mere crab stick with which he guided his sheep. Any day he might have thrown it away and cut a better one. And God said, what is that in thine hand? With this rod, with this stick, thou shalt save Israel. And so it proved. What is that in thine hand stranger? An ox-goad with which I urge my lazy beasts. Use it for God, and Shungar's ox-goad defeats the Philistines. What is that in thine hand David? My sling with which I keep the wolves from the sheep. Yet with that sling he slew Goliath, whom an army dared not meet. What is that in thine hand, disciple? Nothing but five barley loaves and two little fishes. Bring them to me, give them to God, and the multitude is fed. What is that in thine hand, poor widow? Only two mites. Give them to God; and behold! the fame of our riches fills the world. What hast thou, weeping woman? An alabaster-box of ointment. Give it to God. Break it and pour it on the Savior's head, and its sweet perfume is a fragrance in the church till now.

What hast thou, Doreas? My needle. Use it for God and those coats and garments keep multiplying, and are clothing the naked still. You are a manufacturer, or a merchant, or a mechanic, or a man of leisure, or a student, or a sewing woman, God wants each of you to serve Him where you are, you have your business; use it for God. Order it in a godly manner. Do not allow any wickedness in it. Give godly wages; preach Jesus to your clerks, not by a long face, but by being like Him, doing good. Use your profits for God, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, comforting the wretched, spreading the Gospel far and wide. What a field you have to glorify God in, just where you are! If you have nothing use your tools for Him; He can glorify Himself with them as easily as He could with a shepherd's stick an ox-goad, a sling or two mites. A poor girl who had nothing but a sewing machine used it to a feeble church. All her earnings above her needs, were given toward building a house of worship, and in a year she paid more than others a hundred times richer than she. So you can do, if you will. Think of the widow with her two mites, the woman with the alabaster-box, and Doreas and her garments; you do as much, and have as great a reward.

ADMONITION SHOULD BE GENTLE.

WE must consult the gentlest manner and softest seasons of address; our advice must not fall like a violent storm, bearing down and making those droop whom it is meant to cherish and refresh. It must descend, as the dew upon the flowers, or like the melting flakes of snow upon the fields, the long run of wells of our mind and the deeper it sinks into the mind, the more it will do for the remedy of our souls. As the night, it is a gentle rain, that falls upon the earth, who have the opportunity of a poppy valley, and the gentlest of kindness and sweetness of regard, which corrupt-minded people, by an artificial exercise, sweeten and agreeable indulgence. The prophet went to the sea, and was carried by the sea, and the sea was a good spiritual surgeon, and he had a rod of iron and a mass of a friend, and he said, "I have seen and raised up my hand." PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

J. H. MOORE, M. M. ESHELMAN, EDITORS.

Bro. S. H. Weston is duly authorized, by us as our traveling correspondent and agent for the Brethren at Work and will receive subscriptions for the same at our regular rates.

THE BRETHERN AT WORK will be sent post-paid, to any address in the United States or Canada, for $1.50 per annum. Those sending ten names and $15.00, will receive an extra copy free of charge.

MOORE & ESHELMAN, Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill.

LANSARE, ILL. JUNE 27, 1878.

We have made arrangements that enable us to fill orders for the Report and Minutes of the Annual Meeting. Price of the Report, 25 cents; the Minutes, 10 cents each, or 75 cents per dozen.

BROTHER Peter Hallburg, a Swedish brother from Baldwin, Iowa, gave us a call last week. He is an earnest, devoted brother, and is desirous of knowing if any of his countrymen are members of the church in the United States.

We are now prepared to make use of all the postage stamps that our readers feel disposed to send us in payment for either the papers, books or pamphlets. However we would advise not to send over $1.50 in each letter, and be sure that the stamps are so folded as not to stick together.

We have heard of wolves dressing in sheep's clothing, but not once have we ever heard of sheep dressing in wolves' clothing. Is this the way with Christians and the world? or is it the reverse?

The way subscribers are coming in for the Children at Work is quite encouraging. All the children want it, and many of the older people do not like to do without it.

MR. RAY, of the Battle Flag, thinks we are trying to prejudice our readers against him before the debate opens. In this he is mistaken. We have no such an object in view.

AN article in the Jewish Reformer takes Protestant preachers to task pretty severely, for denouncing certain classes of sinners for their wickedness, and then when it comes to raising money for the preachers and church purposes they will accept money from the worst of sinners and think it good enough.

MORE ABOUT ANNUAL MEETING.

THE second day's meeting was opened for business at 8 A. M. The first subject for discussion was the deferred petition from Pennsylvania, in regard to changing the manner of holding the Annual Conference.

After much presentation of thought for and against a change, the Council agreed to continue the plan of 1866, and appointed the following named brethren to devise measures to more fully carry it out: Enoch Eby, R. H. Miller, James Quinter, Daniel Brower, C. G. Lint, Samuel Mohler, and Samuel Garber.

The second subject brought up for consideration related to soliciting aid for private institutions among Brethren. It was urged as a precautionary measure that persons traveling should carry a certificate of good standing from the institution he represents, and in addition to this, first obtain the counsel of the church in which he wishes to solicit.

The "Church Extension Union" being next in order, the protests from several Districts were read. A meeting of this society had been held in the Ogan's Creek congregation on the 17th and a new plan adopted which rendered the protests entirely ineffective.

Whether ministers should be fully in practice with the church in manner of dress, in order to officiate at Communion. It was agreed without discussion, that they should. In regard to better and cheaper Hymn Books, the publishers agreed to do all they could to comply with this request, but so long as they sustain losses from those who purchase, it would be almost impossible to get lower rates.

THURSDAY'S SESSION.

Owing to the demand for committees from various parts of the Brotherhood, and other important business, the Standing Committee did not appear in the council room until 10 A. M. The time, however, was well spent in singing, and an address upon the subject of good singing by our aged brother, F. P. Loch.

the sick for any other purpose than the restoration to health. This called forth considerable discussion, and was finally disposed of by deferring indefinitely, and the right of one ordained elder ordaining another in cases where it is difficult to procure two, was taken up.

The matter of procuring a committee from A. M. for a poor brother, was duly considered. A committee of three was appointed to go to the church in which the poor brother lives, and investigate the matter.

The Clerk then announced committees as follows: Huntington church, Ind., J. Wise, J. Quinter, J. Gump, G. W. Gripe. Rock Grove church, Iowa, R. Badger, J. Wise, J. Murray. Lost Creek church, Ohio, R. H. Miller, D. Brower, E. Eby, C. G. Lint, J. Quinter.

Bro. Quinter presented a written report of committee to Upper Dublin church, Pa., and their report was accepted by the meeting. The same committee were instructed to carry out the decision. The churches in California agreed to pay two-thirds of the expenses of the committee appointed to visit them, and the Annual Conference agreed to bear the balance, and suggested that each congregation in the brotherhood contribute one dollar.

It was agreed to hold the next Conference in the second District of Virginia. Calls being made for a report of the success and prospects of the Danish Mission, brother Enoch Eby gave a clear and affecting account of it, and the general expression of gladness because the Lord's work over there had been so well established, was manifest all over the large audience.

The meeting closed about 4 P. M., with singing and prayer, and after partaking of our last meal together at this place, the great multitude began to disperse in every direction, going home to meet loved ones again. The meeting will long be remembered for its harmony—its careful deliberations and endeavors to maintain peace and brotherly love.

Attended meeting in North Manchester, Ind., on the evening and it found to address on temperance by sister Major and brother Ludlow West. Sister Major read Rom. 28, 7, the lessons of her remarks, and then her ground that it is our duty to cry aloud and say, not, God has done this, we are against intemperance. Turn to the Bible, and read the words declared against strong drink. The Bible, the only Book that tells us anything about man, and philosophers can only substantiate their claims that man came from an ape, by putting away the Bible.

Parents should know, that by drinking intoxicating beverages, they bring untold misery upon their children. Pride lies at the bottom of the great evil. Children are brought up in fashion, petted and indulged until their hearts are spoiled and then their parents mourn and lament because things are so bad.

Sister Major was followed by brother West who gave some important statistics concerning strong drinks. Pennsylvania spends eighty millions annually for drinks, which is ten times more than she spends for education.

Brother West presented a written report of committee to Upper Dublin church, Pa., and their report was accepted by the meeting. The same committee were instructed to carry out the decision. The churches in California agreed to pay two-thirds of the expenses of the committee appointed to visit them, and the Annual Conference agreed to bear the balance, and suggested that each congregation in the brotherhood contribute one dollar.

THE BELL-SHEEP.

A BROTHER relates to us that his father one time owned a flock of sheep which were let run out on the commons. As was the general custom, one of the largest was selected to carry the bell. Things went along smoothly, the bell-sheep always taking the lead, and the rest following.

There are scores of people in the world who are just about that simple. If they cannot wear the bell they will do nothing at all. Such seldom ever accomplish much. They never make a very big mark in the world, nor are they much missed when gone.

It has always been a wonder to me, why some people cannot see this point. To illustrate: Supposing a brother aspires to the preacher's office, and a fair, square election has been held and he not chosen. Now if he has judgment enough to make a good, substantial preacher, he will keep pretty quiet about it.

not the qualifications to govern and take care of the church? If he has not self-government enough to keep himself within the bounds of reason what is he going to do with the church? I never did think there was anything wrong about a man desiring a position of usefulness (1 Tim. 3: 1), provided he has the qualifications to fill such a position with credit and honor to himself and the church, but when I see a man so feverish over the question that he cannot be- have himself, I have good reasons for doubting that man's qualifications for filling such a position. It would be a good thing if some people could only see themselves as others see them.

But why should a man shrink from duty just because he cannot get the position in life he would like? People who cannot do as they want to should do the best they know how and make the best of it. Children must learn to walk before attempting to climb mountains. The man who expects to rule ten cities must first learn to rule five, or even less. He who expects to be appointed over many things must first learn to be faithful over a few things. The man who buries his talent just because he has but one, will finally have to surrender up even that one and be without any at last. This is about the Alpha and Omega of all such cases. It is like the man who will lay around and squander what little money he has, just because he cannot get high wages, or like the starving man who refused a bushel of corn because it was not shelled.

The world is full of work for willing and industrious hands, but seldom hunts the man, the man must hunt it. And then as he labors, always being found at his post he will gradually attain to the position for which he is fitted, and if worthy, may reach a sphere of great usefulness. Good metal will always stand the test, even if it should be a long one.

And then a man has but little business leading people who do not want to follow him. If he is qualified to lead, the people will find it out, and if they do not it is pretty hard to make them believe it. If a man thinks himself qualified to lead and his people think otherwise, the quieter he keeps about it, the more sound judgment he displays. But if he goes off and pouts, and just because he cannot be bell-sheep won't be any sheep at all, he at once shows that he is not the man for the place. J. H. M.

AN INTERESTING INCIDENT.

DURING the Newtonia debate a little incident took place that is too good to be lost. If I am not mistaken it was about the fourth day of the discussion. The question under consideration was the meaning of the commission.

All of a sudden, and quite unassumingly, Bro. Stein picked up a pocket Bible and pencil, handed them to Dr. —telling him to write his name in the book of Matthew. The Dr. did so. Bro. Stein then told him to write his name in the book of Mark. This being done, he told the Dr. to write his name in the book of Luke. The Dr. did so and returned the book and pencil. The moment was an interesting one.

Bro. Stein then showed that as the Dr. had to write three times in order to write his name in the book of Matthew, and of Mark, and of Luke, it followed that one must be dipped three times in order to be legally baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. This was a clear point, and made quite an impression. But Mr. Ray, in his reply said, Bro. Stein did not reason fairly, for in telling the Dr. what to do he had used the verb "write" three times, while in the commission the term "baptizing" was used but once, hence one action.

When it came to Bro. Stein's time to reply, he handed the Bible and pencil to the Dr., saying: "Will you please write your name in the book of Matthew, and of Mark, and of Luke?" (using the word "write" but once). The Dr. wrote his name in each book, hence wrote three times, showing that so far as the sense was concerned it made no difference whether the verb was used once or three times. This clinched the subject, and every attempt to move it proved fruitless.

Bro. Stein concluded to try to land on the head of a pin, so he handed the Bible and pencil to the Dr., telling him to write his name in the book of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. The Dr. says, "I don't know where that book is," whereupon Ray opened the Bible, at the title page and showed the Dr. where to write, but of course what the Dr. said took all the poetry out of Ray's part of the performance. The reader can imagine the rest. J. H. M.

AN ANCIENT BAPTISTERY.

J. B. JEETER, an eminent Baptist minister, who some years ago visited the catacombs in Rome, gives the following description of a baptistery:

"The object of primary interest in this catacomb is the baptistery. It is situated near the end of the passage, and is reached by a descending archway. It is about four feet long, three feet wide, and three or four feet deep, and is supplied with clear, cool, sweet water by a spring. Above the font is a fresco painting of the baptism of Christ by John. The figures are about three feet in length. The Savior is represented as standing up to His middle in water, and the Baptist with his right hand on the head of Jesus, in the act of bending it gently forward to immerse Him, in the only manner in which the ordinance could be conveniently performed in a baptistery constructed as this one is. On the right hand an angel is represented as holding the clothes of Jesus. At the bottom of the picture a small hart is painted as drinking the baptismal water, a symbol, it is supposed, of the longing of the believer for baptism. Below this picture and reaching down into the water there is a cross, painted as if adorned with gems and candlesticks, with the Greek letters, Alpha and Omega suspended below its two arms. The cross was probably designed to signify that the baptized are crucified into sin. The wall on one side of the font has the pictures of the martyrs Abdon, Sennen, Miles, and others, rudely painted near them. Of the age of the font and pictures, we have no certain information. The frescos have the appearance of being very old. There are no indications that they have at any time been restored or changed. The baptistery probably dates back to the second century. 'These paintings,' says Northcote, 'are all of late date, perhaps of the seventh or eighth century; but there is no reason to doubt that the baptistery had been so used from the earliest times. We have distinct evidence in the acts of the martyrs that the sacrament was not infrequently administered in the cemeteries.'"

The above, clipped from the Baptist Union, of March 18th, 1873, shows that those early paintings, whatever may be their worth as evidence, are on the side of the forward posture in baptism. They are usually referred to in support of immersion, especially by Baptist writers, but instead of supporting their cause in full, the evidence stands against them regarding the posture. On this subject, however, all histories are of one voice. J. H. M.

QUERIST'S DEPARTMENT.

Questions touching the meaning of Scripture, relating to history and practical subjects of religious interest will come in place. The querist's name must accompany all communications. We shall labor to avoid giving any just occasion for strife and contention over unimportant questions.

Give your views of Matt. 9: 17, which is as follows: "Neither do men put new wine into old bottles; else the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles perish; but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved." J. G. M.

It was the custom in the Savior's time, and still is, in the eastern countries, to make bottles of goat skins. If such bottles were old, and new wine would be put into them, the force of fermentation would break them, but if the bottles were new, they would expand during fermentation and the wine be preserved.

By this act the Savior taught His hearers that the doctrine which He brought from heaven should not be placed in the Old Covenant, but being new, should be placed in the New Covenant. Just as little as men would think of putting new wine into old bottles, just that little should any one think of putting the new covenant into the Old Covenant. If that be done, it will be made so, for the law could not make the commandments perfect; and cannot be perfect, but that with the imperfect, it could not accomplish the proper end. "Sanctification" was required by the law, but now "by the law of the Spirit of God."

(1) Were the Apostles baptized? (2) And was John the Baptist baptized? A Scriptural answer desired. J. H. MILLER.

1. We open at John third chapter and quote verses 22 and 23: "After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judaea; and there he tarried with them and baptized. And John also was baptizing in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there; and they (the disciples) came, and were baptized." The personal pronoun "they," in verse 23, refers to the "disciples" in verse 22. That Paul was baptized we learn from Rom. 6: 3: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death." The "us," of course includes Paul.

2. We have no account that John was ever baptized, but would rather infer from Matt. 23: 14, that he was not. Whether he was baptized or not he was divinely authorized to both teach and baptize, and if the Savior, who was without sin, dared not shun baptism, what will become of us who reject the counsel of God against ourselves by refusing to submit to an institution from heaven?

Will you permit me to ask, Are you the Mr. Moore referred to in the article of Mr. Waggoner in the Adventist (?) Review, of May 23, '78, I think on trine immersion? If so, will you be so kind as to correct his mistake in supposing that I quoted what is on page 78 of my History of the Modes from Theodor's Ecclesiastical History. The notes there show that I quoted it from his Harvest Field. If he will examine the work quoted by me he will find it.

JAMES CRYSTAL.

REMARKS.—I am the person referred to by Mr. Waggoner in his series of articles against trine immersion, and just as soon as I can spare the time, will notice some things he has said against the general practice of all antiquity. Were his assertions facts, he might do wonders.

He asserts that Theodoros has not written one word about Eunomius having subverted the holy law of baptism and introduced single immersion as quoted by Mr. Crystal on the 78th page of his History of the Modes of Baptism, when in fact Mr. Crystal gives direct authority, and exact reference for the quotations he made from the writings of Theodoros. It is a pity that men of such reputed learning as Mr. Waggoner will make such reckless assertions. J. H. M.

BREVITIES.

—Brother Philip Baltimore says, that the address of A. Cornelias is Turner, Marion Co., Oregon.

—Mr. Shaw, one of the most successful evangelists in the Disciple church, was killed by a railroad accident near McKinney, Texas, June 7th. He is said to have been instrumental in bringing over eleven thousand persons into that church.

—Two were lately baptized one-half mile North of Lanark.

—One more has been baptized in Denmark.

—No. 2 of the Children at Work will contain a beautiful engraving and description of Solomon's temple.

—Two were baptized at West Branch last week at their Love-feast. The meeting was a good one, and largely attended.

—The Feast at Rock River, Lee Co., one week ago last Saturday, is said to have been a pleasant one. Brother Daniel Dierdorff was ordained to the eldership.

—Sunday-school workers are becoming divided regarding the usefulness of Lesson Leaf Papers. However interesting and instructive they may be to some, we are of the impression that they will prove an injury in the long run. Better take the Bible and leave Lesson Leaf at home.

—Next week we will publish a report of the Danish Mission funds and work.

—We are getting things ready for the coming written debate as fast as the arrangements can be made. We think a few more letters between us and Mr. Ray will result in completing the necessary arrangements pertaining to the discussion.

—The many articles on "Praying Without Ceasing," that have lately appeared in our paper, have brought out a number of valuable lessons, and that too, without controversy. An exchange of views without controversy is certainly profitable.

—Brothers Jacob Rife and J. W. Metzger, of Ind., intend starting on their missionary labors in Southern Ind., between the first and fifth of August.

—Bro. C. H. Walker, of Berlin, Pa., says, "We held our Love-feast on last Saturday, commencing at 4 o'clock. An immense crowd had assembled, a large number of brethren and sisters communing. Bro. Daniel M. Holsinger officiated. We had a splendid meeting, all things passed off pleasantly. At our council three were received in the church by baptism, and one reclaimed."

HOME MIRROR is the title of a spicy and interesting little monthly edited and published by brother J. S. Flory of Longmont, Colorado, and devoted to Home, Health, Happiness, and general information. Brother Flory's long, standing reputation as a writer among us, is a sufficient guarantee for the success of the paper. We further remark that the paper is not intended to interfere with the weekly periodicals now published among the Brethren, but rather proposes to assist them in their work. Success to the Mirror and its readers.

We have just received a half sheet of a Richmond, Bay Co., Mo., paper giving some appalling accounts of the great Cyclone that passed through and nearly demolished that place. We felt considerable anxiety about the disaster, as my father (David Moore) was living in a direct line of its reported course, but after the Cyclone left Richmond it divided, leaving the portion of country where the Brethren live, between. The suffering is horrible, and baffles description. One person writing from there says, the sight was sickening and frightful. In places the air was full of tree-tops and wrecks of buildings. Relief is coming in from all parts of the country, and everything possible is being done to relieve the unfortunate sufferers.

IS A BROTHER A FRIEND?—Not seldom are brethren singled out and called our friends. One might infer that a man may be a brother in the Lord and not be a friend. How is this? Are we not in thus speaking and acting following after the fashion of the world? Should not —are not really all Christians, friends as well as brethren? Does not brother include friend? Is it not broader than friend? Perhaps if we could remember that to be a brother truly is to be the best of friends, we might see how wicked some things are that brethren who are not friends do to each other. Perhaps the Lord will not own these unfriendly brethren as His friends. It might be well to inquire seriously about the matter.—Church Advocate.

One of the prime conditions of the durable success of a congregation, is the exemplary standing and conduct of its officials. They should be men of blameless characters, and in their daily walk and conversation, show forth the true elements of the religion they profess. They want to be models of conduct in the church, and examples to others, and foremost in the ranks of the faithful. Show me a church whose officials are such, and I will show you a church that is successful, if not in number, in influence and true piety.

RELIGIOUS interest is rapidly on the decline in the City of New York. Many of the churches are falling off in number, and there seems a growing tendency to glide off into infidelity and skepticism. Many are anxious to know what is the matter? What is the cause of all this? An exchange says, the churches there have turned Christ out and taken the world in, and we believe there is much truth in the statement, which will apply equally well to thousands of other churches outside of New York. The Lord's house should be a house of prayer, but too many have made it a den of thieves (spiritually) and the day may not be far distant when the Master will find it necessary to use chord again in order to cleanse his house of those who make merchandise of the things belonging to the Lord.

A GRAIN of wheat will not do much good if you lay it on the shelf, but if you put it in the warm earth it will bring forth fruit in due season. So with man's heart. Let it lie on the cold shelf of this world and it does no one any good, but let it be bathed in the precious blood of Jesus, and it will bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of God. Sinner, stand no longer on that cold, useless ground, but hasten to put on Christ and bear fruit.

VENERY the way of the transgressor is hard. Is a man dishonest? He will be found out and punished. To him this looks hard, but from God's standpoint, the punishment is just. Ananias and Sapphira "kept back part" and by so doing suffered death. The man who will do wrong, will find that way hard. The way will any one choose the hard way? There is neither life, joy nor peace in such a way. On the other hand, it is wisdom to take the road to glory, honor, peace, and eternal life.

AS IT WAS IN NOAH'S DAY."

TELL me how the nations passed
The day before the flood;
O, did they know it was the last?
And did they call on God?

In merriment
Their time is spent;
They sing and play,
And dance away;
They eat and drink,
And little think

They stand on endless ruin's brink.

Some rear the walls
Of sumptuous halls;
Some join their hands
In marriage bands;
Some sell and buy;
All vainly try

To flee from God's all-seeing eye.

But God no more will silence keep;
He pours His wrath from high,
Unlocks the fountains of the deep,
And windows of the sky.

The clattering rain
Descends again;
The rivers roar,
The torrents pour;
The waters rise
Till piteous cries

No more are heard beneath the skies.

At first, in flocks,
Men climb the rocks;
Nor fear to creep
Up mountains steep;
But waters flow
Where'er they go,

And wash them to the depths below.

Behold just Noah safely ride
Upon the mighty deep;
While all who once God's word defied,
Beneath the waters sleep.

Sudden is that tremendous day,
The judgment hour shall come;
Thousands shall then be swept away,
And meet an awful doom.

Let me not count these words a dream,
And still refuse to hear;
However far the time may seem,
Each hour it draws more near.

When once the fire begins to burn,
'Twill be too late to pray;
Now from my cry God will not turn
His gracious ear away.

PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

BY D. A. HETTRICK.

THIS text in God's divine Word is a command to all, and, no doubt, is most violated. Some may think it impossible to obey it, but there are no impossibilities required of us in God's holy Word. Do we suppose that God, all-wise, all-holy, and good would require impossibilities at the hands of His creatures?

Some one may inquire, "How am I to obey this command? I can't be on my knees all the time; it is impossible, for I would not get anything else done." I do not believe that we must always be on our knees when we pray, or that we cannot pray without being in a kneeling posture, but I believe that we can pray whenever we are, or be engaged in what we may, we can let our petitions rise like sweet incense to the Lord God of heaven. Cannot the plowman as he turns up the soil, pray God that He would turn up the tallow ground of his heart and prepare it by grace divine, for the reception of His truth and for the dwelling place of the Holy Spirit? Can he not pray that God would cultivate his heart as he cultivates the earth, that it may bring forth fruit to God's glory as the earth brings forth fruit for our subsistence? Then why think it impossible to pray without ceasing?

Cannot the potter, as he presses the clay and molds it into shapes of vessels and makes it submissive to his will, pray, that God would prepare his heart and make it submissive to His will? Cannot the teacher, as he imparts instruction to the youthful mind and causes it to develop and grasp widely for knowledge of things that perish, pray that God's holy Law may be imprinted in the minds of all He creates, and that they may expand to usefulness and creep for that which abounds to the salvation of the soul—that immortal principle which lives, though this body dies and decays, yet their souls live, either to eternal life and happiness, or to everlasting woe and misery.

Oh, that all would pray without ceasing!

Dear brother and sister, awaken out of the dull sleep of forgetfulness and arise from the stool of do-nothing. Do not forget our council-meetings, our social meetings which tend to keep our hearts in proper frame; watch and pray without ceasing. Pray that sleeping sinners may be awakened by the mighty power of God, and turn from the error of their ways and fly to the outstretched arms of Bleeding Mercy, and seek an interest in the wounds of a once crucified, but now risen Savior. Oh, watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation. Pray without ceasing.

THE THREE FRIENDS.

BY M. W. WELCH.

A CERTAIN Jewish writer tells an instructive story of a man who had three friends, the first of which he loved exceedingly, the second he thought worthy of his esteem, and the third he only regarded as a distant friend whom he seldom visited. It happened that this man was suddenly summoned to stand in the presence of the king; when he heard this, he became afraid and trembled. He goes to his dearest friend and asks him to come and intercede with the king, but his friend shrunk away, saying, I dare not look upon the king's presence. He rushed to his next friend and asked him to go, but his friend told him, I can only go to the king's house, but I dare not open my mouth in the presence of the king. He went to the friend he loved least and asked him to go. They went, His friend made intercession for his relief, and he was made the second man in the kingdom.

Man has three special friends. The friend he loved exceedingly, is wealth or pleasure. Wealth will procure all worldly desires; it will procure the necessaries as well as the elegancies of life. It is a good friend if rightly dealt with, but when we are called to stand in the presence of death it avails us nothing. The other friend is our relations, our kind friends and neighbors, who may administer to our wants, give us courage and consolation during affliction, but when we come down to the hour of death, they can go no further; they can only stand silently watching the departure of that father or mother, sister or brother.

The third friend is Jesus. He it is that can heal the wounds of our troubled souls through life. He it is who can be with us in life. He it is who is not afraid to talk in the presence of the king. He it is, only, who can go with us across the mystic river of death. When all other friends fail, Jesus is ready as a blessed convey to carry us on to that haven of eternal repose. Yet how prone we are to make Him our third friend. We forget that we are liable to be summoned before the King at any moment in our lives. How sweet, then, to have such a friend as Jesus to intercede for us. He wants to save us, though in our wickedness we may regard Him only as the third friend. Let us then learn wisdom while it is called to-day, for "the night cometh when no man can work."

"THOU SHALT NOT KILL."

BY J. H. PECK.

THIS is a divine injunction delivered to man many thousand years ago, and is handed to us to-day with the same force of meaning it had with the children of Israel to whom it was first given. It is generally conceded by all who are acquainted with the divine economy that this does not allude to the killing of such animals as we need for food, but that it refers particularly to the killing of human beings; but I did not start out to give a dissertation upon the horrors and cruelties of war, and bloody murders, but there is a certain killing much engaged in at the present day, which, though it may not have any relation to the text, does, I think, remain far from meeting the approval of a just God.

I mean killing time! Thousands of young men and women are almost daily engaged in what is generally termed, killing time; that is, they don't do anything to make good use of their time. Boys and girls go to school because their parents send them, and the teacher is not very careful, all they will do there is to kill time; they do not realize the importance of making use of every moment, and every opportunity to to acquire knowledge, to improve, and at last how often do we hear older people say, "If I could only live my school days over again, I would make a brilliant mark in the world." Again we see young men boasting about the streets, seemingly with no higher aspiration than to kill time to-day, to work, to-day, to study; they are continually complaining about their hard lot in life, but they are not willing to entertain the thought that the prime cause of all their trouble is, their not making good use of the opportunities afforded them to better their condition.

Though this killing of time always turns out to our disadvantage, it is nothing, compared with the wholesale killing of time, precious time, that has been so graciously given us to prepare for a coming judgment. Thousands are engaged in this, our time, in accumulating wealth and procuring for themselves the transient comforts of this life, putting off until a more convenient season the preparation they know to be necessary to secure the great reward of eternal life beyond the grave.

But there is one more killing of time, which I hope I may be pardoned for naming. I mean preachers killing time in the pulpit; more than once have I seen the preacher take out his watch to note the time and then continue in a forced strain as though he were obliged to preach at least one hour, whether he has anything more to say or not; I believe I represent the majority of the hearers when I say to such preachers, we would all be very well satisfied with your conduct, if you would stop when you are done, if you have spoken only ten minutes. To hear you say, you will not occupy all the time, but give your brethren an opportunity to say something, and then continue for one hour and a quarter makes it irksome for the congregation. No one is to blame for not preaching a good, long sermon when he is not able. God never requires a man to do that which he cannot. Let each one do what he is able to execute well, but be careful that you do not injure the cause. It is well that preachers stop when they get done with the subject and not try to put in just so much time. Say what you have to say in the best way you know how, but do not attempt to kill time by preaching. It is a very successful way of killing a man's influence, and diminishing his congregation, and thus prevent him doing good.

SURPRISED.

BY J. W. SMITHWOOD.

"DID it never strike you, how often and how many gentle words of Jesus, 'to watch' is over and over repeated, like a succession of alarm bells breaking ever and anon, amid chimes of heavenly music, to rouse a sleeping Church, and a slumbering World?"

These words of MacLuff, bring to my mind the closing scene in the life of a school-mate, who at the early age of eighteen, closed her eyes in the sleep of death. Her home was amid the mountains of Vermont; the oldest of a family of six, and at the age of sixteen, she entered a seminary in an adjoining State, to fit herself for teaching. She was not long in winning friends, both among her teachers and associates, for to beauty of person and an amiable disposition, there were added gifts of a high intellectual order. And when before the first term had closed, she with many others, had bowed low at the feet of the Cross, it seemed as if she was destined to be an earnest worker in the Master's vineyard.

St. Paul, in writing to the Galatians says: "Ye did run well, what did hinder you?" In the case of Jessie, it was indolence of character, which increased as her closet duties were neglected. The half-hour of retirement morning and evening, which at first had seemed like the gate of heaven, now seemed so long and tiresome, that she began to while away the time by taking her Wayland, or Mental Philosophy instead of God's own Word, which would have been as a "lamp to her feet." Then she began to choose her intimate friends among those who were not only careless, but triflers on the subject of religion. These girls had made it their boast that they could win her over to their creeds, which they did most successfully.

Many were the loving words spoken to her, and the prayers offered up by the Christians in that school in her behalf, but all seemed in vain. "God works in a mysterious way," and while she was engaged in planning a scheme that would bring ridicule upon all the school exercises of the school, she was taken ill, only a slight illness it seemed to be, but sufficient to confine her to her room for a few days; on the evening of the third day she grew so much worse that a physician was summoned. To the surprise of all, he said, "You can live but a few hours." Not one who was present in that room will forget the look of awe and terror that covered Jessie's face. She felt that she had a great work to do in a short time. "O, pray for me, pray for me!" was her agonized request of another friend, when asked if she had any message to leave for the school, she said in a broken voice, "Tell them to be Christians, for they know not what it is to be surprised as I have been." She began to repeat the hymn, "Just as I am." Her voice grew weaker, and weaker, the second verse was commenced in a faint whisper:

"Just as I am and waiting not,
To rid my soul of one dark blot,
To Thee"——

She was gone to the world of spirits.

Her message was not unheeded, more than a score of young women who are now living such lives that they are a continual inspiration, began those lives in the sad days of the Winter of 186— that followed Jessie's death.

Brethren and friends, let us take warning from the case of Jessie; let us all think if we had been in her place, and been "surprised" as she was—let us call to mind our readiness to die, and see if we should be "surprised" as Jessie was, whether we should be ready to go now, or whether we should have some "dark blot" of which "to rid our souls." While this is given as a warning, it is given as a warning not only to young women, but to young men, and in fact all, both young and old.

Since my mind has been profitably impressed with this warning, I feel it my duty to place it before your many readers, with hope that it may do them good. While we are sometimes profitably impressed by a warning, let us not suffer ourselves to be pressed on in our Christian journey by warnings, but let us push forward from a love to Christ and His cause. I feel that while we work for the Master, through love, we do many good and profitable things that we should not do if we were working through fear. "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love" (1 John, 4: 18). Let us feel that God truly and sincerely loves us, and has a great and kind net for us out of pure love and pity, and that He does not want to punish any.

Can we not pray because we love to, and watch because it is a command of our best Friend? Can we not both watch and pray out of a loving heart, and through love be always ready, taking heed to both words and deeds? "Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is." "For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work; and commanded his porter to watch. Watch ye therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning: Lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto you all, watch" (Mark, 13: 32-37)

Brethren and sisters, let us ever be ready.

THINK OF DEATH.

BY JOSEPH A. HOOPER.

WHILE attempting to write, my mind is carried back to my youthful days. I remember of reading the obituary notice of a little girl eleven years old which impressed my mind very much. On the morning she was taken sick, she appeared very merry and sang the following lines while she was preparing breakfast:

My Jesus calls me, I must go,

I can no longer stay;

For the Gospel sounds so sweet to me,

I can no longer stay away.

In about two hours after singing these lines so merrily, she was taken sick and grew worse very fast, and in a little over two days and a half she was a lifeless corpse.

During this last Winter, just before Christmas, I was attending a meeting near Reading, Ohio; there was quite a number of persons baptized, of which the greater number was young folks. While seeing one after another come forward to be received into the church, I noticed a promising looking young lady, thirteen years old, halting between two opinions. After the applicants had withdrawn and the number was about to take the counsel of the church, the name of Jessie sounded as went to her that she arose and made her wishes known, after which she was taken into the number. But it was no very long until she took the diphtheria, and on the 7th of March she died. She told her parents not to weep, as she was going to a good home. Her parents loved her dearly, but God loved her better. She now rests safely in the arms of Jesus.

For the faithful worker rest will come ere long, though he may have to pass through the valley of shadows and the gloom of the grave first, but to the upright, death should possess no terror. It is only a compassionate friend that opens a door through which he may pass to a sweeter work and sweeter rest than he ever dreamed of here. Then let us not linger in our onward march, or look back, having put our hands to the plough, but press on and strive to earn a sweet rest when comes the eventful

A Few Thoughts.

IN first Thessalonians, 2: 3, we read, "For that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first." The apostle Paul in the closing of his first Epistle to his Thessalonian brethren, very earnestly exhorts them to be Christians in the true sense of the word, — to live in Christian love and kindness. He tells them that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. He addresses them as children of the day, that they should not sleep as do others, but watch and be sober. Lastly he tells them to abstain from all appearance of evil.

Now there appeared to be a misunderstanding of the first epistle by the Thessalonian brethren, who had gathered from it, that the second coming of Christ might be expected during the life-time of those then living. — Hence the second epistle was written rather as a supplement to the first, with an introductory and concluding thanksgiving for their increase of faith and a correction of their error as to the second advent of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. And in making the above correction, he gives us to understand that there shall be a "falling away."

The above language seems to imply an apostasy, a defection in the professedly Christian church, from the pure worship of God. Paul, it appears, had not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God to the several churches where he labored. Looking into the future, he saw that after his departure grievous wolves would enter in. False, hypocritical and dangerous teachers would speak perverse things, perverting doctrine, to draw away disciples after them.

Paul also, in delivering his solemn charge to Timothy, says, "That the time will come, when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts heap to themselves teachers having itching ears. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth" (2 Tim. 4: 3). Now Paul said, "The time will come." My belief is, the time is being fulfilled at this present hour. Hence I would say, not only the rise of apostasy, is spoken of by Paul, but he speaks of its progress. Receivers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. I believe that its rise is taking place with at least a part of the true church.

We will now notice for a moment, the matter of conforming to the world as it appears to be the first step taken in a wrong direction. The church has adopted an order, why not comply with it? We find some that do not regard it in that light. Yes, even ministers who should be examples to the flock, have gone into all the pride of the world in dress. My heart aches when I see brethren stand up to preach the everlasting Gospel, while they are saying to the world by their actions, that they do not themselves, what they exhort others to do.

Men With and Without Souls.

THE strangest thing that strikes my mind is, that men barter their souls and pledge themselves to all Eternity to the devil. Oh! can it be possible that men have sold, and do yet sell their souls to the devil for a consideration in money, destruction, long life, or whatever else seems to them most desirable or gratifying for the time being? These thoughts cause me to reflect daily, and of that eternity yet to come, and wonder what might be termed a fair price for a soul? Did not Christ, at a single instance, purchase every soul upon this earth? Did he purchase them with promises, with money, or with any of this world's goods? Far from it. He gave his life—died bleeding on the cross—that we poor sinners might live again. In our every day life we are eye-witnesses to specimens of humanity that yield to the tempter for some trifling petty desire, or some luxury that fadeeth away. What, will you let the devil, the swindler, rob you of your soul? No, in the name of the Redeemer, who purchased it, to whom it belongs, let this not be; but tell this to the devil—"That he is not rich enough to purchase your soul."

It is a rare case to show us that there are different kinds of souls. Some people have large souls, some have small souls, and if the truth be told, but I am sorry to say it, that some people act as though they had no souls at all. The soul has been defined by different learned men, and various definitions given, and we are not to wonder, that which distinguishes him from the brute, and constrains him to person, but what if this principle is allowed to be dormant, as never called into activity? What if the man only eats, and drink, and sleeps, and lives for himself—how much of a soul will he be likely to get? It reminds me of the acorn, as all the possibilities of the oak lie in the acorn. Should the acorn be placed on the shelf, or laid away, or hung on the wall, and thus be deprived of mother earth, it would have no chance to quicken and grow—it would never make the sturdy old oak. But to the contrary, if it is put in the proper place it will quicken and grow, and the result thereof will be advantages almost innumerable. It is needless to describe the benefits derived from the oak. Just as the acorn is to the oak, so is the undeveloped to the developed soul. I find in the 7th ver. and 2nd chap. of Genesis, that it reads thus: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." The breath of life is still the indispensable condition of the living soul; and we must all remember that God was not done with us when he breathed the breath of life into us that we might become living souls. But in order for us to become active souls we must provide the rational principle, which is the soul's gem with the means of growth. Are you slipping along from day to day, more intent upon having a good time than upon looking after the most sacred thing of your lives; or are you slumbering, sleeping or dead in your thinking and reasoning faculties? if so, arise thou that sleepest. Come! come! wake up, and let it not be said of you that you are neither God's workers nor the world's helpers. Come, let faces brighten at your coming, and blessings follow you when going. Let not the attraction of Satan be so strong that he can buy your soul for a small amount; but value it high, play extortion on him—then he cannot buy it, for he is poor, and consequently can give but a small amount for a soul. Your soul will then be beyond his reach, and owing to his financial distress he will not bother you to make a purchase. Have you ever thought of that, dear readers, as regards Satan's situation? He is decidedly a very poor master, and after you have labored for him a season, whether it be long or short, he being the possessor of your soul, and in return you will receive for you services, exhausting punishment. What poor pay; poor indeed! Oh! horrible, horrible, but nevertheless true—only too true, for the Bible says so. GEORGE W. MILLER.

How to Utilize Religious Papers.

I HAVE never used religious papers for waste paper, but have always distributed them some way. When I left Ohio in 1871, I gave some to such as I knew would read them. So when I left Iowa in '75, I distributed some among my neighbors, some I sent off to poor members by mail, and also a box to Salem, Kansas to the grasshopper regions. While in California, I gave some to my neighbors and took some to the Christian church, where I had them on the table. When I went again, they were gone. I had more there, and gave some to our milk-man. Put also some papers in a drawer of each piece of furniture we sold. I left papers wherever I could, and then loaded myself with some of all the different periodicals published by the Brethren, which I distributed wherever an opportunity presented itself.

While at Battle Mountain, Nevada, one Sabbath afternoon, a great many people were around when the train stopped. First I threw them out a paper, and waited till it was picked up. Then I threw out more, when the people began to look up to see where they came from. When they saw such an old-dressed old woman, they picked them up as fast as I threw them. I kept back some, and was sorry I did; for I had no more chance to throw out any. It was always rainy, windy or dark. I feared they would be lost; but I will save some to drop on my way from here to Illinois. If I had not read about brethren distributing papers, while traveling, I would not have thought of this.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Mexico, Indiana.

Dear Brethren:—

ELEVEN have been added to the church in the year just closed. The cause of the Master is progressing slowly, but surely. One of them had been a Free Mason for a number of years. The Baptists have suspended preaching at this place. On the 27th ult. Bro. Peter Fisher died at the advanced age of 86 years and 25 days. He had lived in this country 42 years.

In reply to there being another church organization, known as German Baptists, I would say that there is a body in the East known by that name, who practice single immersion, feet-washing and the communion. They are a plain people, zealous of good works.

Yours fraternally,

H. F. ROSENBERGER.

Dear Brethren:—

THE borders of Zion still seem to be expanding somewhat with us. There have been nine added to the church in the last month. It truly makes us rejoice to see the sons and daughters of Adam come out and covenant with Christ to be followers of him, and our prayer is that those who have recently started, may prove faithful to the cause, and run with patience the race set before them, that when they bid farewell to this world, they may, with us, be prepared to enter into rest with the Saints of God and all their associates that prove faithful where they shall bid farewell, no more forever.

Our Lovefeast passed off the 7th of June, which was a feast to our souls indeed. When thus surrounding the table of our Lord it brings to memory the great marriage supper in the evening of the world, around which all the saints of God will be permitted to seat themselves.

Brother David Workman, of Ohio, has been laboring some with us the last week, and we can say that his labors have not been in vain, as five souls have been made willing to confess Christ, and we believe that others have almost been persuaded to become Christians.

Brother Stein is laboring with us at present, and we hope that his labors may not be in vain, but that they may result in conviction and conversion.

Dear Brethren:—

ACCORDING to previous appointment, the funeral services of our dear sister Mary Jane John, deceased, were held at the Johnsville meeting-house to-day. Appropriate discourses were delivered by the ministering brethren of our congregation from the subject of 1 Thess. 4: 13, 14.

The commodious house was filled to its utmost capacity at an early hour, and many were unable to get seats. A most unusual solemnity pervaded the large audience, and we cherish the hope that God blessed the solemn occasion to the success of His cause. Our dear sister was greatly beloved, numbering among her friends persons of every religious creed and every rank of society, admired by everybody for the sweetness of her spirit and the godliness of her life. She was a jewel of the church, a star in the crown of her devoted husband, a treasure in the hearts of her children, on whom she lavished the wealth of a mother's love, and an ornament to society. We mourn her absence from our devotions and our society, but she has just passed over the noiseless river before us. Oh, how rapidly is the church gathering together over there! Well, there will be joy in that land, when we all cross over and hail each other in the Father's home.

After the services we wended our way to the water side, where prayer was made, and a young pilgrim passed through the baptismal portals. Thus while one of our company has transferred her membership to the church of the ransomed, another steps forward from Satan's ranks and takes her place in God's army.

Yours Fraternally,

D. C. MOOMAW.

Dear Brethren:—

A FEW lines from this part of God's moral heritage may be interesting to your many readers. Bro. Jesse Calvert was with us from the twenty-third of May to the first of June, and baptized fifteen. Yesterday, June 16th, was our regular meeting day. Just before last prayer, while the congregation was engaged in singing, a young lady laid off her hat and came forward, making application to be received into the church. After the Gospel rules were laid before her, we repaired to a place where baptism was administered. Hope that all these lambs may be nourished in the church in a proper manner! May they become as a city set upon a hill, that others, seeing their good works might glorify their Father which is in heaven and be constrained to do His will. S. BEECHLY.

In Memoriam.

DIED at the residence of Bro. E. P. Flesham, Monroe Co., W. Va., our beloved brother and father, Peter Crumpacker, aged 74 years, 5 months and 4 days.

The subject of this notice was born in Bedford Co., Va., in the year 1804. His father's name was Abraham, who lived to the mature age of ninety-one. His ancestry, as far back as they can be traced, were members of our fraternity. His grandfather died at the age of 40, while on the floor preaching.

Our deceased father moved with his parents from Bedford to Botetourt at the age of twelve years, and came to this country seventeen years later. He married Rebecca, the daughter of Eld. Jacob Peters, in the year 1831, and was baptized by old Bro. John Bowman of Franklin Co., shortly afterward. Soon after his baptism he was elected to the office of deacon, and through his devotion to the work of the church, he rose rapidly through the intermediate official grades to the office of the eldership.

He was richly endowed with intellectual gifts, and thereby wielded a large influence over the churches of the district. He reared to maturity a family of eight children, four sons and four daughters, all of whom are members of the church. Two of his sons, Abraham, of our congregation, and Samuel, of the Botetourt congregation, are in the ministry, and two of his sons-in-law also serve in that office. Bro. A. Hutchinson of Mo., our late missionary to Texas is one of them.

He suffered much persecution and spoliation of property during the late civil war on account of his outspoken opposition to the war party of the South, and narrowly escaped incarceration in the Southern prisons. He assisted many poor brethren with the means to escape conscription in the army, and many a wanderer and refugee from the ranks of Jeff Davis found a friend in him, who has now passed beyond the reach of malice and hatred, to that blessed land where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

He bore his great sufferings with the heroism of a Christian philosopher, and died as only a Christian can die. He ascertained six days before his death that the time of his departure was inevitably at hand, and with that steady, calm deliberation that can only proceed from the soul that has made its peace with its Maker, he proceeded to set his temporal house in order, (his spiritual house was prepared by the administration of the sacrament of Extreme Unction,) by communicating his few last wishes to his son Abraham, who attended him devotedly throughout his sickness.

Then, with a calm serenity of soul, he plumed the strong pinions of faith to the flight to the bright world of ransomed spirits. His remains now rest in peace in the humble burial ground near the house of Bro. E. P. Flesham.

It will be a consolation to his many friends and relatives to know that every thing that mental skill, liberal love, brotherly kindness, and friendly assistance could abound, was lavishly bestowed to arrest the work of death, but God's providence had decreed that his battles were over, and we can do more than meekly bow to the chastening rod of an almighty and just God. Funeral services were conducted on the day of his interment, at the house of Bro. Flesham, by the brethren, and similar services are appointed to be held at our meeting house (Johnsville) on the 4th Sunday in July. D. C. MOONAW. McDonald's, Mont. Co., Va.

Dear Brethren:—

ELDER I. Buck paid the Southern Churches a visit this Spring. I met Bro. Buck in the Silver Church, on the 2nd of May, where I found the brethren and sisters all well and alive to the cause. This little church is in a healthy condition; all alive to the great interests of the Master. Bro. J. J. Troxel was advanced to the second degree of office; held a choice for a speaker, and the lot fell on L. E. Prickett, a very interesting young brother. I think they are in a good working condition; while there, one was added by Baptism. They number some 18 or 20 members. From the Silver Creek Church, in Cowley county, Elder Buck came to Sumner county on Slate Creek. When we arrived we heard that Joseph Basher was here, and had preached there on Thursday evening. We continued the meetings until Monday evening. On Saturday evening Bro. George Thomas, from McPherson Co., came to our assistance, and the result of their labors was, that three souls came out on the Lord's side, and were baptized on the Sunday following. On the 6th we organized a church and elected two deacons—Bro. A. Holloway and J. E. Rowel. I think both are worthy members. We call this the Slate Creek Church. We number twenty-five members, with four deacons and a minister in the second degree office; we have regular meetings.

We have a good country. Wheat & all that one could wish. Corn promises to be good. Out an average crop. We commenced to harvest on the 26th of May. J. TROXEL.

Annual Meeting Items.

During the Annual Meeting there was published at North Manchester a small daily sheet, giving considerable interesting news pertaining to the conference. Having obtained three Nos. of the paper, dated respectively June 11, June 12 and June 13, we give below a number of items clipped from the daily:

THURSDAY, JUNE SIXTH.

Every train brings in large delegations to the German Baptist Conference.

Fifty-six cars arrived yesterday, bringing to the Conference nearly 3,000 additional delegates.

At 10.30 last night there arrived three coaches from the South and three from the West and several box-cars filled with delegates.

The Conference Standing Committee is composed of an intelligent looking body of men as we ever saw.

A special train, yesterday morning, brought in some 400 persons to attend the Conference.

It is estimated that not less than 15,000 of the Brethren are in the immediate vicinity of the Conference grounds, while from three to five thousand are expected today.

The Danish Mission is in a flourishing condition.

At the M. E. Church last evening, Elder John Wise, of Iowa, delighted a very large audience with an able sermon, which will, we are sure, result in much good.

It was impossible for the crowd which thronged the sidewalk in front of the Lutheran Church last evening to gain admission, the building being full to overflowing. The meeting was addressed by Elder John Flory, of Bridgewater, Va.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE TWENTY.—The following is a correct list of the names of each member of the Standing Committee of the German Baptist Conference, now in session near this place:

- Samuel Harley, Eastern Pennsylvania; Moses Miller, Middle Pennsylvania; C. G. Lant, Western Pennsylvania; D. K. Saylor, Eastern Maryland; Jeremiah Beighby, Western Maryland; Christian Wert, Virginia No. 1; Martin Garber, Virginia No. 2; D. B. Arnold, West Virginia, No. 1; Elias Auvil, West Virginia, No. 2; George Irvin, North-eastern Ohio; J. P. Eberole, North-western Ohio; Samuel Garber, Southern Ohio; John Kinsley, Northern Indiana; David Neff, Middle Indiana; B. H. Miller, Southern Indiana; Enoch Eby, Northern Illinois; J. R. Gish and Joseph Hendricks, Southern Illinois; J. F. Eikenberry, Northern Iowa and Minnesota; Robert Badger, Mobile, Iowa; Southern Iowa represented by letter, Tennessee, not represented; D. D. Sell, Northern Missouri; John Hervey, Southern Missouri; Jonathan Lichty, Northern Kansas; Nebraska and Colorado, Southern Kansas not represented; Isaac Miller, Michigan.

THE QUALIFIERS ARE AS FOLLOWS:

Mediator, Enoch Eby; Clerk, James Quinter;

Reading Clerk, R. H. Miller; Door-keeper, Samuel R. Zug.

The far West has a good representation at the meeting.

Those who know, speak of the meeting as the largest of its kind ever convened.

Three thousand, six hundred persons took breakfast on the grounds yesterday morning, and about five thousand availed themselves of a free dinner.

THURSDAY, JUNE THIRTEEN.—The meeting of the M. E. Church last night was conducted by Elder Stephen Basher. The house was filled to overflowing with earnest workers in the cause of Christ, and all went away feeling that it was good to be there.

At the Lutheran Church last evening Mrs. Sarah Major, of Ohio, filled the pulpit. She is quite a fluent talker, and a deep, logical reasoner. The anxiety to hear her was so great, that but a small number of the vast crowd that went could get into the church. She was followed by Elder George Heller in a short address, after which the meeting was brought to a close.

Between 4,500 and 5,000 people took dinner in the dining room of the tabernacle, on the grounds, yesterday.

Fifteen hundred tents is the estimate placed upon the number on the grounds adjacent to those of the Conference yesterday.

There was the largest crowd on the grounds yesterday ever seen in this neck-of-the-woods.

Services were held yesterday afternoon on the grounds, in the woods just west of the chapel building.

GLEANINGS.

From Hillsboro, Ill.—Our church is in a prosperous condition. On last Sabbath one more precious soul became willing to put on Christ through baptism. May the Lord bless the young brother, and keep him faithful. On next Sabbath we expect to meet to organize a Sabbath School; which is one of the means to direct our children into the paths of righteousness. I am glad to see that Christ-like spirit manifested in the church. Pray for us brethren, that we may ever be found faithful. We are commanded to pray without ceasing. May the Lord help us to pray aright, that we may meet the approbation of our Father in Heaven. J. E. SPANIER.

From Dunkirk, O.—Our Love-feast is now numbered with the things of the past. We had a refreshing season, large attendance and good attention. One more soul was added to our church by baptism, also one soul baptized at our recent council, making two conversions to our church since my last report. Yours faithfully, S. T. BOSELMAN.

From Bushnell, Ill.—While waiting here for a train going homeward, I will say, I arrived in the North-western part of Fulton Co., where there is a small band of faithful members. On Saturday afternoon we met at Brother Cook's barn for public preaching. Communion services were held in the evening, when we had a pleasant meeting. On Sunday morning Bro. John Pool was forwarded to the second degree of the ministry. Preaching was held in the forenoon, afternoon and in the evening. Two souls were added by baptism. DANIEL VAN DYKE.

From O. F. Young. Bro. D. N. Workman came to us on the 15th of May, and remained a few days. The result of his labors were, that twenty-one souls were added to the church. May the good Lord bless our dear brother in his labors where. Yesterday, June 16, Bro. Quinter preached a very enthusiastic sermon from Rev. 7: 4. After the service we went to the river side, where prayer was made before administering the ordinance of baptism. We want the prayers of the church. We also want the brethren to visit us often. We are situated among all denominations.

From David A. Norcross.—Oh, keep down in the valley of humility and present the truth in all of its fullness, how to the line, know no man after the flesh and glory in nothing but the Cross of Christ. Let nothing go before the public that would injure the glorious cause of Christianity. You shall see the prayers and good wishes of your unworthy brother.

From Delhi, Ind.—As I am isolated some thirty-five miles from any part of the church, I am very lone some here. No church member but my daughter. We wait anxiously every Thursday for the BROTHERS AT WORK. We can hardly attend to our household affairs until the paper is read. Often I am cast down with trouble and sorrow. When I read those good pieces from the different brethren and sisters, they encourage me again, as the cloud passes over and the sky becomes clear again. We have had no preaching here since last December. Bro. Solomon Storny was here, and my prayers are that the Lord will send more laborers in the field, for the harvest is great and the laborers few.

E. P. ARMSTRONG.

From C. Hope.—Brother Eskildsen is learning to read English, and we improve the time thus whenever we can get together. I want to have him qualified in every way to do this work, as my strength is fast failing and may be unable ere long to do much. I can no longer be up late, nor walk more than eight or ten miles before I am tired out. I used to be able to preach two or three times each day and converse until day-break, and then be satisfied with an hour or two's rest, but can no longer do so. I have answered about fifty letters to the brethren in America who sent us money. Besides these I have had to answer many letters the past two weeks received for peace envelopes and from those who want to know of our doctrine. Several persons are corresponding with me, whose attention has been called to us by the peace envelopes, and they want to know more about us. The prospects for their coming over to us are good.

The government has notified me that if I would permit the post-master here to read the letters containing money sent me, and certify that my petition is correct, the money unrefused will be returned to me. This I did and the money is promised me in a few days. We are daily gaining the respect of all classes of people here as well as the friendship of those more distant. We had an interesting meeting eight miles East of this place, and received a sister by baptism. Brother Eskildsen did the baptizing, this being his first. All passed off pleasantly, and the spectators seemed to be very much impressed. The work was done where our first Danish sister was baptized, and brother Enoch Eby and I also baptized one there last winter. An old man, eighty years of age, also applied, but failed to come, no doubt on account of feebleness, as he came only stagger, along slowly at best. I do not see how we can get along without a hall for meeting here in town. Our house is too small, and not situated at the right place for meeting. What shall we do? We can get none this summer, and to have one next winter we must soon apply for it. I believe if we had a small hall at a good point, that much good could be done. May the Lord keep you all. Your best in Christ.

Bible Union Translation.

THE American Bible Union translation of the Testament is regarded as a work of decided merit, though the translators were not unoppositional. The following, by the editor of the Chillicothe Standard, will give some insight into the formation and workings of the movement:

The American Bible Union was not originally a denominational institution, but was composed of all who were in favor of faithful translations of the Bible and paid the price of membership. There was nothing in the terms of membership to exclude even an Athiest, if he desired to promote this object. It originated, however, with Baptists, and they always had in it a preponderating influence. There were men of different denominations employed in the work of revision; but practically, it came to this at last, that Drs. Conant and Hackett gave the final touch to the work, and very largely the American Bible Union was a publishing house for Dr. Conant. Some years ago, in Chicago, Mr. Fulton and others, speedily proclaimed that the A. B. U. was a Baptist institution; that the revision issued by them was a Baptist revision; that hitherto they had acted in a wrong, but it was now time to throw off the mask and appear in their true character. We are not aware that this was ever repudiated by the speakers or by the Union. About the same time it was affirmed by Dr. Chubbuck, editor of the Watchman and Reformer, that an effort was made by the American Bible Union to be so far incorporated into the Baptist ranks as to be able to hold general assemblies along with other Baptist societies. This was unrepealed. We sought in vain to obtain a denial of it from Dr. Wycliffe. While the A. B. U. never did secure the approval of the Baptists as a denomination, it is still true that its chief organizers and chief workers were Baptists and that the institution came more and more under Baptist influence, until we were compelled to cease to work in it or for it.

Alexander Campbell was employed to revise the book of Acts, which he did. But he was not among the final revisers. How far his work was approved or rejected, we are unable to say.

Our own impression is, that originally it was meant to be unoppositional and un-sectarian; but that, from the force of circumstances, it came almost entirely under the control of Baptist managers and Baptist workers. Those who buy its books, should buy them on their own merits, and not from any representations of the broad scholarship employed on them. The revision of the New Testament is a work of decided merit.

Curiosities of Earth.

At the city of Medina, in Italy, and about four miles around it, wherever the earth is dug, when the workmen arrive at a distance of sixty-three feet, they come to a bed of chalk, which they bore with an augur five feet deep. They then withdraw from the pit before the augur is removed, and upon its extraction the water bursts through the aperture, with great violence, and quickly fills the newly-made well, which continues full, and is affected by neither rains nor droughts. But what is the most remarkable in this operation is the layers of earth as we descend.

At the depth of fourteen feet are found the ruins of an ancient city, paved streets, houses, floors and pieces of masonry work. Under this is found a soft, oozy earth, made up of vegetables, and at twenty-six feet large trees entire, such as walnut trees, with the walnuts still stuck to the stem, and the leaves and branches in a perfect state of preservation. At twenty-eight feet deep a soft chalk is found, mixed with a vast quantity of shells, and the bed is eleven feet thick. Under this vegetables are found again.

The Hottest Spot on Earth.

One of the hottest regions of the earth is along the Persian Gulf, where little or no rain falls. At Bahin the arid shore has no fresh water, yet a comparatively numerous population contrives to live there, thanks to copious springs which burst forth from the bottom of the sea. The fresh water is got by diving. The diver sitting in his boat winds a great goat-skin bag around his left arm, the hand grasping its mouth; then he takes in his right hand a heavy stone, to which is attached a strong line, and thus equipped he plunges in and quickly reaches the bottom. Instantly opening the bag over the strong jet of fresh water, he springs up the ascending current, at the same time closing the bag, and is helped aboard. The stone is then hauled up, and the diver after taking breath plunges in again. The source of these copious submarine springs is thought to be the green hill of Oman, some five or six hundred miles distant.

Reports from various parts of the country show that the wheat crop will be a good yield. In some localities the crop is being reaped in good condition.

The electric lights, whenever tried, seemed to be giving general satisfaction. A test has been made in Cleveland, O., by which a large building was well lighted at a cost of 30 cents per hour, while the same light, if furnished by gas, would cost $8.00 per hour. The light is said to be steady, uniform and soft to the eye.

The Russian army has lost more soldiers by typhus since the close of the war, than by battle during the whole campaign in Asia Minor.

Since the beginning of modern missions, the Bible has been translated into 212 languages, and spoken by 85,000,000 of human beings, and distributed at the rate of nearly twelve every minute. All this has been done by missionaries. Thirty-nine of the languages referred to, never had a written form until the missionaries created it.

The mysterious disappearance of Mrs. Maudie E. Lord, a noted spiritualist of Boston, gives the spirits another chance to show their information. The woman has disappeared, leaving no trace behind, and of all the spirits that were at her beck there is not one to tell a cautious police of her whereabouts. Here is something that can not be done by jugglery, and the police are as helpless as the spirits.

Never in modern times has there been such a period of famine as in the last five years. First in Anatolia (Turkey), then in India, and now in China and Brazil. Tens of thousands have died from sheer starvation. Last month the deaths from this cause in Brazil were reported to be seventy as one hundred in a day. Government and individuals have done what they can, but are powerless to deal adequately with the calamity.

THE ONE THAT LOVES JESUS.

BY L. E. STUMP.

THE one that loves Jesus,
Will do as He says,
Will walk in His footsteps
And follow His ways.

He will show by his acts,
And converse serene,
To the world by faith,
His Savior he's seen.

The one that loves Jesus,
Never will scorn
The least of His teachings,
The Scriptures adorn.

Does not say he loves Him,
And then leave undone
The things He's commanded,
Which are all as one.

The one that loves Jesus,
Need not to tell
To those all around him,
They know it full well.

This love to poor mortals,
Will plainly bespeak
That he has the Spirit
Of the lowly and the meek.

The one that loves Jesus,
Tongue cannot express,
The joy that he feels;
The calm and sweet rest.

For he knows when he dies,
Whether sooner or late,
This loved One will meet him,
At the beautiful gate.

THE NEW AND THE OLD.

BY C. H. BAL-RAUGH.

To Brother E. L. Fishstock, of La Due, Missouri:—

"IN the beginning was the Word." This sounds old. But "He" is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. There is no wrinkle on the brow of Deity. Our plea of age means not not time. We call a person old at four score because the marks of decay and decrepitude are everywhere visible. A sinless being at eighty would have all the freshness of childhood. We perhaps too much overlook how entirely we are dependent on the infusion of the ever-youth of God into human nature in the Incarnation for the exclusion of old age from the soul. A child-soul in a shriveled, attenuated, tottering Octogenarian, is the gift of Christianity. The God-born never grow old. The Holy Germ of Eternal Life conserves the essential elements of human nature for the ever-glowing bloom and beauty of everlasting manhood. A Divine generation communicates a Divine life sustained by Divine abunant. All dead souls are self-starved. In our Father's House is bread enough and to spare. No one ever goes with swine to the trough of lust-surfeiting, soul-famishing swill, but by choice. There are no husks in God's garden, no bitter sapless mullens in His meadows, no sawdust bread on His table. "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, He leadeth me beside the still waters." All the nourishment of the new creature in Christ Jesus is drawn out of the very heart of the God-man, and grows us into the purity and beauty and glory and bliss of the Holy Trinity.

"The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want." What a gracious privilege; what a glorious confidence. Such sheep may well gambel in the meadows of grace, and sun themselves on the slopes of the Tibors and Calvaries and Olivets of holy experience. "I know my sheep, and am known of mine." Transporting reciprocity. O to have the witness in ourselves that we are the children of God! Worlds are too poor to guarantee this blessing, or compensate its loss. What an unspeakable rapture to stand before the mirror of Incarnate Truth, and be able to say, "My Beloved is mine, and I am His." One look of recognition from the Good Shepherd, one nibble of His green pastures, one sip of His still waters, one hour's repose in the assurance of His approbation, one whisper of encouragement from His honey-dropping lips. O how these momentary thrills radiate and sweeten a lifetime. Nothing can keep past bliss from rolling its tide into the present but sin. Those who have retained their first love and those who have not, will accord a ready amen. Although you live in Galilee, remote from the more central part of the Brotherhood, Christ's pasture is as green and luscious, and His springs as crystal and fresh as on any spot on earth.

The ministry of the Holy Ghost is genemical. While on earth, the Good Shepherd was never in two places at once. But His Vicegerent can be at all places at the same time. Christ through the Spirit is ever fulfilling the precious promise, "Lo, I am with you always." What a savory mouthful this is from the green pastures of salvation; what a refreshing draught from the still waters of Divine peace. Ho, ye lambs of the Eternal Shepherd, who are "scattered abroad" through the ends of the earth, sighing in your exile and loneliness, take down your harp from the willows, and play the songs of Zion in your isolation, for Jehorah-shammah is the name engraven in your hearts and imprinted on your foreheads. Hark! Hush the world and sense and self, and let faith hold her ear to the cardiphonia of the Spirit, and these words will bring green pastures and still waters to your soul: "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." "I WILL NEVER LEAVE THEE, NOR FORSAKE THEE." "MY SHEEP HEAR MY VOICE, AND I KNOW THEM"—"THEY SHALL NEVER PERISH." There is not a page in the Divine Directory that is not warning and rippling with pastures and rills of Shepherd-love. Every stalk has its root in the head of Jesus, and every drop wells out of the fathomless Fountain Head of Uncreated Benignity. There is no Sahara, nor Fugid Zone, nor parched Teque, where the God-owned, God-owning soul will not find a tuft of pasture fresh and sweet with the verdure of the Everlasting Gardens. How many roaming members are bleeding for the flock, and sighing to be down amid green pastures in fellowship with the elect. Rest assured, ye drooping wanderers of Babylon, ye lonely exiles of Patmos, a genuine sheep-nature will never be without tokens of Shepherd care, many glimpses of the Shepherd's face, many an evidence of the Shepherd's guiding voice, many a morsel of Heaven-provided nutriment, and many an overflowing cup in the desert. Wonders will God do for you, and with you, if you supply the necessary conditions—HOLINESS, FAITH, LOVE.

RAINY SABBATHS.

BY CHARLES H. WYLLIE.

RAINY Sabbaths seem very gloomy to some people, but I think we need them sometimes; I think they are very good to test us as to our Christianity. When we have a beautiful sunshiny Sabbath, we of course desire to go to church, or at least we generally go, and we spend the Sabbath very well. But sometimes we have a rainy Sabbath, that the weather and roads are almost too bad for us to go to church, so we must of course stay at home, and how do we spend the day? Here is the test. On pleasant Sabbaths, we go to church and give the time to the service of God. But now what will we do? Do we devote some of the time to personal communion with God? Do we gather the members of the family together and devote some time to the study of the Scriptures? Do we spend some time in singing praises to the Jehovah? Do we spend any time in reading in some religious book? All this we can do, and will of course be acceptable with God. Or do we spend the day in sleepy idleness, or gossiping conversation? Or do we spend the day in reading the newspaper, examining the markets, or reading some kind of novel? Do we not sometimes see persons spending their time in this way? If we give the Sabbath to the Lord, let us give it to Him, whether it is rainy or not, whether we are at church or at home. If you want to find a real Christian, examine him at home, on a rainy Sabbath.

THE DECLINE OF PURE RELIGION.

BY A. J. ROSENBERGER.

IT is evident to all observing minds, that the present religion of the age is becoming much diluted, seriously adloyed; is on the decline in her purity. There is a general decline in discipline and there are practices and enterprises being introduced which tend to seriously alienate their affections, and lower the grade of moral standing.

Such, for instance, are the enterprises of theaters, fairs, lotteries and even balls, and card-playing in the midst of what is called, refined religious society. These enterprises would have been shocking to our early Christian fathers. To us, they should prove revolting. This tidal wave of decline against the progress of pure religion, prevailed very early in the Christian era. Brother Paul warns his son Timothy that the time will come when "men will not endure sound doctrine;" he also tells the Thessalonians that that "mystery of iniquity doth already work." The epistle of the seer upon Patmos to the seven churches of Asia, constitutes a doleful message of warning to those churches relative to their decline.

It is melancholy to know that the vast fruitful field of the Savior and His apostles, is wrapped in dark heathenism. The places which knew the flourishing churches of Ephesus, Corinth, Philadelphia and Smyrna, with many others are now the scenes of ruin; residences of monks. The gods of Mahomet and pagans reign supreme. Oh! how sad to reflect on the history of the past.

This wave of decline having done its work, in the land where the standard bearers of pure religious doctrines once flourished, it has crossed the great deep, and years since, commenced its unhappy aggressive war in our own favored land. And with what alarming speed is it making conquests! "That there is no future hell," is now being blown broadcast from the most prominent pulpits of the land; while adherents to this corrupt doctrine are daily flocking to their standard; where Matthew with other sacred writers, is very explicit in stating that at a future day, at the Lord's final coming, "all nations shall be gathered before Him, and He shall divide them as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats."

The Savior also warned certain people, who were untaught, that the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah would stand more favorable in the day of judgment, than they; thus showing that there is a great future day of judgment, at which we must all appear.

A holy wife was raised in Massachusetts, recently expressed to me her mortification, at the decline of religion in New England; especially in the vicinity where she was raised. On visiting the home of her childhood, where the meek religion of the Puritan fathers once flourished as a green tree, infidelity in its various forms had taken possession of the place.

A noted infidel advocate, from Europe, on landing recently at one of their ports, was met by the city officials, and borne by them and the city band through the principal streets of their city, thus showing the great regard that many of the public officers entertain for these teachers of corrupt doctrine. Not only in New England, and the cities East, is this decline visibly going on; but through our entire religious circle, its visible effects are being made manifest. Churches whose discipline provides for plainness, foot-washing, non-conformity, which the Bible so plainly teaches, are totally by many disregarded. Pulpits which were once filled with the plain and meek eloquent of professing Christianity, have sunk beneath this tidal wave of decline, and in their stead has arisen a king "that knows not Joseph;" but in turn they persecute and even vilify the meek, humble, grand and the sublime principles of their own Christian fathers before them.

The above is a melancholy truth! Sad to know that this wave of decline, is leaving her footprints in our own dear brotherhood as it rolls along. We however are not left without repeated warnings of the above progress of evil. Brother Paul tells Timothy, "that in the last days perilous times shall come; men shall be lovers of their own-selves, covetous, boasters, proud &c; also that the time will come when men will not endure sound doctrine." And even "from among your own-selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things and shall draw men after them." While Christ in Luke 18: 8, sums up this train of thought by enquiring, "When the Son of man comes shall he find faith on earth?"

Dear reader, let us examine ourselves whether we be in the faith; let us prove our own-selves. "Dig deep and build upon the rock Christ Jesus," then the wave that has swept cities, kingdoms and empires with their mighty rulers from the land, will to us be harmless; for if we are led faithful, the Scriptures give us the assurance that nothing "shall separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus."

TO-MORROW.

TO-MORROW is a world of prophecies; the place where human fancy most delights to dwell. Silent and mute it lies before us gleaming with hope and happy anticipations. It has been said that the two great pleasures of living are in having something to love, and something to hope for, and the last of these is ever before us in the promise of "to-morrow."

To-morrow we may not know, and it is well that it is thus ordained to be, for beyond the invisible veil that conceals alike its coming joys and sorrows, our fancy may revel only in what is beautiful and far, nor see the gleam or shadows of coming trials, and worldly afflictions, that, could we anticipate as fixed realities that were certain to come, would mar all our peace and enjoyment of the present.

Truth is always consistent with itself, and needs nothing to help it out; it is always near at hand, and sits upon our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware; whereas a lie is troublesome, sets a man's invention upon the rack and needs a great many more to make it good.

"Wisdom is good with an inheritance; and by it there is profit to them that see the sun." "Beloved, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves; be ye therefore as wise as serpents, and as harmless as doves."

OUR ERVILLA.

THE solemn hour of midnight,
Was slowly passing by;
The friends stood around with bated breath,
For Ervilla soon must die.

The breathing came in labored gasps,
The pulse beat faint and slow;
The mother sat in silent grief,
For Ervilla soon must go.

The father sat in dread suspense,
Upon his chair in pain;
For ne'er would he behold in health
His daughter's face again.

Disease had laid its fevered hand—
Upon the sister dear;
Brothers and sisters could not stay—
The icy hand so near.

But of Ervilla let us speak,
Her short, bright life is done;
Her morning sun rose bright and clear,
But set ere it was noon.

Her husband's heart beat high with hope,
Life seemed a cloudless day;
But ah! too soon the angel death,
Called her from him away.

Farewell, dear wife, my heart is sad,
That thou wast called so young;
But in submission we will say—
God's holy will be done.

MAN'S DEPRAVITY.

BY P. E. WHITMER.

"MARVEL not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again" (John 3: 7). We purpose noticing in this connection, man's depravity. We shall consider the subject under the following heads: 1. Its cause; 2. Its totality; 3. Its generality; and 4. Its peculiarities.

1. Our first parents, when they came from the plastic hand of God, their Creator, were good, upright and holy (Gen. 1: 31).

Many ideas have been advanced in reference to man's original condition. Some have claimed that Adam had no moral character, from the fact, that he was destitute of knowledge, that his mind was not susceptible of development until after his transgression. Others, again, have claimed that Adam was an innocent being, and in this particular like God. To branch off on topics of this kind would be greatly deviating from our purpose. But it does not seem reasonable that God would have given so important commands to a mind not sufficiently developed to carry into successful execution, His purposes and designs; as for instance, the naming of all the animal creation, (Gen. 2: 20) and to have dominion over all God's works (Ps. 8: 6), much less an injunction upon the obedience or violation of which depended the weal or woe of all the human race. From these inferences, we readily conclude that Adam, previous to his transgression, possessed sufficient intelligence to do all that God commanded him to do; to conclude otherwise, would be accusing God of exacting of man impossibilities.

That man was created upright and holy, none will question. That he was placed, by God, in a garden Eastward in Eden, with a simple command to dress it, is also a fact. That he was created in the image and likeness of God; possessed faculties susceptible of development and improvement; that he was capable of glorifying God his Creator, of violating His holy commandments, which he did voluntarily, and of being driven out of that beautiful garden in which God had placed him, and of dying the death which God declared he should die in case he violated His command, are Bible facts for which we need not give the "thus saith the Lord."

Our first parents, though placed in a garden of God's own planting, and teeming with all that Divine wisdom designed should be for their happiness and well-being, were not beyond the reach of temptation. Man having been created a free moral agent, must necessarily come in contact with temptations. It pleased God in His infinite wisdom to try man's faithfulness, ere his moral state should be eternally secure. In that trial he failed, by listening to the beguiling voice of the tempter, and eating of that fruit of which God said, "The day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2: 17).

Man in consequence of this transgression was plunged into a state of depravity from which self-resurrection was absolutely impossible. But God had mercy, when none other could save, He determined to help. While justice from one side of the battlements of heaven cried aloud, "cut him down why cumbereth he the ground?" mercy steps forth from the other, crying, "justice, justice, sheath thy sword. I will meet the demands of the law." Thus in the courts of heaven a wonderful plan had been conceived from the beginning whereby the lost might be recovered. Jesus Christ the second person in the holy Trinity offers Himself a sacrifice for sin. The Father accepts, and consents to receive once more into His favor as many as should be made willing to accept the atonement thus so unmeritoriously provided for them.

TOTALITY OF MAN'S DEPRAVITY.

2. "They are all gone aside, they are altogether become filthy, there is none that doeth good, no, not one" (Ps. 14: 3).

From this Scripture, we learn that man was once good and holy, or he never could have gone astray and become filthy, doing only that which was displeasing in the sight of God. Man in consequence of his apostasy, is represented in Eph. 2: 1 as being "dead in trespasses and sins." Man, having voluntarily violated God's Law, become spiritually dead, "for the wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6: 23). Man's heart is so completely saturated with sin, that of himself he is incapable of doing good. And were it not for the constraining influence of the Holy Spirit and Word which God in His infinite mercy and wisdom sent into the world to "reprove man of sin and of righteousness and of a judgment to come," there would none be constrained to come unto Christ and obtain remission of sins. For the nature of man's depravity is such, that not one of all the human race would naturally be willing to embrace the offer of mercy. Man's depravity is so great that he is dead; hence not capable within himself of originating one good thought, deed or action. "For the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth up" (Gen. 8: 21). "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." (Gen. 6: 5). "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be" (Rom. 8: 7).

GENERILITY OF MAN'S DEPRAVITY.

3. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for all have sinned." From this Scripture the universality of man's depravity is apparent. In consequence of Adam's apostasy, all his posterity became polluted with sin, and doomed to care, sorrow, sickness and the train of moral and physical evils which have followed. O how man is to be pitied in this apostate and ruined condition! O what a dark picture compared with that while he yet delighted in the Law of God! Obeying it in all its length and breadth, and in consequence of the purity of his heart and conduct, entitled to the favor of God, the enjoyment of His counsels and associations. But how changed his condition now in consequence of sin. Thrust away from God his Creator, he presents only a state of terrible, moral desolation. And were it not for the plan of human redemption, he would be like a star cut loose from its center of attraction, wandering to and fro, without one ray of divine Light, to foster a hope of escape from infinite wrath, and death, death, eternal death.

PECULIARITIES OF MAN'S DEPRAVITY.

4. Man is not only spiritually asleep as we have seen, but he is also blind, so that he cannot see afar off (Peter 1: 9). There is an innate principle in man which seemingly blinds his eyes, and constrains him to grasp at a shadow and miss the substance—a principle which subjects his better nature and judgment, and carries him forward with the velocity of time, until he stands upon the very brink of the mysteries of a boundless eternity, disregarding all that pertains to his peace, comfort and well-being in life and endless felicity in the life to come. Man is not only spiritually asleep and blind, but also deaf—deaf to the Gospel call and offers of mercy. Although living in a land of Bibles, Sunday-schools, and teeming with all the religious liberties requisite to worship God acceptably "in spirit and in truth," he may be seen sitting from Lord's day to Lord's day beneath the Gospel sound without exhibiting the slightest signs of convictions. O how true the language of Isaiah 42: 20. "Seeing they shall not see, and hearing they shall not hear!"

Man, being carnal, hates God; this is evident from Rom. 8: 7. Yet the sinner would have us believe that he loves God. But on investigation, we find that the God which he loves, is not the God which is revealed in the Bible. For we read in John 14: 21, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." And 1st John 2: 4, "He that saith I know Him, and keepeth not His commandments, is a liar and the truth is not in him." And as the sinner is not of Christ, unregenerated, and hence alienated from God, we can but conclude that his god is the manimon of this sin-cursed earth and the God of the Bible he knoweth not.

The Universalist, too, he loves God, but it is evident that his is not the God of Abraham, Isaac and of Jacob, for their God has declared that the wicked shall be turned into hell with all the nations that forget God (Ps.). We also read in Matthew 25: 46, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." But our Universalist friends tell us that their "God is all love, and that he will not cast into hell, neither will he doom any to everlasting punishment." But while such teaching does not harmonize with God's sacred Word, we must again conclude that their God is not our God, for our God has declared in 2nd Thess. 1: 9, "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of His power." This is what God says.

There is one more feature of man's depravity and alienation from God and

His teachings which we shall notice, and that is, man's honesty or in other words, no matter what a person believes, just so he is honest and sincere in it. It runs something like this: If a man believes he can be saved without baptism, and is honest and sincere in his belief, then baptism is not necessary, because in that case he can be saved without it. Or if he believes with all his heart that sprinkling is Christian baptism, and is sprinkled, then sprinkling becomes valid baptism.

If he believes sincerely that he can be just as humble without engaging in the humiliating ordinance of feet-washing, as he possibly could be, should he participate in what the apostle Paul in 1st Timothy 5: 10, mentions, as one among the good works in which Christians, in his day, did not consider too humiliating to engage in, then the injunction of our blessed Savior, "So ought ye also to wash one another's feet," becomes not obligatory upon him, but on some one, who thinks different from what he does. Again, if a man believes with all his might that he can salute his brother in Christ at a stone's cast, or if necessary, across the mighty deep by means of a telegram, or if he can flatter himself into the belief that he can enjoy its spiritual blessings without its literal observance, or without engaging in that, upon the proper performance of which the spiritual is promised, then the literal salutation of the Holy Kiss, becomes a non-essential, and he is entitled to the smiles and approbation of his heavenly Father equally with those who enjoy the spiritual by observing the literal; notwithstanding the Savior said, "If ye know these happy are ye if ye do them" (John 13: 17).

Of all the peculiarities and evil features of man's depravity, the last noticed is the most dangerous, and calculated to lead more souls down into the vortex of endless ruin, than all the manifold other evils that can possibly environ the Christian's pathway. This is true, 1. because it has become a popular doctrine, and in this the nineteenth century, any doctrine that is popular, is accepted with the masses whether it be Bible or not. 2. It is true because it is congenial with man's depraved and carnal nature, that he is waffled down the declivity of time, dead in "the gall of bitterness and bond of iniquity," trusting to a faith founded on human inference and not on God's word, "which shall judge him in the last day." 3. It is true because man's opinion, is one of the leading evil features in man's depravity, seemingly has more weight with the masses, than God's eternal Word. This fact must be potent to every observing mind; this is not only true in this our day, but has ever been the case. Look at the religious world to-day. While all agree in their faith in God's Word, how widely they differ in opinion? While some practice according to their faith in God's Word, endeavoring to live up to all the commandments, doing the things that are set forth by the precept and example of their Savior, we see others practicing according to their opinions.

To illustrate, more fully, this feature of man's depravity, we will take the case of Naaman in 2 Kings 5: 10. When the man of God told him to go and wash seven times in Jordan, and he should be healed he was wroth and said, are not Abana and Parphar, rivers of Damascus better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them and be clean? Here was faith in God's word, pointing him down to the river Jordan, while his opinion would point him to the rivers of Damascus. His faith could lead him to no other river than Jordan, while his opinion might lead him to any river his fancy or imagination might dictate. Again, we might take the case of Saul in 1 Samuel 15th chapter, to illustrate the difference in faith in God's Word and man's opinion. In reading this we see that faith would lead Saul to do just what God commanded him to do, but his opinion lead him to do something else, and because Saul followed his opinion, instead of the command of God, he could not be king over Israel.

And now, dear reader, let us think and read more for ourselves, and not allow a few brains to do all of our reading and thinking, for if we do, we shall "walk as blind men" (Zep. 1: 17). "If the blind lead the blind, they shall both fall into the ditch" (Luke 6: 39). Let us avoid the ditch by taking God's Word as the man of our counsel. It is better than sacrifice, for it might lead us wrong, like it did Saul. For we read in Prov. 14: 25, "There is a way that seemeth right to a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." Faith, in God's Word, cannot lead us wrong. It could not lead Naaman wrong; neither Saul, neither will it us. The only danger is in following the dictates of our depraved nature, or clinging to our opinions, instead of what God hath commanded, that will cause us to be rejected, like Saul was, as king of Israel.

MORE PREACHERS.

BY DANIEL F. MILLER.

HAVING been reading brother Lamdon West's article about more preachers being wanted, and how to get them, I thought to present a few thoughts. The cry is for more preachers, and I think it would be a great blessing all through to the church, and also for the calling of many from darkness to light, if we would have a better order and make a greater effort in this direction, for life is the time to serve the Lord.

If we keep the preaching of the Gospel in one or two hands here and there, what a great hinderance it will be to the spreading of the truth as it ought to be. Some will say, we have enough preachers for the present. But we should look ahead, for however good a preacher may be, a change at times will be found advisable, and then these will one day wear out and there should be others to take their places. And then we want more help in the spreading of the everlasting Gospel to a dying people. The Master has said, "the harvest is great and the laborers are few." Hence more help is wanted in the great and good work.

Say for instance, that in some locality in the West or elsewhere, there are a few members calling for help and preaching. Why not, in order to supply that want, send some elders there and have one or more of them elected to to the ministry (if the qualifications are possessed) and in that way they will be ready for the work, and may grow up into great usefulness, and become a strong body in the church.

Now I will speak of what I know to be true, of a circumstance that occurred in the Welsh Run district, Pa. Some twelve years ago it so happened that they had more preachers than it was thought they had use for, as some of them had been elected at home and others moved in from elsewhere. However some of them have since died, and gone to their long home. They made a great change in the appointments. Twelve weeks appointment into six; six into three, and so on down, and had many meetings and much good done. They also had one in their number who they thought did not work as much as he should, but he was busy in bearing messages from place to place, hence the name message-bearer, and in the course of time the message went over into Fulton county, the Western part of the district, where there were no members at all. The preachers being, as it is often the case, few in number, never went out into those waters to fish, however the message came back from Fulton county, to the brethren, and they quickly sent the word over the high mountain, and there it fell into good ground and hath brought forth much fruit, till at this time they have their own preachers, deacons and not far from one hundred members.

Our Savior had but few preachers at first; but he sent out twelve at one time, next seventy, and from that to the ordaining of elders in every city, and we believe they had plenty of help in every way, and it would certainly be wise in us if we would follow their example, and see that ministers of firm principles were established in every corner where they are needed. We have plenty of material, let us make good use of it to God's glory and honor.

FRUITS MEET FOR REPENTANCE.

BY B. REELMAN.

"BRING forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our Father: for I say unto you, That God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham" (Luke 3: 8).

The language above quoted, was spoken by John the Baptist, and was addressed to those who came to be baptized of him. They no doubt understood the meaning of his language, when they said, "What shall we do then?" That is, they knew that to bring fruits meet for repentance, they would have to manifest by their actions that they had repented. But to what extent they would have to change their course of life, they did not know. So their question was, "what shall we do then?" His answers were adapted to suit each case presented, as will be noticed by referring to the 11, 12, 13, and 14 verses of Luke chapter 3, where he addressed those having two coats, and those having none.

The publicans which came to be baptized, and the soldiers likewise demanded of him saying, "And what shall we do?" It is evident that they were interested and anxious to know what to do to bring fruits meet for repentance. In the eleventh verse, John answered saying unto them all, "I will indeed baptize you with water, but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." Here John's language was addressed to all, that is to all that he baptized. John answered saying unto them all, "I indeed baptize you." So he must have baptized them all, that is all who demanded it (not those who rejected it). "And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him" (Luke 6: 29, 30). So it appears evident from what we can gather from the Word, that John the Baptist, baptized all who demanded to be baptized of him, even those whom he addressed saying, "O generation of vipers! who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come," were baptized, he himself said, "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance" (Matt. 3: 11), addressing those same persons. He did not tell them to go and wait awhile, then come and demand baptism. No; but he wanted them to bring fruits meet for repentance. He saw they were fleeing from the wrath to come; for he said, "who hath warned you to flee?" They wanted to make their escape. "And now the axe is laid at the root of the tree" (the Gospel axe).

You have commenced a good work; continue to the end. "Therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire." He did not advocate the doctrine of probationism in the least; not any more so than did Jesus and His disciples, and "there were added unto the church the same day," "and he took them the same hour of the night and washed their stripes and was baptized, he and all his straightway." The important matter is, that when we have repented, have faith and are baptized, that we bring forth fruits meet for repentance, "that we do not think to say within ourselves, that we have Abraham to our father;" that is, that we are under the promise, no matter what we do; that as we are now members of the church, we can walk in our former lusts, without hazarding our salvation. The injunction of John the Baptist, will apply to us to-day, that we "bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance;" which we can only do by obeying the Gospel of Christ, by walking in the light as He is in the light.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS.

BY LEVI GARDNER.

"WHEREFORE, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith" (Heb. 12: 1, 2). As there has been a great deal said through the columns of the BROTHERS AT WORK, in regard to coming to Jesus, I have thought it would not be out of place to suggest a few thoughts on the propriety, and importance, of looking unto Jesus as the Author and Finisher of our faith. Now we all believe that no one can come to Jesus, but by faith, "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Having then read, or heard the Word of God, this, accepted in the heart as truth, produces what we call faith, but as there are different kinds of faith, it will be well to notice them a little.

We are informed by the apostle James, that there is a dead faith. Dead, means inactive, manifesting no life; then if we profess to believe any theory whatever, and do not reduce that faith to practice, it is dead, or inactive, and consequently will do us no good. Again, there is a theoretical, a speculative faith. We may theorize, or speculate a great deal through faith, and yet accomplish but little. But when we get in possession of the faith of Christ, this is then made to us a living, practical, evangelical and saving faith. This faith produces effect, it awakens the emotions of the heart, it kindles a flame of love, and causes our thoughts and aspirations to rise higher than earth-born hearers, and worldly honors of men.

We now begin to look to Jesus for salvation, we look to the efficacy and virtue of His blood, for the pardon of our sins, and the hope of our salvation. We now turn from our sins, we begin to follow His example, we follow Him down to the water, are baptized according to His command (Matt. 28: 19), coming forth a new creature, being born again, "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John 1: 13). Having made Jesus the Author of our faith, will we now let Him become the Completer or Finisher of our faith? Laying aside every weight, every encumbrance, every little idol of the heart, both of our external and internal nature, which would be calculated to keep our minds exercised on things which are not compatible with the Word of God; thus freeing ourselves from the slavish and hell-bound chains of Satan. Christ says, "if my words shall make you free, you shall be free indeed." This freedom can only be obtained by coming to Jesus, not only as the Author, but as the Finisher of our faith.

"The sin which doth so easily beset us." This sin, I understand to be the sin of unbelief, or a non-confidence in God's Word. This was the sin which caused the Israelites to fall in the wilderness, and this same sin will cause us to fall in like manner, if we begin to consult flesh and blood, and look back as did Israel. Israel, you know lusted after the things of Egypt, after they crossed the Red Sea, and it went ill with them. So if we, after having come out from Satan's bondage, begin to look back after the things that belong to Satan's kingdom—lusting after them, desiring to walk in the ways and customs of his subjects, partaking of their offerings and festivals, such as Gospel tabernacles, and a host of other abominations, which in this fast age are introduced and consecrated as sacred and holy things. Child of God beware, "he not deceived for God will not be mocked." Remember Lot's wife. You know when she was told to leave the city of Sodom, she was not to look back, but she violated that command, and death was the result. Again, Jesus says, "no man having put his hands to the plough, and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God" (Luke 9: 62). And in connection with this, the apostle Peter, in speaking of the works of the false prophets that shall arise in the last days, says, "For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were clean escaped from them who live in error. While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage. For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them. But it happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit; and, The sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire."

WOMEN'S ADORNING.

IN answer to a sister, who wishes to know whether it is according to the Gospel for sisters to adorn themselves with the fashions of the world in the wearing of gold, costly array and superfluities generally, we remark, that the Scriptures are not only plain, but positive regarding the adorning to be used by both brethren and sisters, and there is not much danger of those who have been properly taught, and have an eye single to God's glory, departing from the simplicity of the truth in this respect.

If women would spend as much time cultivating their minds and improving their health, as many do adorning their bodies it would be far better for themselves and the rising generation.

Paul, who wrote by inspiration, when speaking of the deportment of Christians says, "In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array" (1 Tim. 2:9). The following is the Bible Union translation. We give the connection: "I desire, therefore, that the men pray in every place, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and disputing; in like manner also that women, in becoming apparel, adorn themselves with modesty and sobriety; not in braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly ornament; but, which becometh women professing godliness, by means of good works."

Wilson, in his Emphatic Diaglott, gives the same passage the following rendering: "Appoint, therefore, the men to pray in every place, lifting up holy hands without wrath and disputing. In like manner, the women, also, in becoming attire, with modesty and soberness of mind, not decking themselves with wreaths, or gold, or pearls, or expensive clothing."

The apostle gives some particular directions regarding the duties of men (verse 8) in public worship, and then proceeds to state the duties of women (verse 9), showing how she should adorn herself in the house of the Lord. He shows that they should appear in suitable apparel for the occasion, and not attempt to introduce the vain customs of the world in public worship among the saints. The apostle well knew that if he could prevail upon the females to dress properly in meeting, he would have no trouble with them at their homes. The principles laid down regarding dress were also to apply to them in other situations of life. People who dress plainly at church are not bothered with pride at home.

The sisters' clothing is to be neat and tidy, such as becometh her. God never intended that women should dress unbecomingly, and therefore give themselves a repulsive appearance. Females can dress neat and graceful without resorting to either gold or costly ornament. Such things will make them no better, nor will it make good-meaning people think any the more of them. It is encouraging to go into a congregation where all the brethren and sisters dress neatly, yet plainly, dispensing with the ruffles and trimmings that belong to the world. Leave fine dressing where it belongs, it will be of no benefit in either the church or heaven.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

Their Integrity.

THERE are five sources of Biblical criticism.

- 1. The most ancient versions. 2. Manuscripts of Sacred Text. 3. Parallel passages. 4. Quotations from Sacred Works. 5. The evidence that arises from the context.

1. The most ancient version known is the Greek translation of the Old Testament, known as the Septuagint. This word is from the Latin Septuaginta which means seventy. It is supposed that the Jewish Sanhedrim, which consisted of seventy members besides the High Priest, approved of the translation. It was also translated by Aquila of Pontus, about A. D. 150, by Theodotion A. D. 160, by Symmachus A. D. 200. Origin gathered these three translations and the Septuagint and printed them in parallel columns, which work was called Tetraptla. To these he then added the original in both Greek and Hebrew, which combination he named Hexapla.

2. Next in order of translations is the Targums or Chaldee Versions. Of these there are eleven now in existence. The first two the "Targum of Onkelos on the Law" and "Jonathan Ben Uzziel on the Prophets" are the most valuable for the purposes of Biblical criticism.

3. The Samaritan Version of the Pentateuch, whose author is unknown, is supposed to have been written about twenty years before Christ. Samaritans say it was prepared by Nathaniel a priest of that people.

4. The Syriac Versions. The most valuable of them is the Peshito, or old Syriac. It contains all the canonical books of the Old Testament, and all of the New except Second Epistle of Peter, Second and Third John, Epistle of Jude, and Revelation. The Syrians believe that the Old was translated by Solomon, or by Asa the priest who was sent from Assyria to Samaria, about 700 years B. C. Some of them believe that both the Old and New were translated by the apostle Thaddæus. This is first mentioned by Ephraem, who died A. D. 376. But it was then already an ancient version, for many of its words had gone out of use and needed to be explained. Besides this, Ephraem calls it our version, which proves that it was received by the Syrians as the correct one.

5. Arabic Versions. There is no evidence that any part of the Scriptures were translated into the Arabic language before the beginning of the Mohammedan era, A. D. 627. After this date a number of versions were made, the most celebrated being that of Rabbi Saadiah Gaon, or Hagan, the Illustrious, who was a learned Jew of Babylon. This was about A. D. 930. Another valuable translation of the New Testament is that of Epen or Erpenius, printed in 1616.

6. Italian Versions. When, and by whom the Old and New Testaments were first translated in the Latin language, is not known. Tertullian quoted from the Itala, near the close of the second century, hence it is a very ancient translation. Davidson fixes its date at about A. D. 150. In 1583 all the fragments of this version were collected and published in one volume by Pope Sixtus. In 1582 Jerome commenced a version of this old Latin version, and is supposed to have completed the work. But most all of his Old Testament manuscripts were destroyed; hence only the book of Psalms, Job, and several New Testament are now in existence. But Jerome thought this version not satisfactory, hence even before its completion began a new one. For quite awhile this new version was very unpopular, but it gradually rose in favor so that by the close of the seventh century, it was generally accepted by the Latin churches. From that time on it was known as the Vulgate or Common Version. In A. D. 1592 it was revised by Almon, and having passed through a number of changes and critical revisions it was finally canonized in A. D. 1546 by the council of Trent.

According to Davidson the New Testament was also translated into the Coptic, Sahidic, and Bezaric dialects of Egypt, in the third century; into the Ethiopic, and Gothic in the fourth century; into the Syriac and Armenian in the fifth; into the Gregorian, or Iberic in the sixth; and into the Anglo-Saxon in the eighth. Thus we have the various versions of the Old and New Testaments as handed down to us; and the reader may wonder why so many revisions. This is necessary because language is constantly changing, and the Scriptures must be put in words to express the idea to people of all ages. The idea is never lost; but different words in different ages are used to express the same idea. However this is not true of all original words. It is true of only a certain class of words, which seem to be of a transient character.

Greek manuscripts are divided into Uncial and Cursive; the former are written in capital and the other in small letters. The oldest manuscripts were written in large, round or square capitals, and had no accents or divisions of words. In the eighth and ninth centuries the letters were made longer and narrower, and were more or less inclined either to the right or to the left. About the close of the ninth century the cursive letters came into general use. The number of manuscripts now extant are great, being found in many private and public libraries, and are written on both paper and parchment. Critics have found a resemblance between manuscripts written within certain geographical limits, hence have classified them under certain Families or Recensions; such as the Latin, Asiatic, Byzantine, Alexandrine, and Tischendorf. The Uncial manuscripts are commonly represented by English and Greek capitals, and the Cursive by Arabic numerals.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

IN the course of events it so happens that our day of publication this week falls on the Fourth of July; the great anniversary of the Declaration of the American Independence—a day that has long been celebrated as the birthday of the nation, and as such will be handed to posterity for generations to come.

387 years ago this continent was unknown to the civilized world, save a few traditional fragments of knowledge from Iceland that may have reached a few in Norway, and perhaps may have been heard of by Columbus, for it is evident that the North-eastern part of this continent was discovered at least 500 years before it was publicly made known in Europe. Columbus, however, is entitled to the honor of making known the first important discovery, though he was not the first one to see any part of country now embraced in the United States.

When first explored, this country was inhabited by the Red man, who reigned supreme in the New World. To all students of Antiquity it is clear that at least the South and Western portion of North America was at one time peopled with a race of some intelligence and culture in the arts. The now existing ruins found in New Mexico and Central America of what were once magnificent cities and colossal buildings, temples and monuments indicate that at one time there was considerable advancement in civilization among the inhabitants of the West. In the State of Ohio there are indications of a distinct race of mound-builders whose secret history is hid in the ruins of the past. But where are these people now? Of this country it may be almost truthfully said:

There canst not find one lonely spot

Upon this land below,

Where buildings did not stand and rot,

Of people lived to sow.

The oft repeated waves of time have swept them into oblivion, and naught remains to tell the history of the past save here and there a monument from the hands of industry.

The land has now been repopled by a race that, in the point of intelligence and industry, stands in the front ranks of the world. Our land is the home of the free, where we can live and worship God according to the dictates of our conscience, and none dare harm or molest us. If there is anything in this life for which we ought to thank God, it is the land of the free, whose persecution is unknown, and yet how few there are who fully realize and appreciate the liberties we enjoy.

The struggle for independence was long and hard, resulting in the shedding of much warm, heart blood that ought have been spared if nations had been taught to learn war no more. The Great Rebellion, too, has cost rivers of blood to eternity as a crimson witness against those who take the sword. Thousands of noble-hearted fathers, husbands, brothers have fallen on the battle-field and by the wayside, leaving a long train of broken-hearted mothers, wives and sisters to struggle along life's uneven pathway. Oh, work of carnage that cruel war has done! May the great Millennial period roll on, and hasten in the era of peace when war shall be known no more.

The surface of society is at peace, though there is some rumbling beneath, and to-day thousands, all over the land, will meet to celebrate the great day of the American Independence, and after it is all over, perhaps none will be the better off. Millions of dollars will be worse than wasted, thousands will reel to and fro under the influence of intoxicating liquors, thousands of dollars will be puff'd into the air, some lives lost, and much property destroyed.

The time was when the Fourth of July was honored by an abundance of religious services. People met in religious assemblies to "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" for the liberties they enjoyed, but now it is anything else but religion in the generality of celebrations. This is the reason the Brethren, as a body, have so strongly opposed our people attending such gatherings; not because there is anything wrong in celebrating the day, provided it is done as becometh a nation of people professing godliness, but because it has been so disgracefully and shamefully abused. The day should be noted for the simplicity and solemnity of whatever might be thought appropriate to the occasion. Instead of our people attending these celebrations, the way they are now held, and taking part in some of the unbecoming performances, they would better have religious services and devote the day to praising God for the liberties we enjoy. THE TRINITY IN BAPTISM.

THE following query and answer is clipped from The Christian, a Campbellite paper published at St. Louis, Mo. It will be some assistance to those who frequently meet the Campbellites in debate, for some of them, when hard pushed on the meaning of the commission, will deny the necessity of using the three names in connection with baptism. The answer is from the pen of one of the editors of that paper, and is to the point:

"I want you to prove that people should be baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, if it can be proven by the Bible, and if you can disprove that persons should be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus alone, I would like for you to do so. There is some division in the church about it. Your Bro. in Christ, D. M. COTTON."

The confusion on this subject arises from a lack of discrimination, in the Common Version, in the rendering of Greek prepositions. In his commission to the Apostles, Jesus said: "Go teach all nations, baptizing them into (eis) the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." This preposition expresses transition, and change of relationship to Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

Peter commanded the Pentecostans to "Repent and be baptized upon (epi) the name of Jesus Christ." This preposition indicates the ground and source of these commands, which, as seen in the commission, is Jesus Christ. It looks not to the end of the command, but to the source,—the end or design being indicated in the clause following.

In the account of Peter's visit to the household of Cornelius, it is said he commanded them to be baptized in (en) the name of the Lord Jesus; that is, by the authority of Christ. They were however, no doubt, baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.

Again, persons are said to be baptized into (eis) Christ, (Rom. 6: 3; Gal. 3: 27), because baptized by his authority, and yielding obedience to him they come into his government, and into the benefits of his death.

It is proper, then, to be baptized by the authority of Christ, into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and being the persons thus baptized into Christ.

The objection indicated in an accompanying note, that this Commission was given before the formal establishment of the kingdom, is entirely without force, as it was given in direct view of the establishment of the church, and is the only authority we have for preaching and baptizing.

The Pre-Baptist idea of an "invisible church" composed of visible men and women is visible ecclesiastical nonsense.—D. R. Boye.

QUERIST'S DEPARTMENT.

Questions touching the meaning of Scripture, relating to History and practical subjects of religious interest will come in place. The querist's name must accompany all communications. We shall labor to avoid giving any just occasion for strife and contention over unimportant questions.

(1.) Did John use a form of words when he baptized Jesus? In whose name was Christ baptized? (2.) Again, when the devil took Jesus up on the mountain, and showed Him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, had he the power to give these things to Jesus?

H. TAUBELM.

1. We think he did. The Bible is silent respecting the formula used by John, but it is most reasonable to conclude that he used the same formula that was afterwards given to the disciples. John baptized vast numbers who were recognized as full members of the church without re-baptism, and certainly there would be no use of two formulas for the one body. We know what the form of words was as commanded by Christ, and can certainly infer from it, that John used the same, since both received the command from the same source. Some people are puzzled to know how Christ could have consistently been baptized into His own name. We find that God swore by His own name when none greater could be found, and why not Christ have been baptized in His own name? The method of baptizing we conclude to have been the same, and the forms of words identical.

2. It was in Satan's power to give the Savior that which he promised—the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them. The "exceeding high mountain" may have been near the mouth of the river Jordan, from the top of which could be seen the mountains of Arabia, the country of Gilead, the country of the Amorites, the plains of Moab, the plains of Jericho, the river Jordan, the whole extent of the Dead Sea, and also much of the land of Palestine, which at that time was divided into three parts, and reigned over by three kings. As the term world is sometimes used in a limited sense, referring to Canaan (Rom. 4: 13), or Judea (Luke 2: 1) only, Barnes has been led to suppose that Satan knew that Jesus was the king of the Jews, and being poor and without friends or arms would readily accept help in reaching the position for which He was destined, hence he made Him the offer that if He would bill down and worship him He should receive for His services, the land of Palestine, the surroundings and the glory of them. Others think the whole world should be taken in its extended sense, and that Satan, in an instant, portrayed to Christ the glory of them and then made the offer he did. Both are reasonable, though the former is more easily comprehended.

DANISH MISSION FUNDS.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

WE, the undersigned, having been appointed a committee to forward contributions for Danish Mission, present the following, showing amount of receipts and expenditures, and condition of the Mission so far as relates to our work or care:

|-----------------------------|-----------|
| Receipts to May 21st, 1877. | $3353.03 |
| Expenditures " " " | 3344.10 |
| Balance on 11th " | 11.93 |

Of the receipts, Northern Illinois contributed $1329. Of the amount expended, the brethren sent to organize a church in Denmark, used $1569, and brother Hope $775.10. The amount used by brother Hope includes preparatory expenses before leaving America, and the fare from Danmark, Ill., to his former home in Denmark, and the cost of household furniture forms a part of the expenses. Seeing all these things, as well as the expenses of going from place to place to fill the calls for preaching, we find that the amount expended for the actual necessities of our work is not very large. Brother Hope has sent us an itemized account of expenditures, which is open for examination to any who may be interested.

The amount estimated for this year's work is $2800. Some of this will be required to pay for a room in Hjørring in which to hold meetings.

Brother Eby and Fry informed us that so far as they were able to ascertain, the money sent for missionary work in Denmark had been judiciously applied, and that any one seeing the love, zeal, and piety of the Danish brethren and sisters, could not fail to conclude that the Lord had blessed the labors of the brethren, both in America and in Denmark.

TRINE VS. SINGLE IMMERSION.

BY E. UNBAUGH.

Review of a Reply to an Epistle to the Members of the Christian Church at Dohertytown, Ind.

THIS reply, to my article in the BRETHREN AT WORK, of Nov. 15th, 1877, was delivered at Eel River church, on Sunday, June 16th 1878. The speaker made an entire failure—failed to point out any date for backward baptism. He did not attempt to deny the fact that backward baptism originated during the early part of the sixteenth century. There were two other speakers present, both of whom spoke at the same place on the evening of the same day.

The discourse of one of these speakers was a reply to a sermon delivered by brother S. Z. Sharp at the Brethren's church, which is only a short distance from Eel River church. The only argument brought forward in favor of backward baptism, was that Christ could not bow backward on account of the cross. I suppose the speaker thought Paul made a mistake! What a pity he did not live in that early age, for then he could have told Paul not to teach that baptism is the likeness of Christ's death!

In his reply to brother Sharp, the speaker said that they wanted no historical evidence in favor of trine immersion. They did not object to history while using it themselves for the purpose of condemning sprinkling and pouring, but they want nothing but the Bible in favor of trine immersion. Well, to the Bible we will go, for it is the only work in existence in which the least hint of the origin of trine immersion is recorded. Sprinkling, pouring and backward baptism have their origin recorded in history, but history fails to point out a date for trine immersion; hence we can find no other date than that given in the New Testament, for the origin of trine immersion. History has recorded the origin of all the modes of baptism except trine immersion, hence if it is not recorded in the Bible it has no origin. Can it be without origin? Will our friends accept this Bible evidence, and abandon every mode of baptism which has originated with men? Will they refuse to accept that mode of baptism which is without human origin, and depend upon that which has been invented by men? Would this be giving God the glory?

The speaker who replied to brother Sharp's sermon said, "If I dip a candidate in the name of the Father, is that not one baptism? If I dip him again, in the name of the Son, is not that another baptism? If I dip him again, in the name of the Holy Ghost, is not that a third baptism?" No, these three actions constitute one baptism. When we arise in the morning, can it be said that we have washed ourselves as many times as we have dipped our hands in the water? No. These repeated actions constitute one washing. Our friends say, the commission in Matt. 28: 19, does not teach three actions. Here is a sentence similar to that of the commission: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, instructing them in the branch of Arithmetic, and of Grammar, and of Geography." Will our friends undertake to instruct in these three branches by one action? If they do, it will be just as imperfectly done as the work of baptizing in three names by one action.

THINE HOUSE

BY MARY C. MILLER.

What have they seen in thine house?

WHEN Hozekiah was asked by the prophet, "What the men from Babylon had seen in his house," he said, "All that is in my house." I have shown them all my treasures which I have in my house." God was displeased with what the king had done, and sent the prophet to say to him, that all his treasures, with his sons, should be carried to Babylon.

Christian, what do the men from Babylon see in your house? Earthly treasures? Gold, silver, jewels, and costly array? If so, fear and tremble, for Christ says, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." If those be your most precious treasures, do not wonder if your children are carried far away into Babylon, and yourselves become unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

But what have they seen in your house? Carefulness about many things, and the one thing needful unmentioned and forgotten? Do you show them that you are concerned about the things of this life, that they are first and foremost in your minds? Then you dishonor your holy religion. You dishonor Christ. Your light is surely hid. Beware, lest you be carried far away into Babylon. But what do they see in your house? Do they see conformity to the world, or to Christ? Do they see you striving to clothe the minds of your little ones, bringing "them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord?" or do they see you putting much time and thought in their outward adornment? Which treasure is the precious one? Which the most cared for, the most thought of? Do they see you leading them onward and upward, or do they see you teaching them the ways of pride and folly? Do they see you toiling, day after day, in the "putting on of apparel" while the Bible lies on the shelf unthought of, and unneared for, gathering dust for a testimony against you? Do they see these things? If so, beware! Do they see you spending your money for things that are worse than useless, money used extravagantly, while you see the missionary cause, and many other good causes neglected?

But what do they see in your house? Do they see love and peace reigning there? Do they see you engaged in prayer and thanksgiving? Do your prayers ascend like smoke from a well-fed fire? Can it be that clothing and feasting would be more thought of in the house of a Christian than prayer and praise? No, it ought not. We cannot serve two masters. "Therefore, I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink, nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on; for after all these things do the Gentiles seek. For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matt. 6: 25, 32, 33).

But what have they seen in your house? Have they seen you trying to escape the corruption that is in this world? Have they seen you diligently adding "to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity?" If they have seen all this, if you are diligent in these things, fear not, for you have the promise that you shall never fall.

IN UNION THERE IS STRENGTH.

BY LITTLE LESLIE.

"BEHOLD, how good, and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" While many of us were so richly enjoying the closing portion of our last Annual Conference, my mind was very forcibly impressed with the above beautiful passage. How good, how very pleasant it seemed, when we all as one common family—"the children of God by faith"—could associate together, all maintaining the same principles, all sharing the same enjoyments, and all influenced, we trust, by the same motive, the promotion of the cause of Christ. As many anticipated the reverse, we feel very grateful to our Heavenly Parent, that though "we cannot all see alike as men, we can all love alike as Christians," and that this principle was so commendably carried out by our official brethren, in nearly all their deliberations. I think we fully realized that if there is enjoyment on earth, it is among "brethren who dwell together in unity." This "union of spirit" not only tends to augment the happiness of its possessors, but to give strength and stability to the Christian cause, but it recommends the divine truth to all ground, and will advance the cause of our dear Redeemer.

Jesus, when about to leave His disciples, prayed to His Father, "That they may all be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me" (John 17: 21). For what He had so dearly paid, He fervently prayed; no did He pray in vain; for the primitive Christians seemed to realize that peace, love, and unity for which He prayed. (Acts 4: 32). And if the professed followers of Christ, in our day, would but attend to the same truth, and the same example that they did, they would possess the same spirit. As Christ is one in and with His Father, so He prays that all His members may be joined in one body, to Himself, as their head (Eph. 1: 22, 23). Being animated by the same spirit, all who are joined to the Lord become one spirit. (1 Cor. 6: 17).

When all of God's children can thus be united, and become one spirit in Christ, then can be accomplished that for which the Savior prayed, "that the world may believe that thou hast sent me;" for if we wish "the world to believe" that Christianity is of divine origin, we must live like Christians; we must let its benign influences be felt in all our dealings with it; for "He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also so to walk, even as he has walked" (1 John 2: 6).

Since our meetings I have thought that if we can so highly appreciate our associations together here, where we cannot expect to realize a full sense of the enjoyments God has in reservation for His children, O, what a happy, what a glorious meeting that will be, when we can meet without any fears of uncharitable words and thoughts, of debate and contention; but where we can realize in its deepest sense, "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" When this happy period will arrive, that all men will be united in peace and love, we cannot tell; but the word of inspiration assures us that it will come. "Watch therefore and be ye ready."

"O, what a lonely path were ours,

Could we, O Father, see
No home of rest beyond it all,
No guide or help in Thee!"

BREVITIES.

—ONE more has been baptized into the little church in Denmark. By this our readers can see that the work is progressing.

—Two weeks ago the Brethren organized a Sunday-school at Dutchtown, ten miles South of Danmark. Prospects good.

—A Mr. Payer, of Wilcox Co., Ga., is said to have revived after being for six hours supposed to be dead, and conversed in his grave clothes with his family and then permanently expired.

—In Bro. John Forney's account of the District meeting, the name of George Whitmer as Moderator of the meeting was unintentionally omitted. How it came we cannot now tell. It was not done on purpose.

—Bro. Allen Boyer reports a good feast at the Waddam's Grove church. Four were baptized. Attendance large.

—Will Irene Davis please send us her post office address? We cannot forward Children at Work until we have address in full.

—Two were baptized during the love-feast at Manor, Indiana Co., Pa., and three others expected soon.

—Price of the BRETHREN AT WORK to the end of the year, 75 cents. Do not send silver in letters, but we can make use of all the postage stamps you may wish to send us, though do not send over $1.50 worth in one letter. We would just as soon have 75 cents worth of three cent stamps as the money to pay for the paper from now to the end of the year.

—Bro. Emanuel Newcomer, who has returned from a trip in the Wisconsin mission field, reports good meetings with the Brethren and people in that locality.

—Persons who receive the BRETHREN AT WORK yet never subscribed for it, may rest assured that their paper has been paid for by some friend; and if they will look at the right of their name either on the paper or wrapper, as the case may be, they will observe when the subscription expires. We aim to do a strictly honest business, hence never send the paper to any one against his will with the expectation of sending bill for collection. If you did not order the paper sent, somebody else did and paid for it.

—Some parties, with the best of motives no doubt, write letters to their friends and send them to us for publication. We suggest that they always send their letters to the parties for whom they are intended and not to us. We do not publish matter of that kind unless it is of general interest.

—The letter from Bro. Hope addressed to Amasa Lord is for The Infanter, of which friend Lord is editor. He is fearless in defending Gospel peace principles, and his paper should have a wide circulation among all advocates of peace. The paper is published at Elgin, Ill.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

SINCE the busy season has commenced how appropriate are the following touching lines. We are glad to know that is not true of all farmer's wives, but with many it is only too true. Husbands, read this, and then do what you can to make your wife happy:

Up with the birds in the early morning;
The dew-drop glows like a precious gem;
Beautiful tints in the skies are dawning,
But she's never a moment to look at them.
The men are wanting their breakfast early;
She must not linger, she must not wait;
For words that are sharp and looks that are surly
Are what men give when meals are late.

Oh, glorious colors the clouds are turning,
If she would but look over the hills and trees;
But here are the dishes, and here is the churning;
Those things must always yield to these.
The world is filled with the wine of beauty,
If she could but pause and drink it in;
But pleasure, she says, must wait for duty;
Neglected work is committed sin.

The day grows hot and her head grows weary;
Oh, for an hour to cool her head,
Out with the birds in the wind so cheery!
But she must get dinner and bake the bread.
The busy men in the hayfield working,
If they saw her sitting with idle hand,
Would think her lazy and call it shirking,
And she never could make them understand.

They do not know that the heart within her
Hungers for beauty and things sublime;
They only know they want their dinner,
Plenty of it, and just "on time."
And after the sweeping and churning and laking,
And dinner dishes are all put by,
She sits and sews, though her head is aching,
Till time for supper and "chores" draws nigh.

Her legs at school must look like others,
She says, as she patches their frock and hose;
For the world is quick to censure mothers
For the least neglect of children's clothes.
Her husband comes from the field of labor;
He gives no praise to his weary wife;
She's done no more than does her neighbor;
'Tis the lot of all in country life.

But after the strife and weary tussle
With life is done, and she lies at rest,
The nation's brain and heart and muscle,
Her sons and daughters, shall call her blest.
And I think the sweetest joys of heaven,
The rarest bliss of eternal life,
And the fairest crown of all will be given
Unto the weary-worn farmer's wife.

LOVE.

BY GEORGE WILSON.

THE subject of love is spoken of throughout the Scriptures and highly recommended to the people of God. It is a principle having the nature of drawing together, while its opposite, which is hatred, is calculated to divide or separate. It is written, that "God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." Again, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me;" showing us that the love of God was so great toward us, that he was willing to sacrifice His Son to bring about redemption and satisfy the difficulty that existed between us and God through the transgression of our first parents. Not willing to leave us in that separated condition, He, out of love toward us, came from heaven, brought the means of salvation and tendered it to us. The apostle John says, "Behold, what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God" (John 3: 1). When we were not worthy of the respect and love of God, this was done,—purely disinterested love from God to us. "Behold, now are we the sons of God by redemption, and should we all not be sons and daughters of God by adoption?" Such a loving God, such a kind Father in heaven, with love beaming upon us in our pathway, in our closet, and wherever we look we see the love of God shed abroad.

Natural love is developed in some larger than in others. Methinks John the Evangelist had love largely developed in his nature, for his writings are interspersed with the subject more than any other of the inspired writers, and we are taught that, Jesus loved him, he sat near Him at the great Supper and leaned on His breast and said, "Who is it that shall betray thee?" He loved Jesus, there is no doubt. Do you, kind reader? If so, show it by the way Jesus says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." This is the token by which we prove to the world, that we love Jesus, and if we love

Him, we will also take the advice Jesus gave: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another" (John 13: 34, 35). If we say we love God and hate our brother, we are denominated liars, and the truth is not in us.

Our love must go out toward the poor sinner. O, think of the poor sinner who is groping in the darkness of this world, grasping at the fancy bubbles that burst and float away from him, who is promenading just on the brink of eternal ruin, unconscious of the danger; perhaps one step more will land him in hell, while we are looking on and not making the proper effort, not making the sacrifice we should to reach him. Perhaps our life has not been as consistent as it should be so he could see plainly that there was reality in the religion of Jesus Christ.

Love is a God-given principle and never had its opposite until after the fall of man. The first exaltation is seen in Cain taking the life of his brother. Since that time a great deal of that disposition is manifest in man, but thanks be to God, it can be overcome by the blood of Christ. Love should beam in every family. It should commence at the head of the family and extend to the children, and the principle thereof acted out in every department of life at home, that the world can see that love reigns supreme in every Christian family; and from that an influence will go far towards bringing the poor, benighted sinner into the fold of Christ, making him rejoice in the hope of his salvation. Dear brother, make the sinner know that you love him, not by taking the advantage of him in a bargain, nor by turning a cold shoulder to him as though you, Pharisee-like, were better than he; not by withholding from him the necessities of life when you see he needs them and you have them to spare, but by real acts of love, knowing that God did create, "from one blood all nations of men to dwell upon the face of all the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he be not far from every one of us" (Acts 17: 26, 27).

Love not the world, neither the things of the world, for if we do, the love of the Father is not in us; and the world will pass away with all its fancies and fondery. Let us seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness and make use of as much of the world as is necessary and not abuse our privileges, nor overstep our bounds, and after we have lived out our time we will pass from the stage of action—from one sphere to another, and as love is developed in us here, we will love on to all eternity. Faith, Hope, and Love are three great principles, but the greatest of them is love, because faith will cease and hope will cease when we have realized what we believed and what we hoped for, but love only will continue on, and on, and on; but unless we heed the principle in this life, we will have nothing to love in the future world, but like the rich man, we will be praying and not even be gratified, because we have not heeded Moses and the prophets, or Jesus and the apostles. Heaven is concerned for us, God is concerned for us, the preacher is concerned for us, the church is concerned for us, and why are we so unconcerned for ourselves, as though there was no heaven to obtain, or no hell to shun. Be sure the promises of God are yea and Amen.

THE TWO GATES.

BY E. M. COVERT.

GOD has placed before the world two gates, one leading to heaven, and the other to destruction. But oh, how many of the human race, even in this enlightened age, delay entering the gate that opens onto the narrow way until it is forever too late.

One would think that an object of so vast importance would be the first and only desirable object to labor for in this short and uncertain life, for hath not God said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you?" Those who enter in at the gate in early life, find the path a pleasant one, and a way of much joy; but how different it is with those who defer entering till later in life, and falsely say to their troubled minds, "There is plenty of time yet," and no doubt feel thankful in heart for another opportunity that they may have a hope of heaven, and yet gain access to the life beyond.

But oh, how very, very often the latterer is brought to an untimely end—an end never before thought of seriously, and, if accidentally thought of, the thought was hurried out of the mind as quickly as possible. Oh! heedless wanderer on life's narrow and uncertain path, pause a moment and count the cost of the journey you are pursuing, if you do not speedily reform your steps, and enter in at the strait gate; and in turn, count the joys of those who walk in the path of the righteous, not only in this world (for they are indeed supreme even in this world), but think of the joy of a never ending eternity of which you have not the promise if you go on in your present course. You may think that you and your comrades are perfectly safe in the course you are pursuing, and in a measure you may be so far as this world's frail protection goes, but pause and meditate on the consequence of such a course when you come to answer before Him in whom "we live, move, and have our being." You will then be found wanting; the scales will turn against you, and you will hear that just but terrible decree, "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity, for I never knew you." But oh, how widely different with the good and faithful of all ages, who have not hid their light under a bushel, but have been diligent and self-denying in the cause of our Master! To them it will be said by the blessed Redeemer, "Enter into my kingdom, ye blessed of my Father." That we may all live a life of usefulness, as well as service to our blessed Master, and finally enter in through the gates into the city, is my prayer.

DOMINION OF SIN.

BY PETER DEARDORFF.

IN order to know that sin holds dominion in the earth, it is not necessary to go back about 6,000 years, to the fall of man, and show that through his fall, all mankind have become affected; nor is it important that we become largely theoretical on the subject. But we have only to open our eyes and look around. We see that through the voice of a few leading persons in the kingdoms of the world, almost countless multitudes of men enlist forth to the field of blood and carnage, and all for what? Why to kill and be killed, and go down! down, we fear, to a hopeless perdition with all the nations that forget God, while on the other hand, men and angels may plead and cry from day to day, from year to year, and century to century, to only come and partake "of the waters of life and live forever," and barely few (proportionally speaking), will accept the proffered mercy. And alas! what is still worse, many of those who come and profess themselves to be the servants of Jesus, by actions, show themselves to be of such characters as the apostle spoke to when he said: "I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity." They toil, strive and grasp after earthly goods as if they supposed great earthly gain was godliness. No wonder Jesus said, "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth to life, and few there be that find it."

A CHRISTIAN MARTYR.

BY MELIA GRIBBE.

AS it is appointed unto all men to die, it is to us of great importance to know how we may die well. Thus we can only learn at the foot of the Cross, and it greatly strengthens our faith to see those who have been there, passing away from earth, peaceful as the going down of a Summer's sun.

There is no record in the Bible, of a death that comes so near resembling the death of our Lord, as that of Stephen. Of course, there is no death really like that of Jesus. His life and death stand alone without a parallel. For even an infidel had to say, "Socrates died like a philosopher, but Jesus Christ like a God." Only a short time after Jesus died, Stephen, not very far from the same spot, was called to lay down his life for the truth. Both in his life and with his lips he bore testimony to the truth, and then sealed it with his blood. He was the first of the Christian church who fell by the bloody hand of persecution, and thus had the honor of leading the van of that noble army of martyrs who are enrolled for heaven. Stephen was one of the seven set apart at Jerusalem. These were to be men of honest report, and full of the Holy Spirit, and with this description this good man fully agreed.

At that time the church was in a prosperous condition. Stephen stood in the front of the battle, dealing sturdy and vigorous blows to Satan's kingdom, and soon became the object of hatred and persecution. We are told that full of faith and power he did great wonders and miracles among the people. The enemies of God and truth felt that this must not be allowed, and that something must be done to silence so able a preacher. Vile wretches were hired to utter false accusations, and Stephen was dragged to the great council of Sanhedrin that a show of justice might be made. And all that sat in council looking steadfastly on him, saw his face, as it had been the face of an angel. Stephen's hearers were filled with rage against their best friend, because he told them the truth. Does he look to the council for mercy and protection? or does he look around the hall for some mode of escape? No! nothing of that kind. He looked steadfastly up to heaven and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. Man, by nature, hates his enemies and seeks to return blow for blow to the very last hour of his life, but Stephen's words were, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." In our Lord's dying moment, He prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." And now here is one of His servants dying with the same spirit of forgiving love upon his lips. The dying saint uttered one more prayer on this sad occasion, feeling that his work was done, he cried, "Lord Jesus receive my spirit." Stephen paid the same homage to the Redeemer in his last moments, which Jesus did to His Father when He was departing from earth.

Stephen's death, then, was a very noble one, notwithstanding the violence that attended it. Devout men carried him to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. It is when we have buried our friends that we begin to feel the greatness of our loss. While the body is yet with us and we can go to the room where it lies and gaze on the familiar features, it is really hard to realize that the dear one is really gone, but when we have taken the last look, and imprinted the last kiss on the brow of the dead, when the coffin is lowered in the grave and we go back to our lonely, desolate home, and see the vacant chair, the empty bed, the books the loved one used to read, and many little things tell us that the object of our affection has really gone to return no more; then comes upon us the bitterest hour of our bereavement. Myriads of martyrs have died a painful death rather than deny Christ.

THE FATAL CUP.

IT was a bridal scene. The wine-cup passed from lip to lip. One gentleman refused, "Can't you pledge friendship in a social glass?" pleaded the bridegroom. "I dare not; I cannot."

Then the beautiful bride, with bewitching smiles, and eyes that were brighter than the jewels on her fingers, held out the poison to him, saying, "Surely, you will not refuse me?"

The color mounted his cheek; he fidgeted; he yielded to the Ceres of the banquet. The first taste fired his lust, and he ceased not till he was a sot again.

A few years after, one quiet Summer's evening, a wretched outcast reeled into the open door of a pleasant home, when a lady was just drinking a glass of wine, allowing her little one to sip. The vagabond sprang forward with a maniac's frenzy, raised his arm, dashed the cup to the floor, and shouted, "Murder him, if you like, but not with that! Look at me. You made me what I am. I was respected and honored. You tempted me at your wedding. Now there is not a reptile that I would not gladly change places with. I must soon stand before God's bar. On your head rests my blood!" A gurgling sound was heard in his throat. He fell at her feet a corpse. He sleeps in a nameless grave, the victim of cruel, though thoughtless seduction.

The above, which we take from Professor Twing's new "Handbook of Illustrations," is a telling incident, and should lead every one to beware how they tempt their weaker neighbor. Above all, let no woman use her wit, her beauty, or her social position, to snare the feet of her associates, but rather use her winning grace to guide, and guard, and save.

DO EVERYTHING WELL.—If you have something to attend to, go about it coolly and thoughtfully, and do it just as well as you can. Do it as though it were the only thing you had ever to do in your life, and as if everything depended upon it. Then your work will be well done, and it will afford you genuine satisfaction. Often much more does depend upon the manner in which things, seemingly trivial, are performed than one would suppose, or than it is possible to foresee. Do everything well, and you will find it conducive to your happiness, and that of those with whom you come in contact.

WRITE your name in kindness, love and mercy on the hearts of those you come in contact with, and you will never be forgotten.

Sister Miller was much beloved by all. The husband, a deacon, lost a kind companion, the family a good and efficient mother, the church a faithful sister, and the community a good citizen. Peace to her ashes! J. H. MILLAR.

LEREW.—Near Bethany, Osborne Co., Kansas, June 13th, Anna Elizabeth Lerew, daughter of Lewis and Jane Lerew, aged 3 years, 6 months and 26 days. Funeral services by D. O. Brumbaugh and H. W. Landis.

EMIGH.—June 5th, 1878, of Chelona Infantum M. Gerte, daughter of Dr. J. E. and Belle Emigh, aged 1 year and 6 months. She was emersed by all. None knew her but to love her. "She is not dead but sleepeth."

"Lay the soul lightly over her breast, Calm be her slumber, peaceful her rest, Beautiful, lovely; she was but given A fair bud to earth, to blossom in heaven."

CRUPE.—At Edna Mills, Ind., May 22nd, '78, sister Susanna Crupe, consort of Bro. William Crupe, aged 39 years, 9 months and 12 days. She leaves a kind husband and seven children to mourn her loss, but we believe their loss is his eternal gain. Funeral by Bro. George W. HOFESHELL.—Died in Eagle Creek church, Hancock Co., O., on the 11th of June, Mary Ellen Hofeshell, aged 19 years, 5 months and 9 days. The subject of this notice had not connected herself with any church, although she had, at different times during the past year, expressed a desire to become a Christian. Her reason was much clouded during her brief illness, so much so that she was unable to converse rationally upon any subject. May this prove a warning to others. Funeral conducted by Bro. E. Bosserman. S. F. BOSSERMAN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Mountain Home, Pa.

Dear Brethren:— THROUGH your kindness, Bro. Merrill and I, with many other invalids at this home, are enjoying the great pleasure of reading your paper, which is a source of great comfort to us while away from home. Brethren and friends, when these are lost to our usual daily enjoyment, it adds to make your paper still more enjoyable, and gives us a fore-taste of the feelings of our dear, isolated Brethren, who often express their joy in the privilege of receiving our periodicals, and brings us nearer to them in true sympathy. Many, no doubt, do not value the great worth of your paper, when surrounded by the former privileges, and I for one, am free to express, that I never so much enjoyed it as at this time, when it is read and re-read.

Dr. Walter's mountain home is truly an inviting place for the invalid. We are thrown together here from many States in the Union, West Indies and Canada, all seem to be hopeful of the restoration of health, and are trying to enjoy that rest, so necessary to the weary and worn. This reminds us of another rest, and are invited to, and shall come from the East, West, North and South to enjoy; but very unlike this, as we have our aches, pains and disappointments,—there it shall be a true home, and rest for the faithful who have endured to the end. Hope that our sufferings and afflictions here, will only make us richer there, when we arrive at home.

All the inmates, or nearly so, seem to profess religion, and this brings to us the thought that God loves us, and has placed this affliction upon us to draw us nearer to Him. Hope the Lord may strengthen us, and help us to endure to the end. As it is impossible for us to write a private response to all of our Brethren and friends, who feel an interest in our personal welfare and restoration, we would say, while we have had many cures and medicines prescribed by some eminent physicians and all have failed, we feel at times almost discouraged; while we are led on slowly yet steadily to restoration. — Bro. Merrill is also meeting the full expectations of Dr. Walter, and will, in time, be restored to health again. We trust the Lord will bless our efforts here, and soon enable us to return to our homes. Fraternally, S. C. KEIM.

Dear Brethren:—

ELDER Martin Garber and wife, elder John Brower and wife, myself and wife, took the train at Staunton, Va., on the morning of April 11th. Reached New Hope, Preble Co., Ohio, the next evening at half past five. Visited our friends, brethren and sisters in Preble and Montgomery counties, Ohio, and while there attended twelve meetings. The people paid good attention to the preaching of the Word, and we have been made to rejoice, when we learned that so many of these dear young persons have been adopted into the kingdom, since we left Ohio. Angels are made to rejoice when sinners turn home to Christ.

We spent part of one day at the Soldier's home, near Dayton, Ohio; seen through the inside workings of the home. It is a home for all disabled soldiers; has about four thousand names on roll; five hundred absent on furlough. They sent 1,100 persons to the table of grace; 450 gallons of coffee required for one meal; 1,100 pounds of meat per meal; 720 dozen of eggs for one breakfast; 400 gallons of soup for a supper; 100 loaves of bread per meal; 14 barrels of potatoes and 15 barrels of flour per day. The actual cost of maintenance of each individual is about 21 cents per day. The institution has been in operation about 11 years. Eleven hundred deaths have occurred in that time. Present mortality about 25 per month.

Brethren and sisters Garber and Brower, started from Preble Co., Ohio, to Iowa. On the 25th of April, wife and I started for Paris, Edgar Co., Ill., and on the 4th of May went to Sador, Woodford Co. Attended two meetings at the Panther Creek church, and the 7th took the train for Iowa, reaching Keokuk Co., Ia., on the 8th. Same day found a brother, who very kindly conveyed us five and a half miles out to Bro. Samuel Flory's, and there we overtook our traveling companions, and rejoiced to meet with each other. We visited in Keokuk Co., six days; attended three meetings. On the 14th returned to Keokuk, Woodford Co., Ill. The 16th met with the brethren and sisters at the Panther Creek church at their love-feast meeting. The day being rainy, the multitude was not so large, but we had a very interesting meeting. On the 30th went to the water where baptism was administered.

The 31st, we (all six of our company), took the train East, to Indiana, near place of A. M. Here we visited, and attended meetings at different places until Annual Conference. Great preparations had been made by the members for this meeting. The multitude was large, the weather fine, and upon the whole, the meeting passed off pleasantly, considering the multitude. The feeling among the Brethren seemed to be good.

Reached home at three o'clock on the morning of the 16th of June; found our families all well, for which we have cause to thank the Lord.

Yours in Love,

E. L. BROWER.

Dear Brethren:—

HAVING just returned from a Communion meeting held with the Brethren in Anderson Co., I would say, that my father, S. Hodgden, old Bro. Bennett and myself, attended the same, and had a very pleasant trip. I think we had the most enjoyable feast I ever attended. The members seemed to be alive to their duty. The ministers present were Robert Edgewood, Bro. Baker from Douglas Co., Bro. Flack, S. Hodgden, William Stockmeyer, A. C. Numer and Jesse Studebaker, their elder. The Brethren thought it best to call more help to the ministry, and also to the office of deacon; they gave forth their lots for two ministers and two deacons. The lot fell on James Shaw and Ephraim Studebaker as ministers; Matthias Shilling and Peter Watkins, deacons. I hope they may be the means of doing much good. — Brethren and sisters, we should pray for our ministers, hold them up and encourage them, that they may be the means of bringing back the lost ones to the fold of God. There is a great part on the side of the members, that they attend meeting regularly, and make the meetings lively and interesting. Then it encourages the minister, and he feels that his work is not in vain. But if the members do not go to meeting, nor take any interest in the welfare of the church, everything becomes cold, and the light goes almost out. Brethren and sisters think of this.

There were also five received into the church by baptism, during the meeting, — all young persons. I like to see the young people remember their Creator in the days of their youth. — The more young people in the church, the better; I believe they are the life of the church. — Father Bennett stood the trip well and enjoyed himself; he is getting somewhat in the decline of life, but still sails on the old ship of Zion; — soon his boat will touch the other shore. Dear Brethren:—

ON Bro. and sister Eby's return from Europe they did not forget the dear people of Pennsylvania. One of their points of stopping was at Altoona, Pa. On Wednesday evening, May 1st, I had the good pleasure of hearing him preach there. I had a very anxious desire to see them and hear him preach. Had formed a slight acquaintance with him, while waiting at the depot, en route for A. M. held at Meyersdale, Pa., a few years ago.

But to the subject. The evening was delightful. The little church was filled with anxious listeners. Bro. Eby read the 130th Psalm and spoke from verses 21-24. He portrayed to our minds, the honesty, integrity and uprightness of David. He was a man after God's own heart, and yet how seemingly unlike our blessed Saviour, who was equal with God. Bro. Eby spoke with great effectiveness and power. Should we never hear our brother speak again, let not those precious truths, spoken that night be cast into obivion! Better had we never learned of Christ than to perish at the foot of the Cross, in a land of Gospel liberty like ours. We feel to say that the united congregation might exclaim with Peter of old: "It was good to be there!"

Many thanks and hearty good wishes followed Bro. and sister Eby by the friends of Altoona. Thank God that Bro. and sister Eby, with his wife and sister Fry were living witnesses to the good cause aroused in Denmark, and were permitted to return to their native land again. — How gladly we welcome them back. How anxiously we followed them through their perilous journey across the beny deep, and their mission while there in Denmark, also their journey back again. Had the good pleasure of conversing with them at the depot on Thursday noon, as they were about to depart homeward. My heart was pained to learn of the hardships of the dear people of Denmark, especially the dear brethren and sisters there. May God protect them from all evil. Brother, sister, as the blood-stained banner of King Immanuel waves over Denmark, let us, each and every one, work mightily to build the fortifications stronger, that they may be able to endure the wiles of Satan, and yet bearing all to stand. Plant your money and your efforts, so they may abundantly grow and yield a hundred-fold in this life, and a glorious home in the sweet "Bye and bye."

Your well-wishing Sister,
EMILY R. STIEPLER.

Dear Brethren:—

AS we are oftentimes made to rejoice when we hear of our brethren and sisters walking in the appointed ways of our heavenly Father, and thereby win precious souls to love, and obey our Creator, I think it expedient to write a few sentences in regard to the Truth. The church in Anderson Co., Kansas, held a Love-feast, on the 13th and 14th, inst., and there seemed to be a very general interest manifested by all; and very good order prevailed; no doubt many are looking for a safe landing in eternity. Five souls came into the fold of our Redeemer, in the way which God has before ordained or appointed for us to walk in.

Brethren and sisters, let us watch and pray, looking daily into the perfect law of liberty; and walk as Jesus walked. If we hold out faithful, the crown of life shall be ours. The church saw the need of more laborers in the house of God; so there were four brethren chosen, two to the deacons' office and two for ministers. Bro. E. Miller was advanced into the second degree. May the spirit of our God rest upon these brethren, so they may walk worthy of their calling, and may be the means of many precious souls being brought into the fold of Jesus, is the desire of your brother and well-wisher.

Dear Brethren:—

IT has often been in my mind to write you some lines, but my spare moments are so few, and I am generally so much wore out and tired, that the body is not able to render assistance to the soul. O how would I enjoy to be among and understand the dear brethren and sisters over yonder and take part in the seasons of worship; yet while this hardly ever will be done, I feel to rejoice by what I know of you. To tell you the way the Lord has led me, I lack time. This I can do to better satisfaction at some future time, though I can say, that I have learned the goodness of God, for which I give glory to His holy name.

We thank you out of a full heart, dear brethren and sisters, for all you do for us. It is appreciated and the voice of thanksgiving goes up daily to a throne of grace for your work of love. True, we are but a little band and much despised by the many, but the Lord is our Shepherd, we shall not want. We will try, by the grace of God, to show ourselves worthy of the vocation whereto we have been called.

The last two Sundays I have had the joy of burying two dear souls with Christ; the one an 81 year-old man. He could have no peace, nor stand the idea of dying, before he had obeyed Christ in all things. When he arose from the water, and all the way home, he thanked and praised God. We had a good meeting previous to baptism; but only one sister went along to the water, yet other friends, standing near us, were of good service, and manifested a willingness to help. The old brother was so weak that he was carried to the water in a wagon and had to be lifted from it. May God's blessings rest on him in his remaining days.

We have good hope for the spread of the Gospel, several more stand near the fold. We send you our warmest love, especially to those whom we have seen face to face.

Yours in Christ,
C. E. KRISTENSEN.

Dear Brethren:—

OUR Love-feast was held at Potterville in this Co., on Saturday, June 8th. Brethren Allen Ives and Hiram Fodeley from Burr Oak, Jewell Co., were with us. Had much rain during the time, which made things very unpleasant. —

Had choice for two deacons, the lot falling on our dearly beloved brethren Jacob Getz and Job Kerney. May the Lord help them to be faithful and to be good servants of the church. Since the feast we are harvesting, but rain every day, so that the grain is waiting to be taken care of. At present writing no prospects for clear weather. — Early Winter wheat very good, late winter wheat damaged by frost. I love the paper, and am much edified and strengthened by it. However I have not been getting it very regularly, but will not complain, since I do not know whose fault it is. Hope you may prosper; the Lord bless your labors of love. Yours in Christ,

H. W. LANDIS.

Dear Brethren:—

WE, the Brethren of Winona Co., held our Communion on the first day of June, the time announced. We had a very fair attendance of members of our branch, and also quite a number from adjoining church districts. By reason of the inclemency of the weather, the attendance of outsiders was not very large.

We were well supplied with ministerial forces. The ministering brethren present with us from other parts, were as follows: Paul Wetzel of Grundy Center, Iowa; Joseph Ogg and William Dray of Fibonore Co., Minn; and Sylvester Durand of Le Sueur Co., Minn. Bro. Wetzel came about two weeks in advance of the time of our Love-feast, in order to have some meetings among the Germans, as there is quite a large number of that nationality in our vicinity of country. He first held a few meetings in the neighborhood of Jacob Harshman, an isolated Bro; about twenty miles West of Lewiston. The meetings were held in the church owned by the Evangelical Association, or German Methodists.

Bro. Wetzel next came among the Brethren in the vicinity of Lewiston, a village of about four hundred inhabitants, largely Germans. The Brethren, anxious to have Bro. Wetzel preach to them, there being no meeting-house or church in the place in which to hold meetings, we finally concluded to try and get the hall in the Lewiston Hotel, and succeeded. The hall was arranged for the purpose of preaching the Gospel, instead of dancing. Temporary seats were provided by common boards being placed on beer kegs, of which twenty-one were used on the occasion. We had five meetings in this place, and, thanks be to God, that some good was accomplished.

I will say to the many readers of your worthy paper, that the brethren and sisters of the Winona church are still trying, by the help of God to live a devoted life; serve in the vineyard of the Lord with the ability that He giveth us. Our late Communion has strengthened us, and we hope to make considerable advancement in the divine life. May our course be onward and upward, so that at last, we may all be gathered home to our eternal reward. Within the last year, ending on the first day of June, we received into the church by baptism, nine, by letter, three; in all twelve.

C. F. WILK.

Religious Intolerance in Denmark.

To Mr. Amos Lord:—

I WROTE a letter lately to my brother-in-law, who learns war in Aalborg and enclosed it in one of my peace envelopes, and sent it to him. He wrote me as follows:—

"Your letter received, and I thank you for it. I have read it with joy; yet it has caused me some trouble, and I do not know whether or not I have acted right. You can judge for yourself by the following. Your letter has been and is being severely criticised a great deal by the officers in the army, because of what is printed on the envelope. Your letter is dated April 29th and was received May 6th. Now you know all letters are sent to us through the hand of an officer. When letters were handed out May 6th, I was called forward to three of our higher officers who commenced to speak very roughly to me, and demanded information about you and your occupation. Of course I could only tell them you were sent here as a missionary of the Brethren in America. At last they demanded I should give them the envelope. Here I was in a strait and hardly knew what to do. I knew I had a right to deny them the letter, yet was aware it would cause me much trouble afterwards. And I did hand it to him, but probably I had better not do so. But I thought if they would call you before the tribunal, they would do so anyhow, and what harm can they do you, for what the envelope contained? I trust you can answer for what you wrote. I do not know what they will do, but hope all will come right.

Now I must note some things, by which, if you avoid them, you can save much trouble. What the officers wanted me to write to you, is this. — That you should, in the future, use no more such envelopes when you write to me here. They do not wish to see such a thing any more. You must do however as you deem proper.

To that translation from Samuel J. May, I have nothing to say, except that it is true, yes, every word of it. I know well enough that the life of a soldier is the most cruel and fearful profession to be imagined. It is in every respect to be educated to kill and destroy our fellow-men. — And the soldier is in many respects not treated as a human being, but often treated worse than a brute. A man in Denmark can be punished for maltreating his animals, but the officers can treat a soldier as bad as they please, without punishment. Still the soldier is created in the image of the Lord as well as the officer. We may safely say, a soldier is outside the law; though subject to the meanest treatment by the officer, he has no rights himself. No, the officer will tell him: "I will teach you to forget God, but never me."

So I never have one happy hour while in this profession, and yet I learn as easy as all the rest, but it is the love for vain glory, that makes it go smooth. But my dear friend, it is not only the life of a soldier, that makes every honest man loath it. I do not know of any similitude to exactly express my idea, but might liken it to hell. I do not conceive of any more suitable name. Could you see us, drawn up in battle array, you would hear a great deal of swearing and blaspheming, and of such a nature to make any honest man tremble. All of our officers are in reality quite satanic, though they are reported as some of the best.

Now you see that it is not with joy that I stay here, but as a Dane I am compelled to heed its laws, yet I know you will say: "Decline and fall back on the law of the Most High." Well, but what will be the result? To do so I have a good desire, but to do it and to defend it, I lack courage and wisdom.

REMARKS.

So it is with hundreds of honest young men. — May God pity our country. We do all we can to enlighten them. Over 100,000 octavo pages, printed in tract form are spread here. Five thousand copies of our peace envelopes have been distributed, and many sermons preached on the sinfulness of war. A small church is organized, adhering to the peace cause and we have many friends in the land, yet most all are poor, and unable to help the cause along.

After two years of hard work, we have good hopes for poor Denmark. It is hard to get the people to work in union here, very hard, if we cannot all see alike. People will withdraw and pull down, rather than build up, and all dissenters from the State church, even those who claim to be the children of peace, fight one another. — Now it always was my idea of peace that we should not only put the sword in its place, but bridle our tongue and not use it as a poisoned dart. But so it is. Christendom is rent and split, and all that, because carnality is in the inside as well as outside.

I receive your paper regularly, and feel to encourage you in your work. You speak in plain and unmistakable language, and you do well, for the promise is all on your side. All you work for shall finally bless deluded humanity. Will you accept my good wishes and heartfelt thanks for your kindness towards me?

I received a letter from France some time ago, from the friends of peace, and answered; but have not heard from them since. They said, they worked on one plan to get all the peace people united on a good working basis. That was too good an idea to be lost, but since we have heard nothing about it.

Our country has changed considerably in the last eight years. Then we could hardly speak of peace, without immediate punishment for it. Now we hardly meet opposition among the common people, but many have a weakness, like that soldier, so that they dare not act out their principles.

Your- in Christ,
C. HOPE.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

The symptoms of a general Indian war on the frontier are unmistakable. Army officers are apprehensive, and all the tribes seem to be in a state of ferment. Serious difficulties in some localities have already made their appearance.

Perhaps the most significant event of the past week, in this country, is the election in California, where the Communists, under the lead of one Kearney, have carried the city of San Francisco, and have gone far towards carrying the State.

The schooner Euthen sailed June 19th, in search of relics of Sir John Franklin. It will be absent probably two years or more.

The Congress at Berlin has arranged terms of peace, which, no doubt, will be accepted by Russia and Turkey.

A sugar beet factory is to be started in Healdsburg, Cal. It is proposed to erect works with a capacity of about 40 tons of sugar per diem, which will require the planting of over 500 acres in beets.

No farmer can afford to sell wood ashes for any price that the soap-boiler would pay. Where oats lodge, as they are apt to do upon heavily manured land, an application of ashes would save the crop.

A little green bug is destroying the blue grass in Kentucky. Great fields are said to be ravaged by it, the grass looking as if it had suffered a protracted drouth.

Two tramps attacked a woman in Tazwell Co., Va. With an ax she killed one and cut off the arm of the other, though not until after she was fatally stabbed. She died in two hours.

The Baptist Weekly, has compiled the following table of statistics, showing the indebtedness of several of the great missionary organizations of the country so far as reported:

| | |
|---|-----------|
| American Baptist Missionary Union, | $ 26,000 |
| Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, | 60,000 |
| Reformed Foreign Missions, | 28,000 |
| Methodist Missionary Society, | 170,000 |

The Methodists include both their home and foreign work in one organization. Probably the other denominations also show a large indebtedness for foreign work.

W. Mark Williams, a native of Butler Co., O., a graduate of Miami University and Lane Seminary, for twelve years a missionary at Kalgan, Northern China, writes under date of January 17th, 1878. After giving interesting details of missionary work, its difficulties and success, he adds: There is a vast population here, and very little employment. For two years there has been a famine, and millions have perished. Food is very high and silver very low. The government of China has given a million dollars. I saw food made of leaves, bark and chuff, eaten by the poor. These suffering people, in their extremities do not excite pity, as was the case in the United States last Summer, but starve. If famine would turn them from idolatry and opium to Christianity, it would be well.

THEY THAT HEAR SHALL LIVE.

FAREWELL my gay companions,
With you I cannot go;
I've set out on my journey,
My home is not below.

My home is high up yonder,
And there my journey ends,
Join with me in my travels,
For there you'll meet your friends.

Friends that have long departed,
And could they us address,
They'd tell the wondrous story,
Which life cannot express.

The sinner knows no pleasure,
Compared with heavenly bliss;
The Christian does his duty,
And this is happiness.

My young and gay companions,
Who live in mirth and sin,
Remember your great duty
List to that voice within.

If you refuse its warnings
Until it is too late,
I pity you, poor sinner,
For sad will be your fate.

I should be lost as sadly,
Should I not mend my ways,
And render to Him gladly,
God's everlasting praise.

My Savior called me early,
And partly I obeyed;
But now I see my danger
And wonder where I stayed.

Jesus I humbly pray thee,
That Thou wouldst dwell within,
To sanctify my nature,
And set me free from sin.

Be this my greatest pleasure,
Thy holy will to keep;
Then, dying on thy bosom
I'll rest, and sweetly sleep.

THE MISSION OF POVERTY.

BY C. H. BALSRAUGH.

"BLESSED are ye poor." "God hath chosen the poor of this world." "I was a hungered, thirsty, a stranger, naked, sick." Who believes this a descriptive of the Lord of Glory? Who glories in the blessedness of poverty? Who sees incarnate Deity and the Judge of all the earth in the poor saints? O for the eyes of the Divine Oculist to heal our Laodæan ophthalmia. What an intolerable security poverty is to many of us. How glad we are if the poor suffer on in silence, and keep their fingers out of our pocket-books. How thankless, or with what cold formality, we sit to our equine tables, while our fellow-members, with grateful hearts and tearful eyes, subsist on mush and milk. To pamper self and neglect the poor is not the religion of Jesus Christ. To "fare sumptuously every day," while some pattered, scabby, ulcerous Lazarus lies at the door, is the quintessence of selfishness.

The great marvel of the world's history is that God in Christ became poor. A great want was here met, and a glorious example given. The words, "Ye know," in 2 Cor. 8: 9, contain the path of practical religion. So long as Christ's poor are an annoyance to us, we do not know. When a saint's face is win and his eyes hollow for lack of nourishment, while all around him are those whose forms are bloated with excessive alimentation, it is enough to make Jesus weep in Heaven, and repeat the Olivet wail of Luke 19: 41, 42. "Inasmuch as ye have not done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have not done it unto me." DEPART YE CURSED." What thunder words for the mammon-worshiper. What a crushing, irreversible anathema for the neglecter of the poor. What an eternally damning penalty for the despiser of the Incarnation. Whoever is ashamed of poverty is ashamed of Jesus Christ. Sacrifice is the glory of Christianity. Selfishness is the curse of humanity. O the blessedness of being poor with Jesus to enrich others.

If we truly apprehend the Cross we must become very poor before we feel poor enough to beg. If we have found Jesus we will live on bread and water, and yet feel rich. If there is anything real under the sun it is the sense of joint-ownership with the All-inheritor. God's poor must be sought out. They do not flaunt their poverty. The keen eye and quick sympathy of Christian love finds them. The poor are the Divinetest of our faculty. Those who spurn the poor inside the walls of Zion, have nothing to spare for missions outside. Remember the poverty of Jesus, and your riches in His emptiness, and you will be glad He has hinged your salvation on kindness to the poor.

A FEW WORDS TO THE SISTERS.

BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

Dear Sisters:—

AS a love of dress is a weakness that belongs to our sex, I sincerely hope that you will not only bear with my remarks on the subject, but hope that you will consider them well. The Scriptures forbid conformity. They also tell us what our adornments should be, as well as what they should not be. Our adornments must not consist in gold or apparel or costly array.

The church has given us a systematic dress, or in other words an order of dress that we may know just what to do. Why not live up to this order, turning neither to the right nor left? It is neat and good enough for any of us, and one of the greatest beauties about it is, if it is strictly adhered to, it brings rich and poor upon an equal footing. There need be no embarrassment among poor sisters; they can all meet and salute each other in loving confidence. Sisters do you not see the beauty of the arrangement?

Can we not look up to the Giver of every blessing, and humbly thank Him for giving us commands so easy to obey, and that are so well calculated to keep love and harmony among us. Did you never feel that sweet peace of mind that the humble sister enjoys in her simple, heaven-ordered apparel, and think how superior it is over and above the butterfly of fashion, whose mind is constantly filled and worried with a fear that she will not make a good appearance at all times and places in the latest fashions? Would you not think it dreadful to be such a slave? Alas! thousands are just in such a state of slavery. Now dear sisters, every one of us that ful in the smallest thing, living up to the established order of the church, are just as guilty as the one that puts on all the fashions of the day. If we fail in doing part of a command, we are guilty of full disobedience of that command. That is the meaning of the text, "If you fail in one point, you are guilty of the whole." It is very inconsistent to suppose that if we fail in one command, we are guilty of the whole, but it looks very reasonable if we fail in one point, we are guilty of the whole. Thus dear sisters, you perceive that if we wear a se-less ribbon or the smallest or narrowest piece of trimming, or in short wear anything for ornament or use any other adornment than a meek and quiet spirit, we are disobeying the full command, and not only one, but all of the commands concerning living non-conformed to the world.

And dear sisters, this is not all of the harm we are doing in this matter; we are not only shutting the gates of heaven against ourselves, but our influence, whether it be small or great, so far as it goes, is leading others astray with us. If one sees you with a small amount of superfluity, she concludes it no harm to do even more than you, and she is right, for if you disobey in part, you are guilty of the whole. Besides you have made the start, have led the way. Our old mother Eve was led into temptation first, and by her example and influence her husband was induced to commit a sin that has brought the consequences of sin upon the whole human family, and the punishment passed upon Eve, has been transferred to all of her daughters; her husband was to rule over her, for woman was the first in the transgression.

We are indeed weak vessels, but let us show our strength by obeying the truth, and keeping right along the straight and narrow way. When we see one going just as far as they dare go in the ways of the world, we very much fear for them, that they are being led by a wrong spirit. The Spirit of Truth that is to guide the Christian's way, never directs into forbidden paths, but let us be controlled with the same feeling of one of old, when he said, "let others do as they will, as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

We would go on further, and say, that a firm resolution to do our duty, and let the world say and do as it may, will gain the favor of God and all good men, while the other course will bring us nearer and nearer, every day, to endless destruction. God says, "My Spirit will not always strive with man." Why do we crave these earthly objects? They cannot bring happiness or comfort, they cannot ease pain; the friends we make by such are of no account, mere bubbles that burst the instant the cold winds of adversity touches you, while the true and honest will cling to you in adversity, or prosperity. To have true friends, we must be true ourselves, and if we belong to the church of the Brethren, and believe in its doctrine, let us live up to it; and if the churches that practice after the fashions of the world suit us better, let us live in them; not live in one and belong practically to the another. I presume every person that belongs to the church of the Brethren, knows that plainness is strictly advocated, and why after becoming members, will some resist coming into the order, and thus become a stumbling-block to others?

Dear sisters, come right over to the order, and as a sister remarked to me soon after I became a member, "The plainer the better." If we are decent and clean that of course is included; far cleanliness is next to godliness. Now we believe it to be just as wrong to dress extravagantly as fashionably. When we buy high-priced clothing, we should consider if we would spend one-half for the article, that would answer the purpose just as well. The other half might be put in some valuable works and sent out among the people, some of our papers, periodicals or pamphlets, and suppose only one would cause some poor sinner to change his course and turn from his wicked ways and seek God, and you will be none the worse off. What a small sacrifice to gain so much, you would have the delightful and cheering thought that by a very small sacrifice you, through God's mercy, had been the means of causing angels to rejoice; and if you should both hold out faithful, what a joyful meeting you can have in eternity, for I am forced to believe that the redeemed will know each other.

WE SHALL NOT ALL SLEEP.

BY NOAH B. BROUGH.

SLEEP, as we all understand, is taking rest or resting. There is not an individual, who does not need the natural sleep, for we must all have it, and plenty of it too, or our bodies will soon wear out, and our minds not be capable of performing their duty; for nature must have sleep, and if we would not get it, we would soon become sickly, and waste away, physically and mentally. But if we become weary and tired, and take a good night's rest or sleep, we feel much rested and refreshed every way. So much for natural sleep.

But the sleep mentioned in our text, is not the sleep that nature demands, but the sleep of death; not the sleep of the sinner, for we know that all sinners are "dead in trespasses and sins," and it is said, "Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead, and Christ will give thee light." We learn that when Lazarus died, Christ told the people he was sleeping, and they thought he does well; but He told them plainly, "Lazarus is dead," hence it follows that the term sleep in the Scripture often signifies death. Paul says, "Behold I show you a mystery, we shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed." This is truly a great mystery. We shall not all die, but if we are true followers of Christ, and live at the time of Christ's second coming, we shall never die, for not all shall sleep; is this not a great mystery?

The above, I think is one of the most beautiful arrangements that God has planned. Did you ever think what a glorious arrangement it is? Did you ever think how it would be with us if we are true followers of Christ when He comes again, if that should be before we die? Oh what a happy thought, that we shall die or sleep, but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye. Oh what a mystery; to think that Christ shall change our natural bodies into spiritual bodies in a moment's time. But there is still another beautiful arrangement connected with the subject. All the true followers of Christ, who died since Christ was on earth, and as many as will yet die before His coming, are represented as sleeping in Jesus—sweet thought to sleep in Jesus—but the beautiful arrangement which God has ordained, is revealed by Paul in first Thessalonians 4: 15, "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them that sleep." Christ shall not take us up in the air first, no we shall not go before them that do in the Lord. I read that God is a God of order, and the apostle Paul says, on one occasion, "Let all things be done decently and in order." It would not seem in order, if the saints that are living when Christ comes, would be changed before those who fell asleep in Christ hundreds of years before. I think we must all confess that it is a beautiful arrangement which God has made known unto us.

CATCHING FISH.

A GENTLEMAN who happened to be spending his holidays in Scotland thought that he would like to try his hand at fishing for trout in a neighboring stream. He accordingly equipped himself with his fishing tackle and other appliances of the best description that money could purchase. He went to the stream and fished all day, and caught nothing. Toward afternoon he espied a little ragged urchin, with tackle of the most primitive order, nipping the fish out of the water with marvelous rapidity. Perfectly amazed, he watched the lad for a while, and then went and asked him if he could explain the reason why he was so successful, in spite of his meagre outfit, while the expensive apparatus could catch nothing. The boy promptly replied, "The fish'll no catch, sir, as long as ye durna keep yersel' out of sight." Fishers of men need not wonder at their want of success if they do not "keep themselves out of sight."

ANIMADVERSION.

BY JAS. T. HECKLER.

O, YE young, ye gay, ye proud,
Plumed in fashion's gaudy dress,
Look around you, see the crowd
Moving on in wickedness,
Drunk with the lusts of sin,
See them revel as they go—
Plumes without and pride within—
Down the stream to endless woe.

—Down along the stream of time,
One by one they pass away;
Unreformed, in youth and prime,
Some are summoned every day;
Summoned are the young and proud,
At the judgment to appear.—
Sinner, you must wear the shroud,
Haply yet this present year.

O, ye young, reflect and pause;
Think before you farther go;
Better far take up the cross,
To escape eternal woe;
Than be drifting in the dark,
Downward on the viewless tide,
For you know not when your bark
Will engulf you in your pride.

Thousands living, young and brave,
Unconcerned about their souls,
Soon will sink into the grave,
Which the silent night controls.
Sinner, listen to repent,
Christ is knocking at your door,
Your destruction to prevent,
Lest you burn forevermore.

FEET-WASHING.

PERHAPS for reasons sweetly their own, many professors of religion refuse to acknowledge the authority of Christ in this ordinance. We have never as yet heard an argument in favor of this skepticism, that was heavier than a feather in a tornado. Every effort to wriggle away from a plain duty only reveals it more clearly. The little finger of the Almighty Christ, is heavier than all the theological plummets that ever sounded the ocean of truth. He declared the act of washing the disciples' feet to be an example which was to be literally performed by His followers, even as He had set the example. How a man can follow the example of Christ without literally washing the saints' feet requires the agility of a theological acrobat—such as true candor does not desire to attain—much less practice. Christ emphatically declares that we ought to wash one another's feet, but skepticism, enforced by the dogmatic dicta of so-called orthodox doctors of divinity, rises from its gloomy lair of doubt, and declares we ought not to wash one another's feet. Here is a masterly conflict of authorities. The King of heaven against the parchment of the college professor! The Maker of worlds against the maker of human creeds! The sun in his radiant splendor against the glow-worm at your feet! The Architect of all creation against a crumbling shaft of His handiwork! The undying wisdom of glory against the silly prattle of a mortal babbler. To disregard this emphatic command of the Redeemer, is to invalidate the authority of His entire life. It certainly requires an acute intellect to discover how any one claiming consistency as a jewel worth preserving, can see infant baptism in the Bible, a thing which they all admit to be an outgrowth of inferential fancy, and yet deny the necessity of yielding obedience to the unequivocal declaration of Jesus Christ on the subject of Feet-washing. Such a course betrays a degree or moral obliquity anything but inspiring, in our estimate of human character. It is a touch of the Romish dogma, which places the authority of a corrupt church above its Divine Founder. The inner consciousness, supplied with the drifting scum of human tradition, is elevated above the oracles of God. A holy ordinance, founded by Christ Himself, is made the theme of sneering ridicule, by hearts and lips, which at other times, seem eager to breathe the holy name in prayer.—Church Advocate.

WATCHING.

BY JOHN KNISLEY.

“WATCH therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come” (Matt. 24:42). Did our blessed Savior mean we should watch others, see the faults of others and pick at them and make them greater still? Or did he want us to stand out of our houses and watch for Him as children do when their parents are gone from home? I think the 44th verse of the same chapter tells it. “Therefore be ye ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh.”

I do think dear reader, it will not be long till Jesus comes in the clouds of heaven, for the signs are warning us to be ready. We must be at peace with God and with one another, and with all as far as lieth in us. Where must we stand when the Lord doth come? Stand where duty calls us, and if we do this, we will not be on forbidden ground; not go into a saloon, for that is unholy ground. Where then shall we stand? Be ready, stand by the Word of God, which forbids us to stand or sit with the scornful.

When the Lord doth come we must have on the wedding garment, which must not contain so many frounces and other false trimming but it should be white and clean, and modest. O! let us all have this garment and be ready when the Lord doth come. The white garment must have no spots of the world on it, for the Lord will see, and will not approve of them. Does not every parent want to try to have their children neat and ready when they are about to be joined in marriage? And do not all wish their children well? Certainly they do, and this is right. Suppose our children could marry the richest and the best husbands or wives in the world, and if they would live together three score years, and live in peace, having much riches they will say, “sixty years, but they were short ones.” Now that Husband who said, “be ye also ready,” wants us all to have on a wedding garment when He comes, and it must be white and clean. He does not require us to have unnecessary ruffles or fixings on the garment; He don't want us to get it made after the style of the world, and I think God we don't need to get the milliner to make it after the latest style. The poor can have it, and each one can obtain it for himself.

Be ye also ready when I come, and have the wedding garment on, and then I will receive you unto myself; but you must have no spot or wrinkle. After the marriage we can be together forever. It will not be like here—a few short years and then separate, no more to meet on earth. We weep and shed tears when we must separate, and O! how lonely it is if our companions are taken away, or our dear children; but if we watch and are ready when the Master comes, we all can meet again. What a happy meeting that will be?

A GREAT WONDER IN HEAVEN.

BY J. S. MOORE.

“AND there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars” (Rev. 12:1). God has never left Himself without a witness to the human family, in all ages of the world. God has always had a people on earth: and some system of worship was introduced in the early history of the world whereby the human family could draw nigh to God and worship Him; hence we notice that Abel's offering was acceptable to God (Gen. 4:4). “Enoch walked with God” (Gen. 4:34), i. e., he walked blameless in the Law of God, and system of worship then revealed. Noah, after the flood offered acceptable worship to God (Gen. 9:21). Again, we read of the sons of God taking the daughters of men to wife. By the phrase “sons of God,” we understand those that obeyed God, were obedient to the mode of worship then imparted; and the phrase “daughters of men” we understand to mean, women who were not obedient to God, but were corrupt. By this intermarriage the sons of God compromised their religion, and became corrupt through the influence doubtless of their wives, hence the great corruption preceding the flood. The mode of worship before the introduction of the Law, may be termed the

TWILIGHT OF REVEALED RELIGION.

When the Law was introduced, more light was introduced, many things were commanded, that previously were not commanded, many things were forbidden that previously were not forbidden. The Sabbath day was fully set apart, and sanctified. The Jewish law discriminated between beasts that were clean and unclean; between fowls that were clean, and unclean; between fishes that were clean, and unclean, and none were allowed to be eaten with their blood. Their social intercourse with surrounding nations, and with themselves, was clearly defined. Their marriage relation was fully described. Their worship, and offerings were most strictly enjoined, and clearly stated. Their moral duties were sacredly, and sternly imposed. The requirements of the law were such as to elevate the Jews in point of morals, and religion above the surrounding nations. The law made them moral; and of religious inclination. The moral precepts of the law are so excellent as to be in force, under the Christian dispensation. Hence the Jews in the days of David, Solomon, and other obedient kings of Israel, were far in advance of heathen nations in point of morals, and religion. The law, when fully observed, under the Jewish dispensation, may be termed,

THE MOONLIGHT OF RELIGION.

The law in itself was not perfect, it pointed to a better state in the future. It consisted largely of types, and figures; showing that the reality had not come. It was a school-master. The blood that daily flowed from Jewish altars pointed to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. When Christ came, the news was so excellent, that angels left their holy habitations on high, and came down on rapid wings to bear us the welcome news: “unto you this day is born in the city of David a Savior which is Christ the Lord; and suddenly there was with the angels a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men” (Luke 2:11, 13, 14). Again, says the Scriptures, speaking of the superiority of the Gospel, over the law, and the introduction of the Gospel by John the Baptist, “And then child, shall be called the Prophet of the highest; for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways: to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins, through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the day-spring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace” (Luke 1:76, 77, 78, 79). Again, “The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up” (Matt. 4:16). The Gospel exceeds the law as far as sunlight exceeds moonlight.

In the introduction of the Gospel, the human family was raised up a step higher, and revealed religion, made brighter than under the law, hence the church represented by a woman, has the moon under her feet; has got above it, enjoys greater light. “That was the true light which lighteth every man, that cometh into the world” (John 1:9), “and brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel” (2 Tim. 1:10). Our relation to God, and the heavenly intelligence, are higher and nearer than under the law. The character produced by the Gospel is superior to the character produced by the law. The law tolerated war. The law tolerated polygamy. The law tolerated retaliation. The law was, eye for eye, and tooth for tooth. But Christ reversed this; hence says Christ, “It was said of old, thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy; but I say love your enemies; do good them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you.” Again, “Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them” (Matt. 7:12). Again, “Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.” Paul in speaking of the excellency of Christian character, refers to some of its fruits and evidences as follows: “But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law.” Again, says the same apostle, “Finally brethren, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things” (Phil. 4:8). In these and other Scriptures, we see the superior excellency of Christian character.

There is not a grace, or virtue attainable, but the apostle wants us to attain to it. The phrase “think on these things,” means that we make our life and character a constant study, that we may develop within us all that is ennobling; that our lives be so pure and upright, that we, like the Corinthians of old, become living epistles written with the Spirit of the living God, known and read of all men. Every professor ought to be a living advertisement for the Lord, bearing about with him the marks of the Lord Jesus, that men could take cognizance of them that they have been with Jesus and learned of Him. Such Christianity, locked up by a plain, direct, honest, energetic ministry, will go farther towards converting the world to Christ; than all the fine-spun theological dogmas that our learned institutions ever hatched out.

The Revelator has well illustrated, the purity of the church, by the sun clothing the woman. The sun is the great source of all natural light. All other light is only borrowed from it. By its light we discover all objects whether great or small. If a few rays are converged through an aperture in the wall, the finest particles of dust floating in the air become visible. It is thus with the Sun of righteousness when it rises in our hearts, revealing unto us more and more the exceeding sinfulness, it shines brighter and brighter unto the perfect day, and we become purer and holier in our lives.

The figure used by the Revelator, is an apt one. God's plans for our redemption have been gradually unfolding since the creation. First the twilight of religion. Secondly the moonlight, and lastly religion in its full splendor; which is the greatest of all. Upon us the ends of the world have come. No other light will be given. It is the last time. May God enable us all to walk in the light as He is in the light, that we may have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Christ shall cleanse us from all sin.

"And upon her head a crown of twelve stars." This doubtless has reference to the twelve apostles of the Lamb, who were to be witnesses of Christ to the ends of the world; were pillars in the church, who carried the glad tidings of great joy to every nation, kindred, tongue and people. "On the head" means, a place of prominence. The position of the twelve apostles in the church, is a very prominent one, and is fitly illustrated by a crown of twelve stars on the head of the woman, who stands as a representative of the church of Jesus Christ. Clothed with the sun; denotes her intense purity and light. For this purpose the Gospel was given, that a people might thereby, in connection with the blood of Christ, be made free from sin; be finished in obeying the truth; become vessels of honor, made meet for the Masters use; that they might glorify God and enjoy Him forever.

LOVE, THE CHRISTIAN'S ENSIGN.

BY M. HALV.

THERE is no Christianity without love; all converted men and women have experienced this. Jesus says, "By this all men shall know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." So where love cannot be seen by every one, believer or unbeliever, there can be no claim to discipleship. Some good-meaning persuasions have adopted other outward signs, in order to be known by their fellow-members and outsiders. These Christian professors are often misrepresented, as dry goods Christians, in other words, as having their religion in dress. While this may be the case, that there are persons who only have an empty sign, and not the real power within; yet to conclude as a general thing, those who believe and advocate the dress sign-doctrine, are of this class, is certainly very wrong.

No intelligent man or woman claims that dress will take any one to heaven, neither do they claim that dress is a sign of sincere Christianity. But it is claimed to be a sign to the world around us, to show where we belong. The Brethren as a church have adopted a custom for their members, in order that one may know the other, and the world may know all, and if we are truly converted to God, Christ and the church, it is very doubtful whether we will discard those things which the church holds as her peculiarities.

If we claim to be the church of Christ we will show our love toward the church in all things. The church first, then we, not our ideas and conclusions always best. But we said, dress is only a sign of membership of a certain organization, and shows that we are or are not ashamed of the principles as advocated by that body of which we claim to be members. But we are told that the church has no right to ask the members to do anything for which there is no plain "Thus saith the Lord," and as the custom or cut and pattern are not prescribed by men inspired, this should be left altogether optional to the taste of every person. We would ask one question, Where do all the foolish fashions of the world come from? Trace them up to their starting points; view in Gospel light the character of those who get up these foolish things, and then look to the people who tell us, we shall not follow all these vanities, and from your own conclusions, as to who are the people of God, who are working for our salvation, and who is working for the condemnation of poor souls; one or the other we follow, one or the other we do choose for our company here in this world, one or the other will be our society in heaven or hell, which will it be? May this ring in our ears continually, which one of this class will we have for eternal company? Will we have those who are at the head of the foolish fashions in the city of Paris, and other places of like nature? Or will it be the brother and sister, whose whole heart is given to Jesus? If the people of the Lord are to be in heaven, and Satan and his followers in hell, no one of us will choose the latter for our company here, and much less for eternity.

Jesus is the founder of humility, Satan of pride. Jesus has promised to exalt the humble, to be with him here and in eternity. These are truths, as we learn them from the Bible. The Christian's care and delight is to please God; the proud man or woman's delight is to follow the fashions. The Christian's God, is the one true, eternal Father of all the good; the proud man and woman's god is the goddess of fashion. The difference is, the Christian's God can make his subjects happy here and in eternity; the goddess of fashion makes her subjects unhappy here and in eternity.

But we know, that not even all, who dress in conformity to the order of the church are Christians. Dress will only at best show to the world that we are members of the church. It takes more than merely dress to show to the world that we are Christians. Love will convince all, by this, all shall know it. Love is said by certain writers, to be only a passion, while it is understood from the teaching of God's Word to be our innate principle. While carnal love may only be a passion, that love required of us as God's people, is a principle. It is said by Paul, that it is greater than faith or hope, for faith and hope will come to an end, but not so with love. God loves us and we love God. He will do us good, and we, if His children, will do good to our fellow-men. Love will cast out fear, it will compel us to do good to all, even to our enemies. What a blessed religion is our Christianity. Loving the Creator and the creature, we will harm no one. God is love, and His children are love. We might add, love is the bond which keeps the people of God together. Without love no organization will ever endure, what the Christian religion has endured, and still conquer, all men shall see it.

The question arises, how shall we show our love? A certain brother at a love-feast said, when treating on the holy kiss, that this was the best proof we could give. The kiss of charity may be a sign or token, yet we know it is no proof, for Judas even made use of it, in betraying his Lord and Master. Some one may say, that was no holy kiss. Yes we know that not all is holy in our day which should be so. Love is a principle among Christians that will show itself best by works. I may claim to love my brother, and slander him at the same time, and the world will see that I am acting the Judas. But when I defend my brother against all that is wrongly said, then I can claim I love him. If brethren are in want, and the rich can and do help them, they can claim they love their poorest brethren. In short, we can only show our love to each other, so that the world can see when we do each other good; when we work for each other's happiness, when we encourage each other on our Christian pilgrimage. Satan is the destroyer of happiness and peace. What a heaven where all is love, peace and happiness. What a hell, where there is no rest, peace or happiness. God knew best what was necessary, in order that his children might be a separate people from the world. But it has been said, that God through Jesus asks too much, that he asks us even to love our enemies—yes this is a very hard task for the carnal mind. Of course in the first place, if all would be Christians, who profess to be such, we would have no enemies among God's people, but we know that this is not so, consequently if we meet with opposition, persecution even from false brethren as Paul did, this Christian principle, love will help us to overcome and forgive all. Although our trials are bitter and severe, yet we as Christians must forgive all, but not only forgive, but love our enemies. As sinners, this would be an impossibility; as Christians, we can say, with Paul, "with Christ we can do all things," we ought to love our enemies. This is one of the best trials of our faith; but we are glad that we are also commanded to love our friends. Jesus loved His friends; He gave His life for them, and we poor mortals may be His friends if we do what He has commanded us.

To love Jesus implies that we must love His church, His people, His Law, in short all that is good, pure and holy, and this under all circumstances. Of course He has said, without me, "ye can do nothing." The result will be, if we love Jesus, and His people here, if we enjoy their society here, we can enjoy it in heaven, where none but God's people will be; no disturbance, no persecutions, no troubles, no prejudice, no jealousy, no backbiting, no slandering, no evil and false reports spread to injure the character of those there; no division, no fighting. No, no; all, all peace and love in God. Looking at heaven in this way, who would not try to get there?

PRIDE.

BY W. J. H. BATMAN.

PRIDE is a subject often talked about, but I fear many who talk much about it, but imperfectly understand what it is. In this as in many other things, the effect is taken for the cause. Pride is inordinate self-esteem, and its seat is in the heart or affections. The fruit of it manifests itself externally. It can't be kept locked up in the heart, it will crop out some way. With some it will crop out in gay and fashionable garments.

With some it becomes developed by haughtiness, because of wealth and position, often in official position, both in church and State; with others, because of superior talent. This fact is often demonstrated in the pulpit. Where pride rules there is conceit, and a desire to draw attention. It is the cause of men blowing their own trumpets, either by word or action, when they perform some commendable act and that causes hypocrisy. Often it crops out in power or authority, and becomes a crushing tyrant over those over whom it can exercise power or authority, or over the weak and helpless, and thus make those in whom it dwells cowards. Only cowards (either physical or moral) are afraid of, and opposed to, equality and fair play. Pride is an abomination in the sight of God, and of everything that is good, and is terribly denounced in Scripture.

God resisteth those who are proud, while His grace (favor) is conferred upon the humble. The only way to conquer pride, is to consecrate ourselves entirely to the will of God. Those who depend upon their superior morality, and because of that claim, they "are good, or generally better than others,—are proud, as only proud persons are good in their own estimation. Humble men see but little goodness in themselves. Their motto is, "I will serve the Lord, let others do as they may," and thus act from principle.

In view of the above facts, and many others not stated, in this short and imperfect article, let all who profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene, fight against this monster pride; drive it (by consecration to God) out of their own hearts, and then labor with others. It is useless to preach to others when we don't practice ourselves. Let those who have wealth and position regard those who have not their equals practically, and in their endeavors to convert others, let them be careful and not show a harsh, boisterous and conceited disposition. "But let their moderation be known to all men." Let those who are in possession of superior talent, esteem others above themselves, and let those who are in authority exercise their power by example and lead instead of driving.

Let all who name the name of Christ, labor for each other's good, and in all lowliness serve each other, and be subject one to another. By so doing God's favors will come. Amid the tempestuous storms and oppositions of carnality, they will be able from actual experience to say, "Thy grace is sufficient for me." Amid the adversities of this life, they will be able to look beyond the shores of time, and by anticipation bathe themselves in the cool river of eternal felicity, and when they get over there, they will be free from all annoyance. No pride in heaven, no sorrow there, no sickness, no death. May God help us all to finally be so extremely happy as to be rid of all that annoys and troubles.

Watch against all fretful and discontented thoughts, which do but chafe and corrode the mind to no purpose. To harbor these is to do yourself more injury than it is in the power of your greatest enemy to do you. It is equally a Christian's interest and duty to "learn in whatsoever state he is, therewith to be content."

A bird upon the wing may carry a seed that shall add a new species to the vegetable family of a continent, and just so, a word, a thought, may have results immeasurable, eternal.

MOORE & ESHELMAN,
Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill.

LANARK, ILL., JULY 11, 1878.

All orders for the Perfect Plan of Salvation have now been filled, and should any, who have ordered the pamphlet, fail to get it, they will please inform us at once, and their requests will receive our prompt and immediate attention.

A WARM heart is a good thing and should not be underrated, but if you would prosper and enjoy the good gifts of life, keep a cool head. Remember that it takes a cold hammer to bend hot iron. A cool head and a warm heart may accomplish wonders.

It was our intention to have sent a copy of No. 2 of the Children at Work to each of our subscribers last week, but the amount printed did not hold out, hence there were about 1500 who failed to get the paper. Those wishing a sample copy can get it free by dropping us a card.

BROTHER John Shepherd, a minister, residing near Elroy, Stephenson Co., Ill., desires to move West into a community of brethren and sisters, to labor with them in the advancement of truth and the ingathering of precious souls. Those wishing to correspond with him will address him at the above named place.

If people would measure their prayers by their faith, we would have but few long prayers. There is too much praying for mere effect. People pray because it does not look right to neglect it; others pray because it is expected of them, but we fear there are few who pray because they feel the need of prayer.

NEVER undertake anything without a fixed purpose. Make up your mind fully; be sure that the step you are about to take is the right one. Lay hold on the right thing and then stick to it. The want of stability in the general pursuits of life will ruin any man. Men who know they are right do not want to flinch just because there is a little opposition. Perseverance in the right will surely conquer.

To some people in this world, were as anxious to amend their own lives and convert sinners, as they are to talk about the faults of others, and stir up strife, we might look for a speedy conversion of the world. When it comes to talking about the faults of others, they can express their ideas with the greatest ease, but if called on to speak a word for Jesus their plea is, "we haven't the gulf of language." Surely there are some strange things in this world.

BROTHER J. W. Stein, who, since the Annual Meeting, has been preaching for the Brethren in Indiana, gave us a call on his return home last week. He remained but one day, preached to an attentive congregation on Friday evening, and left for his home that night. Bro. Stein is enjoying reasonable health, though much worn by his trip. He will not be prepared to do much traveling for something over one year, as the written discussion in which he will soon engage will last about 64 weeks, thus keeping him pretty closely confined, however our readers can have the full benefit of it.

It should be borne in mind, by the different congregations in the brotherhood, that a committee will visit California the coming Fall, and that the money to defray the necessary expenses should be raised by the first of September. To do this, it will require one dollar from each congregation, which amount can be sent to either the Primitive Christian, Evangelist, or BRETHREN AT WORK office. Wealthy churches should contribute more than one dollar. Each housekeeper will see to it that this is attended to at once.

HE SHALL SO COME.

THIS means Jesus shall come, not only come, but "so come." We look how He went up from the disciples "into heaven," and then we are able to understand the "so-come." Precious promise! Behold the loving hearts, who had been three and a half years with Jesus, now stand gazing "up into heaven." Why stand gazing into heaven? Jesus had gone there. He came from the Father and went to the Father. "A cloud received him out of their sight." This is the manner of His going; and now we turn to the words of Jesus in Matt. 24: 30, and there learn that "then" (when He comes again) "shall all the tribes of earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Nor is Mark silent concerning Christ's second or glory coming. He says: "And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory" (Mark 13: 26). And lest some might cavil and say, He will not come in clouds, John also records, "Behold, he cometh with clouds" (Rev. 1: 7). Paul also gives testimony that Jesus will come again "to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe" (2 Thess. 1: 7; 1 Thess. 1: 10 and 4: 16).

Nor is this all. Before Jesus went up into heaven in clouds, He comforted His disciples with the thought, "I go to prepare a place for you. I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am ye may be also" (John 14: 2). And so important is the coming, that the man of God, Daniel, more than 2400 years ago already saw that "One like the Son of man came with clouds of heaven." Thus Inspiration not only tells that Jesus will come again, but also tells how He will come and what for.

First, He came in humility. So must we come to Him. First, He came despised and lowly; but when He comes again it shall be with power and glory; not only with glory, but with great glory. Coming in great glory to be glorified in His saints and to be admired in all them that believe, and "to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed."

The testimony regarding Christ's coming in great glory, is so abundant that no man can hide behind the want of it. (Matt. 21: 31-46). The precise time of His coming knows no man, but the signs of His coming shall warn His people to be ready. These signs shall not be heeded by the ungodly, but they shall regard them lightly, and the men of science will endeavor to give them such explanations as will ease the carnal mind. And those explanations will be so whitened as to deceive even some of the saints—some who look continually for the philosophy of the thing, for the reason from a human stand-point. For instance, the civilized world is just now agitated to its very center by what is termed "Communism," and men of giant minds are seeking the causes. But where do they seek? In the Bible? No, but among the works and productions of their fellow-men. Does not the Bible say, "When ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be not terrified; for these things must come to pass; but the end is not by and by." Wars are common, and we hear of them without much terror; but when in the midst of "commotions" we fear and tremble. And why? Because the Lord did not warn us that these things "must first come to pass?" No, not that; but because we have begun to love our lands, houses, money, friends, and country more than God. Here lies the root of our troubles. Commotions must first come to pass before Jesus will so come.

Then marvel not at the signs of His coming. The signs must first come, then the glory coming of Christ will appear. BE NOT TERRIFIED! Famines, pestilences, wars, earthquakes, commotions, fearful sights, and great signs from heaven shall meet the eyes of mankind before Christ shall SO COME. Marvel not at the commotions,—the fearful sights. They must come, for God says so. Be ready. Watch. We are living in an age of commotions as well as wars, and as these must come to pass before Christ comes in glory, we should look and watch lest we be carried away with the commotions. None of us can afford to forget these terrible signs. God permits them for our good. Brother, sister, throw them not away, but regard them. Watch; not only to-day, but always. Do you see Christ coming "in clouds" with "great glory?" Have you started to meet Him, dear reader? Then fall not faithless in the commotions, but look to Jesus. He is coming and soon we shall all see Him. Be well prepared. He has not left us without a witness. "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly: Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

NOVEL READING.

THREE boys, each about twelve years of age, have been sent to prison from New York for robbery. They were up to it by reading a dime novel that told of the dashing exploits of a twelve-year old highwayman, with whom twenty-eight girls were in love, and who became a terror to thousands. The dime novel is a key that opens the doors to many a prison, but never to a decent place.

This is about what might be expected from the reading of such trashy literature as is found in the generality of novels of the day, and it therefore becomes the duty of every parent to keep a careful watch over the reading matter that comes into the family, and see to it that nothing is introduced, calculated to ruin their children, and thus bring them into disgrace, and finally ruin to the family.

For years we have maintained, that the reading of trashy novels, has had much to do with the crimes and miseries of our land. Novel reading lays at the bottom of about four-fifths of the divorce cases, saying nothing about other misfortunes. Though I have been an extensive reader for years, yet have read but few novels, and even these were examined just to learn of the evil tendency such reading will produce. In short, I ventured to take a little of the poison to see what effect it would produce, for there is nothing like experimental knowledge in some things, though this is not to be commended. But after examining a few works, I made up my mind that I had no business reading such trashy literature, and if persisted in, it would be impossible to live right. It is difficult enough as it is, and what will become of people who are constantly pouring into their souls such injurious mental food the Lord only knows.

In early life I was fortunate enough to never see a novel. The first book I ever owned was a little fifteen-cent Testament. This was carefully read through of nights and what odd times I could get while working in the woods. The next book that fell into my hands was an old Cyclopedia of History; and so on up step by step, I came to the general variety of literary works, but never saw a novel until nearly twenty years of age. But now as soon as children begin to read, they are found devouring the contents of some novel, and thus, in many instances, paving the way for unhappiness or crime, and may be finally, ruin.

The tendency of novel reading is discontentment, and creates a love for light, trashy literature. Some people claim that the contents of a novel are not in their minds only while reading. This cannot be true, for these very persons can generally tell about all there is in any novel, months after reading it. But, if the contents are in the mind no longer than it takes to put them there, that makes the practice still equally bad, if not more injurious than remembering the contents, for that which runs through the mind, without being digested, has a tendency to weaken, and in a measure, destroy the functions of the mind. It is just like running food through the body without digesting, which all know would paralyze any system.

A persistence in novel reading is calculated to bias the mind against religious reading. As proof of this, novel readers will seldom read a religious paper, or book, when a novel is to be had. I know of a preacher, who spends his time reading political papers and the New York Ledger, and you cannot prevail on that man to take a religious paper; and why? Just because he does not relish that kind of reading. Supposing we were to turn the BRETHREN AT WORK into a novel paper, and fill it with such matter as is generally found in the Ten Cent novels of the day, and our people would read it a few years, what would become of the church? In less than three years we would find them attending the theatres, ball-rooms, and fashionable picnics, and forsaking the assembling of themselves together at the house of worship. The Bible would be shoved into some out-of-the-way place, and the center table covered with novels. Some may think the church too pure to be injured by a few years' novel reading. Well, it may seem so, but I care not how healthy a man is, poison will kill him if he takes enough of it.

Some people read novels, as they say, for the moral there is in them. That is about like digging in a sandbank for stone-coal. Of course, coal is useful, but finding it there is where the trouble comes in. Men and women will read a book of some three or four hundred pages, just for the sake of finding a little moral the author chanced to drop in near the close. It is about as logical as drinking a quart of whiskey just to get a little lump of sugar that lays in the bottom of the cup. It is not the moral they are after, it is something else of less importance. If all the morals, found in novels, were collected and published, the book would likely have a very small sale.

Another class read novels for the sake of learning to read. That is about like feeding a baby indigestible food in order to teach it to eat. If learning to read is what they are after, there are good books adapted to that purpose. But, why do not these people quit reading novels after they have learned to read well? Ah! here is where the trouble comes in; they have got agoing and cannot stop. They are like the man who took a glass of whiskey to quench his thirst, but it now so happens that he gets thirsty every day, and the pure element, water will no more satisfy the wants of abused nature. That is the tendency of light, trashy literature.

The high-toned novels, as they are sometimes called, are no better than others, in the end. It is simply high-toned sin—corruption in high places. It is error with a fine polish on it, or sugar-coated pills with poison inside. It is the upper grade of error, or that class of story telling highly esteemed among men, and hence an abomination in the sight of God. It is about like the high-toned intoxicating drinks used by the aristocracy, it is in beautifully decorated bottles, and delightful to the taste, but no less injurious to man.

We insist upon it that parents should watch this matter closely, and not allow trashy novels to come into their houses. They should supply their children with good reading matter, but not under any circumstances allow a novel in the house to ruin the minds of their children, and lead them down the road of sin and final destruction.

PHILIP AND THE EUNUCH.

PHILIP was a faithful Gospel preacher, and embraced every opportunity of telling the story of his risen Master. He had just closed a successful meeting at Samaria, where both men and women believed and were baptized, when he, by the angel of the Lord is sent on another mission down towards Gaza. He meets a eunuch of Ethiopia, takes a seat with him in the chariot and preached unto him Jesus.

"And as they went on their way, they came to a certain water; and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what does hinder me to be baptized?" From this we infer that Philip must have said something about baptism, and yet the preceding part of the narrative only mentions that he preached unto him Jesus.

"And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him" (Acts 8: 36-38).

The eunuch, after hearing Philip, demanded baptism, which was granted him on condition that he believed with all his heart. His confession made, "they went down both into the water." What did they both go down into the water for? Why did they not stop at the edge of the water? But, says one, into means at. We will see about that pretty soon. In the next verse we read, "And when they were come up out of the water." Here we have them coming up out of the water. Why this coming up out of it into simply means at? But, says the critic, up out of means from. Well, let us try this: It into means at, then at means into, and up out of means from, then from means up out of. With this rule of interpretation, we give the passages the following rendering: "And they went down both at the water." "And when they were come from the water." Now, if at means into, and from means up out of, then this rendering will have them going down into and coming up out of the water after all. I guess we would better cling to the old rendering.

But to the first question; What did they both go down into the water for? The eunuch went down into the water to be baptized, and Philip to baptize him. But, why go into the water? Here comes the test. One party says, to be sprinkled. What, take a man into the water to sprinkle a little water on him! What is the use of all this? Why get his feet wet just for the sake of sprinkling a little water on him? Why not do that on the bank of the stream?

That they both went into the water is no less clear than that they came up out of the water. Why do both the applicant and the administrator go into the water? Why do those performing the rite of baptism go into the water? We answer, to immerse. Those who immerse always go into the water. It is an act that always precedes immersion, then when we read of people going into the water, we may know that the object is immersion and not sprinkling. Again, we repeat, Why this going down into the water, of both the candidate and administrator, if immersion is not intended?

Mark, we do not maintain that the simple act of going into the water is immersion, as some indiscreet ones try to make it appear. The going into is an act that must necessarily go before the act of immersion, but is not the immersion itself, while it does not necessarily go before either sprinkling or pouring.

The simple fact of going into the water is the next thing to positive proof in support of immersion. All the evidence in the case is wholly on the side of immersion. Some people say, that there was no water there to immerse in. Well, there was enough for them to go down into. And we know that the chariot stood in the water, for both men went from the chariot down into the water. They did not first get onto the bank of the stream and then walk down into the water.

But if the act was sprinkling instead of immersion, why could not Philip have taken a vessel of some kind and dipped up enough water to sprinkle some on the head of the eunuch, and not have him go down into the water? The critic says, it is likely that the eunuch had nothing of the kind in his chariot. Yes, they cannot see any water worth speaking of in the whole country; they cannot even suppose why the eunuch should have a vessel or cup with him, yet they cannot see how he could travel all the way from Jerusalem to Ethiopia, through a dry country, and not have anything out of which to drink, or in which to carry water. Some people have a peculiar faculty for seeing things not in the Book.

If it be a fact, that all the Apostles and disciples practiced sprinkling during the first century, then I would like to know who introduced immersion? If all the members in the first churches were sprinkled, then who got the others in the notion of being immersed? But, if sprinkling was the Apostolic mode, where do our Pedobaptists get their authority for immersion?

We have seen that Philip was sent on his way by the angel of the Lord. Not one word was said about what was to be done, or anything of the kind. Philip, being a Gospel preacher, is presumed to have known his business. Some people say, that the place to which the preacher was directed was a desert, where there was not much water. Thus did not concern Philip, he knew that the Lord would provide. He who made the earth and all things therein, He who made man and conceived in His infinite mind the great plan of salvation, also made water enough to enable His servants to execute His commands. This thing of finding water enough in which to baptize, depends a good deal upon the will.

But where do these people live, who complain so much about a scarcity of water? Do they live in deserts where no water is to be found? Not one bit of it. We do not hear the inhabitants of Palestine complaining about a scarcity of water when anyone is to be baptized, nor does anyone complain, living near there. The complaining is done far this side of there, by those who live in countries where there is plenty of water and to spare. They have water enough at hand to immerse every man and woman in the nation, yet they set up the cry about the scarcity of water when in fact, there is more than they can use any way they can fix it.

We read not one word about any one complaining about water in the time of John the Baptist, or even in the time of the Apostles. Of course there are those who cannot conceive the idea of there having been much water in the Jordan, when, in fact, the stream was continually rolling a vast volume of water the distance of over two hundred miles into the Dead Sea. They can see how a million of people could live in Jerusalem from year to year, without much water at hand, but for their lives they cannot find enough water in the vicinity in which to immerse the three thousand. They cannot find any pools or reservoirs around Jerusalem, but can find most anything else. Of course, all other large cities must have some kind of good facilities, but when it comes to Jerusalem that must be an exception to all other cities in the world, and what is yet more mysterious is, that those who make the most fuss about the absence of water in Palestine, do not live in that country, and more than that, they are not willing, on this question, to trust one who knows all about it. We allude to Moses, the inspired writer. In Deuteronomy 8:7 he says, "For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of the valleys and hills."

Yes, it is a land of brooks of water, and many springs in the valleys and on the hills, yet it is a dry country where no living water is to be found. In this connection the following lines aptly express the absurdity of the Pedobaptists' position:

"If John, as many lately say,
Though Luke may lean another way,
Existed in the Jewish state,
Our friends would please us to relate,
What section in the Jewish book,
Requir'd the work he undertook.

But leaving things of other moment,
To those whose business 'tis to comment,
We can but feel a wish to know
Why John should keep the water so.
If sprinkling might have been the mode,
Why should he take so long a road?
Or, if he design'd to pour,
Why then to Enon take a tour?
The answer comes as quick as wink,
The man was looking out for drink,
And kindly seeking watering places
'For horses, camels, mules and asses.'
The reason seems as clear as day,
As Pedobaptists wisely say,
Why John chose out a watery station,
To do the work he was engaged in,
'Tis plain that multitudes came out
From all the region round about;
'Tis likely too, we lately hear,
Th' encampment lasted more'n a year,
And who but Baptists once could think
That man and beast would want no drink?

This question answered with such ease,
We'll state another if you please:
Admitting John a public eater,
Providing man and beast with water,
And that his mind was more intent
On drink, than on the sacrament,
And having now obtained his end,
And near by Jordan made a stand,
We humbly ask, if 'tis no sin,
Why he should need to enter in?
To this full many have reply'd,
And here's the answer cut and dry'd:
That since the concourse was so poor,
There was not found in all their store,
A basin, picher, or a cup,
With which to bade the water up,
'Tis likely John, as others do,
Proceeded down a step or two
In Jordan's stream, to take a stand,
To do what might be done on land.
But ere we give the subject o'er,
We beg to ask one question more.

Since John was so intent on thinking,
To find conveniences for drinking,
'Tis wondrous strange he had not thought
To bring, or see some one had brought
Some vessel Jordan's wave to bade in,
Which might have sav'd him tedious wading.
You'd think, to help the water-fetchers,
He'd brought a load of pails and pitters.

Though old divines could tame the Greek,
And learned what it design'd to speak;
Yet moderns find it strangely wild,
They chase it hard through flood and field,
And strive with industry and pain
To overtake it, but in vain.
O Luther, Calvin, Poole, and Wall,
And lexicographers, and all,
What pity ere ye drew the quill,

Our moderns of superior skill
Were not at hand to show you how Baptizo may be rendered now.

Though you so oft have made assertion,
Its meaning primely is immersion;
Yet such improvements have been made,
To give the cause of sprinkling aid,
Our critics in this learned day,
Have the great modesty to say,
Its meaning can't be ascertain'd
And sprinkling, pouring, washing, cleaning,
May be its true and native meaning.
The most specific sense they get,
The term imports somehow to wet;
If water only be apply'd,
That will suffice, can't be denied.
Each one may choose his manner now,
If each is pleased, no matter how.
No matter how? Then why is't where?
And why the crown of face prefer?
Why should the region of the nose
Be deem'd more fit than of the toes,
Why should you not baptize the hands,
To execute divine commands?
The feet, to run the Christian road?
The shoulders, to sustain the load?
The neck, the Christian yoke to bear,
And serve the Lord with holy fear?
Why not the sacred rite impart
About the region of the heart?
What, in the nature of the case,
Should make you always choose the face?

'Tis something strange, we freely own,
That those who preach immersion down,
Should, after all the things they say,
Consent to tread this frantic way,
And from the pulpit straight repair
To practice what they censur'd there."

TRUTH.

BY GEORGE WORST.

"Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth."
—John 17:17.

TRUTH is a principle that should be largely developed in every man and woman, and especially in those of the household of faith. Truth is a principle that should govern us in all our sayings, and in all our doings. It is the opposite of error. Truth and error cannot peaceably dwell together. Truth and error ruined our race. If truth had been presented to our first parents, they would not have transgressed the Lord's commands in the garden of Eden. If error alone had been presented, they perhaps, would have seen the design of the tempter, and would not have yielded to his entreaties. But truth and error, mingled together, deceived them, and thereby the deceiver accomplished his object, and the fall of man was the result. O, what misery and suffering followed! because they did not strictly hear what the Lord commanded them. They could no longer stay in that glorious paradise which God made for them, and in which he placed them, but must go out and till the ground, from which they were made, and in sorrow eat of the fruit of their labor all the days of their life, until they would again return to dust.

Sickness, sorrow and death were entailed upon the whole human race, because of the transgression, and by our first parents' yielding to the tempter's entreaties, there was a principle begotten in the human race, that is seen and felt in our business transactions in everyday life. We may look in what direction we will, and see the spirit of deception practiced, or at least attempted. We see truth and error mixed together to accomplish objects of advantage by the party who desires to gain a given point, and we are sorry to say, that it is not always by those that do not profess the religion of Jesus Christ. God is true, in Him is no lie at all.

The Savior's high-priestly prayer for His disciples was, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." Now according to the Savior's prayer, His disciples are set apart, by the truth of God's Word, from all deception and error, not only those of the twelve, but those of His disciples in all ages of the world, and when that principle of truth does not manifest itself in those who denominate themselves, the disciples of Christ, it is a self-evident fact that they do not belong to God, but stand in opposition to Him, and have been poisoned by him, who goeth about seeking whom he may devour. Our world is full of religious books and tracts, so-called, with truth and error mixed. Pulpits are supplied with preachers who deal out truth and error and palm it off for godliness.

Now, dear reader, since God is truth, and His Word is truth, be not deceived by that religion which is prevailing in our corruptible world, for it is wicked to deceive, or to mix truth and error together, or lie outright. The Bible says, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God" (Ps. 9:17). God has seen fit, in His own judgment, to punish the wicked—the evil doer, the liar, and deceiver, and withal the threatened judgment of God shown forth in His revealed Word. It is horrible, it is remarkable, and it is wonderful to behold the sayings and doings of mankind, showing forth one idea, at least, that the devil has great power, and influence among the children of men, and no doubt because of that begotten principle which originated in the days of Adam. But thanks be to God, that power is not all-powerful. The Bible says, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpents head," which was done in the person of Jesus Christ; and through His suffering and death, has made it possible for us to overcome that principle of deception, by being willing to receiving that Word of truth, which will make us free, "and if the truth, makes us free, then are we free indeed." We need not fear to take God at His word, for it is written that it is impossible for God to lie. It is contrary to His prerogative. The Savior said to His disciples, "If I go away, I will send the comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, which will lead you into all truth," not part truth and part error, but the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Brethren and sisters, let this God-given principle be the rule of practice in everyday life. Speak the truth with our neighbor, act out the truth in our dealings, and in every act of our lives. Let us be above suspicion, that even the world may never have cause to say aught against our integrity, and God will bless us in life. He will bless us in death, and afterwards will say to us, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that worketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh truth in his heart" (Psalm 15:1, 2). From the above, we see what encouragement we get from Holy Writ, for uprightness, love of truth, for righteousness, and true holiness, whose pages are filled from Genesis to Revelation. But indignation and wrath against the unrighteous, the unholy, the liar, and deceiver. The gate of heaven will be closed against all such, for they are an abomination in the sight of God, and their final end is vividly portrayed in the Book of God.

No man, however holy, may conclude himself exempt from temptation of some kind, for God manifest in the flesh was most sorely tempted. We need not conclude it sin to be severely tempted, for Christ was tempted to worship the devil. If faithful, we have the consoling thought that we shall not be tempted above that which we are able to bear. A constant effort at resisting temptation tends to make one stronger in the faith, and more zealous in the Master's work, and if sanctified to our good is not without its beneficial effects.

The Perfect Plan of Salvation, or Safe Ground is now ready for filing orders. The pamphlet, since its first appearance, has had an extensive circulation, having already passed into the fourth edition. It is a neatly printed and well bound pamphlet of 37 pages, showing that the position occupied by the Brethren is infallibly safe. Price 10 cents, or 12 copies $1.00.

Peter says, "The time will come when they (the people) will not endure sound doctrine" (2 Tim. 4:3), and from the stir the pointed truth sometimes makes in the camp of professing Christians, it is reasonable to presume that time is fully at hand. There is an increasing demand for this smooth, harmless (?) preaching that will suit everybody and hit none. Bold and fearless preachers, who are full of wisdom and prudence are becoming a scarce article.

By referring to the Gleaning department, it will be seen that a number of Brethren in Iowa think of finding homes in the West. Hope they all may be successful enough to find homes in one locality and thus render their new homes more pleasant.

Some one from Millersburg, Ind., sends pay for fifty copies of the Children at Work, but fails to give his name. Hope this notice will meet his eye.

I'VE BEEN THINKING.

I'VE been thinking, I've been thinking,
What a glorious world were this.
Did folks mind their business more,
And mind their neighbor's less;
For instance, you and I, my friend,
Are sadly prone to talk
Of matters that concern us not,
And others' follies mock.

I've been thinking, if we'd begin
To mind our own affairs,
That possibly our neighbors might
Contrive to manage theirs.
We've faults enough at home to mend—
It may be so with others;
It would seem strange if it were not,
Since all mankind are brothers.

Oh! would that we had charity
For every man and woman;
Forgiveness is the mark of those Who know "to err is human."
Then let us banish jealousy—
Let's lift our fallen brother;
Aid us we journey down life's road,
Do good to one another.

SELECTED THOUGHTS.

—Reader, salvation is very near you. Do not lose heaven for want of asking. Go this day, and take the first step toward the kingdom.—E. R. Stigler.

—The love of Christ is fixed in its objects, free in its communications, unwearied in its exercise, and eternal in its duration: here stands the believer's comfort.

—It is easy for a man to murder his neighbor, in the sight of God, by a secret wish, and a passionate desire: "He that hateth his brother is a murderer," says Inspiration.

—A charitable lady in London established a home in that city for women who had fallen victims to intemperance. In nine months the applications were 500, and of these 42 were from ladies of rank.

—As I have watered flowers, I would see a lone flower, withering, dying. I knew it would die, though it struggled hard for life. I felt a strange, brother-like sympathy for it. I watered it that I might help it in this struggle, in which we are all engaged.

—An easy-going piety will never accomplish any good. It will fail of its own growth and development, and it will produce no good results in its application to surrounding life. It is the earnest striving, the diligent, unwearied activity that will secure the right results of the Gospel.

—Luther said he preached so that the maid with the children behind the door could understand him, and then the doctors of divinity also in his congregation could comprehend his discourse. I found one hundred words in a bishop's able sermon that was given me to read which I know the people would not understand.

—We must be given to prayer, more and more; and to the diligent, careful, habitual reading of the Word of God. Be not tempted from this by many labors. I never go to work without first having a full meal for my soul. The spirit of our work is the great thing; so do not neglect your own vineyard for any other, for if your soul suffers, your work will suffer. Read the Bible consecutively, and for yourselves and not for others. Then practice what you read, confessing to God your failures to do it.

—PROFLIGACY.—He that has never suffered extreme adversity, knows not the full extent of his own depravation; and he that has never enjoyed the summit of prosperity, is equally ignorant how far the iniquity of others can go. For our adversity will excite temptation in ourselves, our prosperity in others. Sir Robert Walpole observed, "I was fortunate that few men could be Prime Ministers, because it was fortunate that few men could know the abandoned profligacy of the human mind."

—SCANDAL.—It was the saying of an old acquaintance of ours, when his attention was called to anything that had a smacking of scandal in it, "I have so much to do that I cannot hear it. One-half my time is taken up with my own business, the other half with letting alone that of my neighbors." How many excellent opportunities of letting alone other people's business are slighted, and the world is troubled with the interference of people with what does not concern them! Neighborhoods are driven crazy by reports of idle or mischievous people who watch for occasions of scandal, and lose no opportunity of making it public, regardless of its truth, or of the injury it inflicts upon the feelings of others. Gossip passes for fact, and surmise for history.

WORLDLY CONFORMITY.

THE Church will soon be under the necessity of returning to the old habits of plain dress, in order to distinguish her members from the people of the world. Some external badge will soon be required. The disposition, the natural expression of character, the general tone of the conduct, ought to plainly indicate the follower of Christ; and they always do when the Christly spirit has supremacy in the soul. But the absence of this inner-life force and the fruits of the Spirit in the character, puzzles the most observant and calculating to know who is a Christian and who is not.

Some Christians label themselves with verbal professions, and imagine that this boastful advertisement of their piety will be a sufficient guarantee to the world of their genuineness. But alas! the profession challenges inspection of conduct, and the heart and the tongue do not always agree. The deficiency in character is supposed to be supplemented by profession; but blossoms can never take the place of fruit to hungry men. "What do you more than others?" was the test of a disciple by our Lord. Sinners can hate, publicans can love those who love them, men generally can do acts of kindness when they expect returns; but "I say unto you, Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you." "What do you more than others?"

The world is ready to see and must admire Christian acts. As soon would men curse flowers, as censure or condemn self-sacrificing and Christian deeds. They have a winning and commanding power, and claim the respect of even the wicked, and the admiration of all. Character and conduct, the fountain and streams of Christian life, are the true marks of a disciple. He needs no other badge, no external ensign, no advertising of his virtues—his spirit and the tone of his conduct are sufficiently convincing.

But alas! where do we see this difference in character and conduct? The professing Christian, in his love and eagerness for money-making, and the tenacity with which he holds earthly possessions, does not look like "a pilgrim of earth" journeying to heaven. He carries the world on his back and the cross in his hand. Silly mortal! The burden impedes his progress, and then he must throw off the heavy load before he can enter the narrow way that leads to life.

We see the same similarity between the church and the world in the character of their pleasures. The Christian is presumed to find his chief delights in Christian service, the worship of God, and helping his fellow-men into the pool of healing; but this is not the case. Sabbath devotion is a duty, and worldly amusements a delight. The church is neglected for the pleasure of attending the opera and theatre. Not to enter in a discussion of the sinfulness of such conduct, to say the least, this tendency of the life shows where the heart is, and what kind of food best suits these worldly church members.

If a man's enjoyment and chief delight is not in Christian service, he does not love Christ supremely. If he is not living for heaven, and endeavoring to become more and more like his Master, he has not realized the resurrecting power of Christ in his soul. When a soul is converted, a new spirit is put within man, with new affinities and tendencies, and he dies to sin and lives unto God. He renounces all criminal and forbidden pleasures. This world loses his heart, he lives for heaven, and knows no authority but that of Christ. Worldly conformity is like seeking like. Tendencies are signs of character. The true Christian is not at home in this world. He is seeking conformity to Christ and meekness for heaven.—Selected.

TO THE YOUNG.

BY WILFRED RICE.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6: 33.

YOUTH is the time to serve the Lord. When the evil days come, how hard we have to fight the enemy of souls! I have had experience how the wicked one will try to make shipwreck of our convictions of sin. If we are young, he will tell us we are too young to serve the Lord; we would better wait till we get older. These things will only make it all the harder to follow Jesus. When we get older, we grow harder in sin, and if we fight against conviction, or the gentle voice of the Spirit, we may have to say with others: "The Spirit does not always strive with me." Oh! what a lamentable condition we are in, if the Spirit once ceaseth to strive with us! If persons wait till they have chosen a companion in life, and think then it will be better to start in the service of the Lord, they may be sadly disappointed. The husband may think one way and the wife the other. One may wish to obey the Lord, and the other not, and so there would be contention, and it might be like the one that was bidden to a great supper, and said, "I have married a wife and, therefore, cannot come."

Seek the Lord, and seek Him first, and if we seek Him lawfully, we will find Him. How easy it would be for the young to comply with our text, if they would only submit to the ways of the Lord. They could come to Christ as easy as the young maiden arose when Christ bade her.

THE HEAVENLY ROAD.

BY J. W. SOUTHWOOD.

THE road to heaven is a strait and narrow one, and on either side is a worldly wilderness full of wild and beautiful flowers, and many other things that allure and tempt the Christian to leave the glory-bound way, and seek the pleasures of this world.

Now as there is a broad way leading to destruction, which is the sum total of all the many roads that traverse promiscuously through the wilderness, and also of the wilderness itself, it is very necessary to know how to get on this heavenly road, and also to know at the many crossings and divergings which is the right road, as the wilderness ways often cross the Christian's path, and at the divergings we often find Satan's agents, who invade, and even insist to almost compulsion to have us take another way, especially if they think we are not very well acquainted with the road, or our Guide-book.

Then let me advise all to get the guide-book, which is the New Testament, and in it will be found directions not only how to get on this heavenly road, but also how to keep on it. In it we find that in order to get on this road, we must first have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, we must repent of our sins; and third, be baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. When we have thus complied, other things being right, we are on the road. Now let us start on immediately as it is not a road of idleness; and as we travel on, if we should see by the wayside some beautiful flowers in the form of fine styles, or anything else under the name of costly array or superfluities; let us not leave the road to gather them, but pass right on even if we should see nice rooms of entertainment in the form of balls, theatres and all other places of like amusements; for if we once leave the road, we run a great risk in losing our way, and getting on some of the wilderness roads, or else of not finding any road, but wander in the wilderness all day until the sun of life has set and the night of death is at hand, and we so far from heaven that we can never reach it, but have to sleep in the wilderness through an eternal night of misery and woe. O, how terrible! How awful such a doom!

Then let us not stop and gather vanities as we pass along, but let us press right on with Guide-book in hand. Presently some one says, "What does that mean?" Why, that is a finger-board; it will tell us which way to go in order to get to heaven. O, do look what a broad and beautiful looking road. Just see how much wider it is than the one we are on. But see, the finger-board that points down that road reads, destruction. What do you say? let us go down that road a little distance any way. O, no, brother; let us not leave the heavenly road. I know the finger-board does not say how far down that road it is to destruction, but I dare say it is not very far. O, but do see how many are going that way; surely that must be the right way. Where is your guide-book? Here it is. Well just turn to Matt. 7: 13, 14, and you will find that the road to destruction is broad, and has many travelers, while the road to heaven is narrow and has but few. That is sufficient; I will not leave this strait and narrow way.

And thus we pass along. But look! there is a road leading off to the left. Well, just wait till we read the letters on the guide-post. We read the one that points straight on, and it tells us that this is the road to heaven. Let us look and see what the other says. Oh, brother! what are we to do now? It says this is the way to heaven; how shall we know which way to go? Why, just keep straight on. O, no; this other way looks like it has been traveled more, and is an easier road to travel on; my opinion is, that this is the right way. Have you lost your Guide-book? O, no. Well what does it say are some of the Christian duties? Well, it says they ought to wash one another's feet, and as we look over the guide-book we find mention made of the Lord's Supper, and also saluting one another with a holy kiss or kiss of charity, and many other things. Well that is enough. Now, do you see any signs of these duties along this left hand road? Look as far down the road as you can see without going on it. Do you see any? No, not even a shadow of them. Now look up this strait and narrow way and see if you can see any along it. O, yes; I see them plainly. Well, then, let us go on; but do not forget your Guide-book.

Are we not almost to heaven? I do not know; our journey may be a very short one, or we may have to travel on quite awhile yet. Do you think we shall have any more temptations? O, yes. We may expect temptations more or less, all along our journey, and even light afflictions, but they will work for us a far more and exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Who's that standing there at the cross roads? I do not know. Perhaps we will when we get there. He looks like he is waiting for us. "Hurry up, if you are going my road!" Which is your road? "This one," says he, "on which all popular men travel." Well then we are not going your road. We intend to keep straight on. "Where are you bound for, up that narrow road?" We are bound for heaven. "Bound for heaven! Why that is just where I am going; so come along and go with me." Why so? will not this narrow way lead to heaven? "Yes," says he, "but this road on which I am traveling is such a very popular one." Now let me ask, are you sure your popular road, as you call it, will lead you to heaven? "O yes, sir," says he. Well, how do you know it will? "Why, sir, because our preacher and guide-book say so." Where did your preacher get his authority from? "From our guide-book, I suppose." Who is the author of your guide-book? "I do not know, certain, but I presume the founder of our church." When did he live? "I could not say, exactly, but I think about as far back as the sixteenth or seventeenth century." How did you get on your popular road? "Why, sir, by faith, of course." He had to take three steps to get on this road, namely: faith, repentance, and baptism. "Baptism! Why, do you not know that baptism was done away with long time ago? and also all those other non-essentials, such as Feet-washing, the Lord's Supper, non-conformity, the kiss, etc.?" Why, sir, my guide-book contains none of these; it only requires us to go to meeting; so you see the way is easy; then come along and go with me.

Brother, shall we go with him and his man, made doctrine, and thereby miss heaven and immortal glory? or shall we follow our Guide-book whose author is the Lord Jesus Christ and thus reach heaven, where we may bask in the sun-bright climes of eternal glory and bliss, and reign with Christ forever and ever?

"THE STRAIT GATE."

IN a sermon preached recently by a celebrated clergyman from the text: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate" (Luke 13: 24), he gave the following description: "Alongside of the great gate, through which people and camels passed into an ancient city, and which was closed in the evening, was a narrow gate. Through this narrow gate, called the 'Needle's Eye,' the belated traveler could, with difficulty, force his camel."

The gates in the walled portions of Constantinople and Smyrna are, I think, good representatives of walled Oriental cities. The small, or strait gates, through which I have often passed, some of them near the great gates, and others in more retired portions, would not admit a camel.

I was a witness to a good illustration of this, when returning after sunset, from a visit to a hospital outside of the walled part of Smyrna. We were overtaken by the English chaplain, a very corpulent man. "What shall we do?" he asked, "the gates are closed." Find the "strait gate," the "Needle's Eye," I replied. After a little search we found it, and we ladies were easily admitted, but it was with much tugging and pulling that we brought the burly chaplain through. "Well," said he, "I now see the force of our Lord's words: 'It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man (he who trusts in riches) to enter into the kingdom of God'" (Mark 10: 25).

—Mrs. C. H. Lohd.

It is to be feared that thousands even of intelligent persons who are supposed to be religious beings, have no conception of the greatness of the idea of duty, or moral accountability, of the meaning of the word "ought." But it is certain that nothing is done well until it is done from the sense of a controlling principle of inherent and essential rightness. Duty is the child of love, and therefore there is power in all its teachings and commands.

Mineral Creek Love-feast, Johnson Co., Mo., Tuesday, October 1st, 1878. S. S. MOHLER.

The Brethren in the church of Monroe Co., Ia., intend, the Lord willing, to hold a Communion meeting the 10th of August at Peter Miller's, 2 miles South of Frederic station, commencing at five o'clock P. M. DANIEL MILLER.

A Love-feast has been appointed by the Mineral Creek congregation, Johnson Co., Mo., for Tuesday, Oct. 1st. S. S. MOHLER.

The Lord willing, we intend to have a Love-feast in the Stanislaus church, Cal., the first Saturday in October. We have some reason to hope for ministerial aid from Indiana, and also intend making an effort, to enable Bro. Stein of New-tonia, Mo., to pay us a visit and help us. P. S. GARMAN.

There will be a Communion Meeting at Whitesville Mo., Saturday, September, 7th. By Order of the Church, J. N. TAYLOR.

DIED.

Obituaries should be brief, written on but one side of the paper, and separate from all other business.

STOOPS.—Near Waynesboro, Pa., June 20th, 1878, fell "asleep in Jesus," brother Enoch Ambrose Stoops, aged 24 years, 11 months and 14 days.

A young wife, our sister in Christ, and two dear little children are left to mourn. May the widow's God be her God, to comfort and bless. May he grant her abundant grace to be faithful in all our profession, and to bring up those tender, precious children in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

Bro. Enoch found Christ as his Savior, embraced the faith, and was baptized into Christ, May 13th, 1877. Thus he chose that good part which was not taken from him. Nay, but he grew stronger in the doctrine as he came the nearer to his life's end. He was a sufferer, being a consumptive for several years. His illness deprived him of meeting in regular assembly of the Lord's chosen ones, here in the Antietam congregation of the Brethren, and consequently had to forego many precious privileges. On the last Sabbath in May last, by request, he received the "anointing with oil in the name of the Lord." On the evening of the 15th inst., (June) we had the consolation of participating with him in a special Love-feast, the first he was privileged to enjoy since his admission into the church. Long, long will I remember this occasion. O how joyful were his expressed feelings, as upon his bed at the close of the services he embraced us all and wept for joy, speaking of the meeting over on the other side of death's dark river. In less than one week after he was relieved of his sufferings in the body, and was welcomed home to enjoy the rest that remains for the people of God.

"Asleep in Jesus! Blessed sleep, From which none ever wakes to weep; A calm and undisturbed repose, Unbroken by the last of foes."

We hope and we pray that the fare-well words he addressed to the unconverted friends, will not only be remembered, but improved by a turning to the Lord, and a living embrace of the "Faith once delivered to the saints."

There is room for all. Come, "bring forth your hearts for repentance," "believe the Gospel," "walk in newness of life," and "save yourselves from this ungodly generation."—Come, for "all things are now ready," as soon as you are ready.

"All the fitness He requireth, Is to feel your need of Him." Delay not. Come!

The funeral discourse was preached on Sabbath, June 23rd, to a large concourse of sympathizing friends by brother J. E. Oiler, from the words, "If a man die, shall he live again?"

Lucinda V. Arnold, aged 4 years, 7 months and 21 days.

She leaves dear parents, a loving, little sister, and many friends to mourn their sad loss. She is gone, but not forgotten. Funeral improved from Mark 10: 14, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

G. S. ARNOLD.

BIXLER.—In the East Nimishillen church, Stark Co., O., May 27th, Ellen Bixler, daughter of Bro. George and Lydia Bixler, aged 20 years, 4 months and 12 days.

The deceased had been working away from home, and one evening she went to a neighbor's house, where her aunt was living, and during the night she was taken with the inflammation of the bowels, which caused her unexpected death. She led a quiet and peaceable life, here on earth, and was beloved by all who knew her. A more sympathetic funeral we never witnessed. At times she was very much under conviction, but through some means she was persuaded to put off coming to Christ until too late. We hope that if there are any into whose hands this may fall, guilty of hindering souls from coming to Christ, that they will consider what their condition may be, supposing it to be the will of the Lord to bring those hindered souls up as witnesses against them in the final day of judgment. Funeral services by elder David Young in German, and by the writer from 1 Peter 1: 24. J. J. HOOVER.

FLICKINGER.—In the Big Grove church, Benton Co., Iowa, sister Christina Flickinger, aged 60 years, 2 months, and 16 days. Funeral services from 1 Cor. 15: 22, to an attentive audience. S. JOHNSON.

NEAD.—James Alexander Nead was born in Washington Co., Tenn., Dec. 23rd, 1856, and departed this life June 14th, 1878, aged 21 years, 5 months and 21 days. Funeral from 1 Peter 1: 24, 25. J. B. PENCE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Bettie Barnhart.

To the Panther Creek Church, Ill.:—

I HAVE long been thinking of writing to you, since we have moved to this part of the country, through this good paper, which we could not well get along without. It reaches us every week and brings us news from loved ones, who are severed far from us. There are many whom we never expect to meet in this world, but hope that we may also live that we may all be members with the redeemed in that celestial city above.

We are happy in our new home and feel somewhat encouraged since we have organized. We now have preaching every second and fourth Sunday of each month, and have very good congregations, good attention, and kind friends and neighbors around us. There are but few of us yet in an organization, but hope, ere long many more will be gathered into the fold.

I often think of you in your Sabbath-school, and hope there may be much good done, and that many dear little boys and girls whom we so much love, may not forget the good instructions received from their teachers. Hope they may grow up to be useful in the church. Those who act as teachers, should be very careful to impress Bible truths into their hearts, so as to bring them into such a state of faith, love and holiness, as to be meet to love God.

We are oftentimes prone to wander from the path of our duty, but we should be on our guard. We may lay it down as a principle in the religious life, that everything is wrong in regard to which we cannot ask the divine direction and blessing. When we sin, we are sometimes like our first parents,—we try to hide ourselves from the all-seeing eyes. It is the nature of a pure heart alone, to always seek God. Our language should always be, "My father what wilt thou have me to do. We often think of the many loved ones, who are yet outside of the fold of Christ. Oh, think for a moment what an awful thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God and that unprepared. Oh, reflect, thou hast a soul to save. Come to Jesus while you may, and for this purpose it is absolutely necessary to take the first step, which is confession of sins. But there is no true confession of sin where there is not at the same time a turning away from it.

Where God has fully prepared the heart for religious action, we need not fear that he will fail to find for us our appropriate work. It is good to take up and bear the Cross, whatever it may be, which God sees fit to impose. But it is not good and not safe to make crosses of our own, and by an act of our own choice to impose upon ourselves burdens which God does not authorize. Then, dear brethren and sisters, let us all be on our guard and try to walk the narrow path which leads to life eternal. We have many troubles, trials and temptations to overcome, but if we put our trust in God, He will be a Friend that sticketh closer than a brother. My prayer is, that, if we meet no more on earth, I pray to God that we may all meet on the golden shores of eternity, there to wear bright crowns and robes of light, singing the sweet songs of Moses and the Lamb forever. Mansfield, Ill.

From Naperville, Ill.

Dear Brethren:—

OUR Love-feast, according to previous announcement came off on the fifteenth and sixteenth of this month. It was held at the house of Bro. John Hollinger, eight miles South of Joliet. This part of the Lord's vineyard being very much isolated from the brethren, though it belongs to the Naperville congregation, a goodly number of us had twenty-five to thirty miles to go. Naperville was well represented. Bro. Hollinger is a minister in the second degree, and, we believe a zealous worker in the vineyard of the Lord, being the only minister there. One precious soul was made willing to take up the cross and follow the Savior; may he ever prove faithful. Our brethren have been assisted by five ministers from abroad, namely, T. D. Lyon, J. W. Gephart, J. Y. Snively, D. Mast and K. Heckman. They labored earnestly in our behalf, and for the building up of Zion. May the good Lord richly bless them for their kind regards and earnest labors while with us. Noan Early.

From Douglas Co., Kansas.

Dear Brethren:—

WE, the Brethren of the Eight Mile congregation, Douglas Co., Kansas, held our Communion on June 1st and 2nd, at the house of Bro. Daniel Harader. Had a good meeting, and surely it seemed to be a soul-reviving feast. Had a large congregation, and held our meeting in a tent prepared for the purpose. Had good order generally, excepting little disturbances outside of the tent. We were much encouraged to hear the Brethren from different parts of the East, contend so strongly for the commandments and the ordinances of the house of God, and to show to the people our Gospel reasons for observing the same. The brethren also held a choice for help in the field. The lot for speakers fell on Bro. William Wise and Bro. Frederic Sherkey. Also held a choice for three deacons. The lot fell on Bro. Isaac Garst, Bro. James I. Kinzie, and Bro. Daniel A. Kinzie. We hope, this as well as all other parts of the brotherhood, will labor more earnestly for the ingathering of God's chosen people, for we know that many are exposed to the enemy, especially in this Western country. A BROTHER.

June 23.

From Hollidaysburg, Pa.

Dear Brethren:—

THE Lord is truly merciful to those that love and serve Him. Great and marvelous are his ways. Saturday and Sunday, June 15th and 16th were the days previously appointed for the Love-feast, with the dear brethren and sisters composing the Puncunville congregation. Be it understood that this congregation has two branches, one at Laversville and the other at Altoona, the whole distance about thirteen miles. There are three church buildings, the one here, being about midway between the other two. The Communion services are held here for all the members in the two branches, except last Fall and this Spring, the brethren and sisters of the Altoona branch, held a Love-feast at their own church building. But to return.

On Saturday, at 4 o'clock, P. M., the appointed hour, a large crowd of brethren, sisters and friends assembled, many from the congregations; also many friends from a distance. One precious soul was made to realize his sad condition in this life and turn in with the people of God. Previous to opening services, many assembled at the stream, a few rods from the church, and while the angels, we fully believe, looked down with delight, he was hurried beneath the placid waters and arose, to henceforth follow his blessed Master. May his faithfulness in the vineyard of the Lord continue until time shall be no more with him. When we think that one soul is of more value than the whole world, why should not we rejoice with the angels in heaven at the conversion of one of these chosen ones.

A goodly number of ministers were present. Bro. Stephen Hildabrand of Coneinaugh congregation, brethren Samuel Cox and S. S. Grey of Warrior's Mark, Bro. Joseph Snowberger and Bro. Musselman from near Williamsburg, and Bro. Joseph Wilt of Clarr's congregation. Also Bro. Graybill Meyers, James, Brice and David Sell, the resident ministers.

Subject of examination by brethren Hildabrand, Cox and Snowberger. Did not have the opportunity of attending the evening services, but learned that the brethren did not shun to declare the coming wrath to the negligent sinner. Trust the many tears that were shed at the affecting words and warnings, as they fell from the lips of the dear brethren, were not shed in vain.

Brethren Hildabrand, Cox and Wilt spoke to a large audience on Sabbath morning. Sunday-school which usually convened at 9 o'clock, A. M., was omitted. This is the first S. S. ever held by the Brethren here, and as it is in a prosperous condition, it is to be hoped that it may accomplish much good. God speed the noble work! Services again on Sabbath afternoon at 4 o'clock. The congregation was somewhat diminished, as many had returned to their homes. That old, familiar hymn, 500 was read by Bro. Musselman and sang by the entire congregation. Bro. Snowberger spoke from Matt. 11: 28-30, followed by Bro. Grey, who spoke of the fountain filled with blood.—That precious, blood-bought fountain, who would not desire to slake their thirst from its rolling waters! Sinner, heed the warning call! Let not the good seed fall in stony places. Accept the precious invitation. Christ stands with outstretched arms to receive you and save you from that danger which awaits you. A thought by Bro. Brice Sell, and the meeting closed.

Nevermore can we meet in a similar church capacity here on earth, but dear brethren and sisters, strive more earnestly to enjoy that meeting that knows no parting. Some of the brethren held services at Laversville in the evening. May the Lord bless the wholesome truths spoken during this meeting. Although but one soul was added to the fold, we feel that many more are near the Kingdom. Sinner, delay not! Sad may be your fate. The next moment may be your last. Await not a more convenient season, for it may never come, and your end would then be eternal destruction.

LATER.—Since writing the above, another brother has been added to the fold.

E. R. STIFLER.

Notes of Travel.

Dear Brethren:—

AFTER leaving A. M., we came to Dodger town; then to Warsaw, where Bro. Stein and D. A. Workman held very interesting meetings, and we learn with good results. We came West to Northern Indiana, to labor in the interest of Ashland College, and am happy to say that at this writing not a single brother refused to do something for the enterprise, though the Brethren are generally not as well off here, as in some other parts. When the Brethren find out, that this school is being established with the aim of educating our sons and daughters so as to retain the distinctive features of our church, and not indulge in pride and vanity, they invariably endorse the movement. Hence it becomes us, who are engaged in this great work, that we conduct it in such a way as always to merit the entire confidence of the brotherhood. To do this, we must forget self entirely,—let the ego altogether out of the question, and labor only to the glory of God to the welfare of the rising generation. S. Z. SHARP.

Dear Brethren:—

IF there are any laboring brethren, who wish to emigrate to Nebraska, we would be pleased to have them come here as there are but few members in this vicinity, and no speaker. We have been living here some over a year and have not had preaching by the Brethren but once. This is a beautiful and fertile country, and we would like it here very well, if we only had preaching oftener.

Yours in Christ,

SENNAR OXLEY.

Love is the golden chain that binds the hearts of the children of God.

Condition of the World.

WE cannot fail to observe that the tendencies to evil to-day, should prompt every follower of Jesus Christ to watch and pray. "Watch therefore, for ye know not, what hour your Lord doth come." That is the language of the Savior and a true saying. Little do we know as to the hour, in what form or by what means He may appear. There is no doubt but that there are thousands upon thousands of individuals to-day, unconcerned about the affairs of this, and the prospects of a better world to come. Believe me, dear reader, whether you countenance this article or not; there is to-day rapping at every door in the land, a monster that betokens trouble of a darker hue than the blackness of midnight. We are told that on that great day, many shall come, but few be chosen. We are also told that God's people are those that make up the fewest in number.

O how sad it seems, that man with all his advantages, with all the chances imaginable of doing right, will persist in doing wrong, and barter his soul for eternal ruin. Wars, famines and pestilences; peace, comfort and plenty, all these may befall man, and yet they do not bring about the results, intended by our divine Master. There is a time when forbearance ceases to be a virtue. Society after society is being instituted all over the land, one claiming this, and another that doctrine to be right. And if the truth has only one meaning, and the opinions of men admit of various interpretations, some must certainly be in error. There can be none right except they follow the teachings of the Savior. We were forewarned many years ago, of just such times as the signs indicate to-day. God's children ought not to be ignorant of the present state of affairs.

In conclusion I will say that it is the duty of every follower of Jesus, not to turn the poor from their door, who are starving for the want of temporal and spiritual food. Be kind to the poor, for the Savior has told us, that we have them always with us, and that it is in our power to do them good.

G. W. MILLER.

Liberty, Ill.

From Iowa.

Dear Brethren:—

It is not often that we see anything in your columns from this arm of the church, (Cold Water district) so I thought I would drop you a few items of news if you think them worthy a place in the columns of your worthy and excellent paper.

First of all then I would say, that this arm of the church is in a prosperous condition. Souls are still brought to Christ by the Spirit of Truth, and sinners are made to tremble. Some of them, like Agrippa of old, are almost persuaded to be Christians. I would further remark that our Love-feast is one of the things of the past, and I can truly say that it was indeed a feast of love. It was truly a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord, to sit and listen to the able and convincing Christian discourses from our dear brethren, Eld. John Wise and Wm. Ikenberry from Waterloo, Blackhawk Co., Iowa. May God bless and reward them for their labor of love whilst among us.

Among the incidents that occurred, are two that are worthy of special notice. The first one is that of a blind man, who has been a worshiper of God and His Son for upwards of forty years, but not according to knowledge. He spent a great portion of his time in seeking for the truth, and, although he was sightless he could see that there was still a more perfect way, and he looked forward in joyful anticipation to the day, when he would find a people that could direct and instruct him in the truth more perfectly. At last he found a Priscilla and an Aquila, who instructed him more fully. He was directed to come to Greene, Butler Co., Iowa, and make his abode known to the Brethren here. So he came among us a few days before our Love-feast and conversed with the Brethren upon the subject nearest his heart, and it was found that his views were in record with those of the Brethren. He was therefore baptized according to the Gospel, and is now numbered with the saints of God and sent on his way rejoicing.

It would have done your soul good, brethren, if you could have been here and seen and heard him give in his testimony for Jesus. His cup of joy was full and running over. Tears were shed, and saints rejoiced to see and hear that dear, old blind brother. May the Lord go with him and the Brethren greet him wherever he goes, is my prayer.

Next is the case of a middle-aged sister, who formerly was a member of the M. E. church. Her home is thirty miles from here, but she was brought here by our beloved brother Humphrey Tallhelm. The spirit had been operating on her heart for a long time. She at last gave way to the Spirit's pleadings and knocked at the door of the church for admittance. Her knock was heard, and the door was opened. And now let me call your attention to the peculiar part of the case.

She requested that the administrator should have certain qualifications. Now listen, my dear brethren, and especially ministering brethren, ye lay it to heart, ponder it well, and measure it by the true standard, the Word of Truth, the Holy Scriptures, if you are guilty of giving way to the cravings of an unnatural appetite, or if you neglect to make use of the food that nourishes the inner or spiritual man. Listen then to the First Qualification. He must be free from the use of tobacco.

Second Qualification. He must have a man that has erected the family altar and bows at its shrine.

Now my dear brethren, especially those that are set apart in the high and holy calling as ministers of the Gospel, can you say, each one for himself: "I am qualified to perform the Holy ordinance of baptism according to the Gospel and the above request?" Or must you condemn yourself in this thing which you permit, and which disqualifies you to perform the sacred rite?

God help us all, so we may be able to work in the vineyard of the Lord with clean hands and a pure heart, so that we will not be judged unworthy and be rejected as unclean. Let us be able with Paul to say: "If meat maketh my brother to offend, I will eat no more meat while the world stands." We should be ready at any time, to give an answer to every man that asketh, for the hope that is within us.

Yours in Christ,

NICHOLAS TRAPP.

From the Ephrata Church, Pa.

Dear Brethren:—

I WILL here say that we have lost two of our members lately by death, — one a sister of some forty years old, who left a large family of children and a husband to follow her to the grave; and on June 20th one of our old brethren was buried, aged a little over 84 years.

Thus we see that we have no abiding city here, but are pilgrims and strangers in this world, and must all pass away, whether we be rich or poor.

To-day, (June 30th) our ranks were filled up again, by three young persons being baptized, a husband and wife, and a young sister. They all appeared to have verily passed from death unto life, and as though they were not only half awake. Yes, it was a joyful scene, and very impressive to look on. The young sister, coming from the baptismal grave and embracing her mother with a firm grasp and shedding tears of joy, was a touching sight indeed. O how glad parents and children feel, when they have been rather estranged from each other through sin and its allurements, and then can come together again into one fold and walk humbly hand in hand towards the Golden City of the Living God, and the Lamb that redeemed them from sin and death.

O may we all, young and old, try to renew our baptismal vow and ever try to walk with greater care, that we may not lose our reward, but that we may receive the crown of glory that fadeth not away!

LEVI ANDES.

GLEANINGS.

From H. C. Lucas. — I have just returned home from Kentucky, where I had been for nearly a year. I did not associate with any Brethren there, and the world seemed dreary and lonesome to an humble follower of the Master. I find my greatest delight in the company of the children of God. I think, when I am a little more at leisure, to write some short articles for your excellent paper. I will likely engage in teaching this Fall, and want to be among the Brethren. I wish success to every lawful effort made in the interest of spreading the Gospel.

McComb, Ill.

From Limestone, Tenn. — We are having a very good season, and crops are good, except wheat which is generally light. Fruit of all kinds abundant. How thankful we should be to our heavenly Father for His bountiful gifts. The Brethren are generally in love and union as far as I know, and are trying to walk humbly with Him who is meek and lowly of heart. At our meeting last Sabbath, one young man gave his heart to the Lord, and was baptized. "O give thanks unto the Lord, call upon his name and make known his deeds among the people." J. B. PRUSE.

From Isaac Price. — The blessing of the Lord be with you! After an absence from my home, of three weeks, on a visit to a daughter and her family, I returned, improved in health and strength, and had the pleasure of reading the numbers, dated respectively, June 6th, 13th, and 20th at one sitting. I received the number dated June 27th to-day, from the perusal of which I turn to my pen to tell you that the reading of the paper is a comfort to me, and especially that of June 27th, containing so good an article on the A. M. O how it gladdened my heart to learn the result of the Council on Missions and the unity of the brethren at A. M. The suggestion of sister Hannah Knapp is excellent and may lead others into the same practice. I never could bear to see any of our religious periodicals used as wrapping paper. Sometimes I have handed them out, yet too many now lie dormant on my gullet. I think I shall try to scatter them around.

We at Green Tree, Montgomery Co., Pa., the home of Bro. Gottwals and self are at peace. The brethren and sisters meet often to speak of Jesus. Every Sunday morning for regular service. Every Sunday afternoon during the Summer for Sunday-school. Every Tuesday evening for prayer-meeting. Every Thursday evening for Bible class.

Bro. J. T. Meyers has made his home with us. He has lately preached in succession on the Trinity, on Baptism, and last Sunday Bro. Gottwals spoke on Feet-washing. Next Sunday Bro. Meyers expects to speak on Infant Baptism and in two weeks after, on Non-Conformity.

Schuylkill, Pa.

From Petit, Ind.—Our Communion meeting passed off very pleasantly, on the 6th of June. — It was the largest meeting ever held in this arm of the church. We all felt it was good to be there. Thirteen precious souls were added to the fold by baptism a few days before and at the meeting, which gave us much cause to rejoice. — Most all were from the Methodists and United Brethren. May the Lord bless them to live devoted to His service. Ministers present from a distance, Eld. Jacob Waggoner, Menno Stauffer and Henry Kuns from Ill. Brethren Martin Bowers, Isaac Billheimer, John W. Metzger, J. Cripe and Joseph Wagoner from adjoining congregations. The Lord bless them for their labors of love while amongst us. Yours in the one hope, G. W. CRIFE.

From Longmont, Col. — We arrived home from A. M., Monday morning, the 17th. Found all well. We have a prospect of abundant crops, have had heavy rains recently so that not much irrigation has been needed. A very large crop of wheat has been put out, so that the general crop will be large. Corn, oats, grass and vegetables promise to be unusually good. Small fruits are plenty. Where there are bearing orchards of apples, peaches, pears, cherries, etc., there is a fair crop, proving that Colorado may in time become a good fruit country. The grape crop also bids fair to be good. The vintage of the vineyard of the Lord, we hope, will be good also.

J. S. FLORY.

From Berrien Springs, Mich.—On the 22d of June we held our annual Communion meeting at Jacob Weaver's barn, four miles North of Buchanan. We number about ninety members, nearly all of whom were present. There were nine ministering brethren present, all of whom bore their share in the labors. Two were baptized on Saturday before the evening services commenced, and one reclaimed. Two additions on Sunday after services. Many were heard to exclaim: "We have truly enjoyed a spiritual feast." The weather on Saturday night was quite inclement, but there was a warmth of zeal amongst the assembled followers of the Lamb of God, as they washed and wiped their brethren's feet, and drank of the shed blood, and ate of the broken loaf. Such scenes bring to our mind the words of the great Master, spoken over eighteen hundred years ago to the little band of fisher-men that followed him: "And behold I am with you, even unto the end of the world."

LILLIA C. ISLERDIGHT.

From Sacramento, Cal.—My heart is made glad to see what great attention is given to our children by our editors, in publishing a paper for their especial benefit. That is a move in the right direction. It always was my opinion that children should be encouraged and have ample opportunities to grow up into experimental religion, when they become men and women. If the youth has been instructed in religious subjects and has a good understanding of the same, there will be no trouble about keeping in the right path afterwards. They will be strong and able to overcome all temptations, though they be young in years. When I consider the advantages the young have at the present time, and then consider the ignorance of my growing up, I almost wish I was a child with them yet. May God bless you in your labors of love for the young, that much good may be done. M. A. RIVALL.

From Carleton, Neb. — The good cause is still prospering in Bethel church. Two more have been added to the church, one the 15th of May, who had been almost persuaded, for some time; the other one, who had been seeking the true church for nine years, was baptized June 13. He has been preaching some, and is acquainted with about sixty different denominations. We think that he is well qualified to be of much use to the church. We thank God and take courage. J. E. BRYANT.

From Nebraska.—The Elk Creek feast came off on the 15th and 16th of June, and is now among the things of the past. It was one of unusual interest. The members appeared to be much refreshed and encouraged. We cannot forbear speaking of the excellent order and interest manifested by the people of Elk Creek during all the time of the meeting. It certainly speaks well for this community. The little church here was organized about a year ago with a membership of nine, but at this time only numbers seven, as two of them now live in the Beatrice church. A good, steady minister is much needed at this place, and I am especially requested to appeal to the brethren to use efforts that may induce some ministering brother to move among them. The country is good enough for any one who will work a little. C. FORTNEY.

From J. D. Switzer.—I accidentally made a mistake and sent some brother in Mishawaka, Indiana, his own letter back, and so have lost his name. Please notice in the paper, so he may see it and write again.

White Rock, Kansas.

From Lacon, Ill.—I would just say that Bro. J. R. Gish came up on the 20th of June and preached four sermons for us. As a result, one came out on the Lord's side and was baptized, confessing her sins. May the Lord keep her from turning again to the sinful world. I think there are more counting the cost. They would soon come, if we had more preaching. Hope, the Brethren will not forget us. H. C. LONG.

From N. C. Workman.—The Brethren of Northwestern Kansas and Southern Nebraska are hereby notified of the following: As there is quite a number of brethren and sisters that expect to go West and take homesteads this Fall or next Spring, we want to correspond with brethren living in the part of the country above named.—A committee is already appointed to visit the West to look out a location. They will start about the middle of September or first of October. We want to commence corresponding with brethren at once; there will be two or three speakers among the party seeking homes. Address me at once at Sciola, Montgomery Co., Ia.

From Missouri.—The labors of our Home Mission have commenced. Bro. Wm. B. Sell made a tour through Nodaway Co., and I have just returned from a tour into the South-western out-skirts. Preached in the town of Lawson, and the visible result of our labors so far have been, an average of two applicants for baptism to every five discourses delivered, besides many friendly greetings met, many favorable expressions heard, and signs of impressions seen. PERILOUS DAYS.

BY GEORGE D. ZOLLERS.

READ signs denote the woeful age,
 Described upon the sacred page,
 God did the holy men inspire,
 To tell us of these dangers dire,
 The least comes up with mighty sway,
 To lead men down destruction's way,
 An angel form in dread disguise,
 With fluent speech and charming eyes,
 With horns to match the harmless lamb,
 And millions fail to see the sham;
 With dragon's voice and hellish power,
 Beware ye saints it is his hour,
 Such are his deeds and wonders dark,
 And all the world receive his mark,
 Stand clear from all his vile intrigues,
 Lest we must share his dreadful plagues,
 Delusion like a current string,
 Now sweeps the multitude along;
 These wonders charm the curious eye,
 They spurn the truth and heed the lie,
 A dread commotion fills the world,
 The flags of battle are unfurled;
 Terrible storms with angry roar,
 The raging elements at war,
 What dark forebodings fill the mind,
 What desolation of mankind!
 The Lord will come in flaming fire,
 And terrible will be his ire,
 His power shall the heavens shake,
 Earth's mighty men shall fear and quake,
 His vengeance shall unsheathe the sword,
 And sin receive its grim reward.

A GREAT MONOSYLLABLE.

BY C. H. BAESBAUGH.

To Brother Levi Andes, of Lincoln, Pa.:

THE Angel of the Wilderness has you by the hand, and the All-seeing Eye is engineering your route. Ex. 23: 20; Ex. 13: 21; 1 Pet. 3: 12. Your way is marked by the blood-stained footprints of the sympathizing, Omnipotent Savior-God. A gracious Providence is verifying the wondrous declaration in Rom. 8: 28. The mortar-beds and brick-kilns are dry and fireless, the anguish of Pharaoh is past, and the gapping floods have clapped their hands over the vanquished oppressor. Ex. 14. The hornets are in the van, and the Canaanites tremble at the marvels of Jehovah-Jesus. Ex. 23: 28; Joshua 2: 24. Marah follows the host, and so does Ebn and the gushing Rock. Faith and anna go together, and so do rebellion and fiery serpents.

When God leads us into the wilderness, He will also supply lead us out again, unless through unbelief we dig our own grave. Dreadful is the provocation when God "swears in His wrath that we shall not enter into His rest." Heb. 3: 11. In the desert unpardonable sins are committed, and ineffable raptures experienced. There is the lightning-wreathed, thunder-speaking, God-crowned Sinai, and the glory-capped, Heaven-telescoping Nobosand Pisgahs. There the great Love-heart of Jehovah breathes its sweetest consolations and most ravishing promises into the ear of His Elect. Hos. 2: 14. Blessed be God that every soul has its Patmos, and its white stone inscribed with its Heavenly-enclosed Hieroglyph. Rev. 2: 17.

Love pours out the whole heart of God, and faith takes it all in. Faith is greater than reason, and is a match for God's most marvelous exhibitions of Wisdom and Power. Deity has nothing in His attributes that can outstrip the function of faith. But a child can puzzle and shame the loftiest attainments of the philosopher. "God manifest in the flesh" is not too high and glorious a truth for the faith of a child which is not yet ashamed to sit on its mother's lap; but too high for the reason of the dominions, principalities, and hierarchies of the Celestial Seminary.

Faith makes a short journey from bondage to liberty no matter how long the pilgrimage may be, "because it endures as seeing Him who is invisible." Miles struck into incalculable days dwindle into minutes. The Celestial Hours are ever ajar, and the eye and ear of faith get glimpses of the glories and snatch strains of the melodies of the Upper Sanctuary, and time and distance are annihilated. Faith turns forty years into forty days, while the discipline of perseverance and obstinacy gives them a millennial stretch. God is never in a hurry. The Eternal Years are His, and He can wait for His ends. Our selfish aims and dispositions compel the All-Good to make our furnace hot, and keep us long in the refining fires. It is hard for us poor apostates to believe that "God is love." When He is doing the very best for us, we often exclaim through tears and in bitterness of soul, "all these things are against me." Gen. 42: 36. It is impossible for us even to imagine how a Being feels who has not the slightest stain of sin. When we are opposed, or abused, or defied, our passions are apt to be aroused, and we relate ourselves to the offender vindictively, standing on our assumed dignity, satiating our injured feeling, and have it not as an object to gain, ennoble, and regenerate our enemy. Not so God. His anger is righteousness, His chastisement is principle, His rebukes and wounds are love. If we draw nigh to Him with pure motives and in right action in all things, we may be sure He will draw nigh to us, and vouchsafe us the consciousness of Fatherly Presence in our bitter and sorrowful experience.

Faith is a great word, comprising the all of life, and we cannot have it in the evangelic sense without having Christ with it. To have a real, living, saving, God-originated, God-owned faith, is to have a heart that does not condemn us. More; this self-approbation must be wholly grounded in the will of God. Some of our would-be-leaders in the Brotherhood cannot bear to have sectarianism scuttled, as they love the praise of men more than the praise of God. They think it a great honor to have college-bred infant-sprinklers come to our meetings, and even invite them behind the table and urge them to preach; but when their God-defying, Cross-spinning, soul-bleeding heresies and devices are branded with the authorized anathema of Heaven, these liberal brethren lift up their hands in horror as if the Divine arrangement were a matter of indifference. When some Beauregard rolls his thunder against the substitution of Divine Law, it must be modified with an Apology lest creed-makers be offended. "This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation." Ez. 19: 14. Reliable confidence towards God rests wholly in conformity to the provisions of Grace. The conscience is God in miniature, and is dependent on the Word for its right decisions. When God says baptism the conscience may not say sprinkling. When Jesus Christ says "learn of ME," "take my yoke upon you," the conscience seeks in vain for an anxious-bench to remove its sense of guilt. Heaven asks no Apology for the demolition of institutions which set at naught the wisdom and goodness of God. Faith has in it all the vigor, and rigor, and inflexibility, and tenderness, and long-suffering of God. Emmanuel is not less love when He says, "of you fathers the Devil," "O ye generation of vipers how can ye escape the damnation of hell," than when through blinding tears, and with a voice tremulous, with the palpitations of the heart of Deity. He says to the same class, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou ornest, HOW OFTEN would I have gathered you." It is one of the most harrowing trials for love to utter bitter, scorching denunciations, but it never thinks of apologizing, but rather turns from stern rebuke to the portals of tears and sincerity.

To exhibit a torn and tornish for the purely edificative character of the work of the Christian spirit, which has been dominantly ascribed to my uncompromising dissection of the inventions of "blind guides," but to "content ourselves for the faith," which has the indignant of Jehovah, is the duty of all who "have the name of Christ." Not to do it, is culpable degradation. Christ gets many a "wound" in the hands of His friends, "in the futile attempt to cloak the obstinacy of error, and spare the prejudices of credulous eyes at the expense of truth." "O ye of little faith," "He that is not with Me is against Me; and he that gathers not with Me scatters abroad." This should make us tremble, lest we be more concerned to conciliate man than win him to Jesus by answering fealty to His Divine-human manifestation. Righteousness is of God, and in all we do, no matter how insignificant, we need God to approve or condemn, to inspire or blast our faith. A little concession here, and a little there, gradually warps the judgment, perverts the faith, blinds the conscience, and makes large room for apologies where God has fixed the unyielding principles of the cross. Believe in Jesus, stretches over the eternities. Luke 18: 8.

"Love the Brotherhood," "love your enemies." 1 Peter 2: 17; Matt. 5: 44. "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." Mark 12: 30.

Have faith in God." Mark 11: 22; Matt. 21: 21, 22. "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldst believe, thou shouldst see the glory of God." John 11: 10. "I am the truth." John 14: 6. "Sanctify them through thy truth; THY WORD IS TRUTH." John 17: 17. "The words that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." John 12: 48. These passages settle our relations to God, the Truth, and our fellows. Human applause is so sweet that but few are found willing to have their "name cast out as evil" to preserve their moral integrity. Faith always brings the presence and smile and beatitudes of the Godman, but many also bring heeded hands and feet, a bleeding heart, the scorn of the world, the abandonment of friends, the derision and persecution of "false brethren," the confiscation of property, the rack and faggot of a living martyrdom. The covenant of Hebrews is a monument still building. It is masoned with living stones, cemented with the blood of God's elect, buttressed with the Rock of Eternity, domed with the Majesty of Everlasting Righteousness, and unadorned with the sevenfold splendors of Uncreated light. Who is not ambitious for a niche in the monument-temple of God's blood-washed favorites? "We that have believed do enter into rest." Heb. 4: 8. Faith turns the key that unlocks every door in the house of many mansions, and gives us access into the Holy of Holies—the innermost heart of the Triune Savior-God.

"IT IS FINISHED." — JOHN 19: 30.

BY JOHN CORNEY.

THE above text, Jesus spoke while hanging on the cross. When He had accomplished all His suffering, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, He said I thirst. Now was only one more prophecy to be fulfilled. Ps. 64: 21. And in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink. And hence Jesus said, I thirst, and they gave Him vinegar to drink. Now He could say, "It is finished." I have suffered all I have done all the Scripture ask me to do. "I fulfilled every prophecy; I drank the vinegar in my thirst; it is now fulfilled; I now offer up my life; I pour out my soul unto death; I know how my head and give up the ghost.

The question is sometimes asked, "What is finished?" Some will answer, "Man's redemption was now finished." But that was not what He said, and is not what I understand Christ to mean, when He said, "It is finished." Had Christ only suffered and died, and had not risen again from the dead, our redemption would be a deficient one, instead of a finished one. His resurrection, was of equal importance with His suffering and death. Paul in 1 Cor. 15, says, "If Christ had not risen, our preaching would be vain, and our faith also vain, and we would yet be in our sins." Then we would only have hoped in Christ, while in this life; and the Christians that suffered with Christ, and for Him, would be, "Among all men most miserable." "But now is Christ risen, and became the first fruits of them that slept." He did not only taste death for us, but rose again from the dead, and brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. "Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. 8: 21. "We ourselves grow within ourselves, waiting for the adoption to wit the redemption of our body."

Again, "That I may know Him (Christ) and the power of His resurrection and the fellowship of His sufferings, being conformable unto His death." Phil. 3: 10, 11. "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body." Our resurrection and immortality which we shall have in the coming of Christ, will only finish our redemption; for Paul says, "They that are Christ's, shall rise at His coming." So we can use the words of our text only in the sense that the sufferings of Christ were then finished, and not our redemption; as we hear it often said and preached.

Now, let us all learn a good lesson from the text, that when our lives shall end here, and we give up the Ghost, that we can also say, "It is finished." And let us do like Jesus did. See to it, that we do every thing the Scripture demands of us, that we can look back on a well-spent life in the service of our God, and say, "We have done our work then hast given us to do, it is finished." We low our heads and give up the ghost, commending our spirits into the care of Jesus, like a Stephen of old did.

ATTENTION TO LITTLE THINGS.

ATTENTION to very little things must be observed, if one would render home pleasant. Suppose the routine of housekeeping or the leadery of it, if you have that to attend to is tedious. We should look upon it as our work and try to perform it to the best of our ability. A successful performance of the most unglorious task, will render it almost pleasant. In my opinion, it is not necessary to leave the nicest china in order to enjoy washing dishes, that worst of all housework.

When I first commenced housekeeping, the large chimneys were my especial dread, though I knew how much their being bright and clean added to the cheerfulness of the home evening. My husband was very sensitive about this one thing. I wanted to please him, but so disliked cleaning the chimneys that I often tried to persuade myself that they did not need it this time; but when lighted at night I saw my mistake. Then instead of blaming me, my good husband would take them off and clean them himself. This annoyed me; I felt reproved, and determined to put my dislike out of the question, and I have clean chimneys every day. On my sitting-room wall hangs an illuminated text, "Serve the Lord with gladness." How often I glance at it, and think that, in the cheerful performance of little duties, rejoice in themselves, I am serving the Lord. Nothing should be looked upon as small matter which tends to render home cheerful and pleasant. "Honor Him and Him"

MOORE & ESHELMAN, Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill.

LANARK, ILL., JULY 13, 1878.

Bro. John W. Brumbaugh and wife, of Clover Creek, Pa., called on us last week and preached for us on Friday evening.

SEVEN were baptized in Wis., while brother Newenhor was up there a few weeks ago. The interest is greatly increasing, and calls for meetings at two other points.

Brother S. H. Bashor is engaged in writing a work in defense of the faith and practice of the Brethren. It will be published sometime during the present season.

The world is full of people who do not know what it is to be good enough alone. They never know when they have a good thing of it, and often act very lustily and thus become much involved in trouble.

We need not look for a paradise on earth till after people have learned to bridle their tongues in a becoming manner. If properly used, the tongue is a useful member, but if abused it is the curse of the world.

Brother Enoch Eby left for Iowa last week, and will remain about three weeks. After his return he will commence preaching in the Central Illinois Mission field.

Brother J. W. Stein expects to move into this part of the State sometime during the Summer, and remain over one year. His being near this office will make it more convenient for him in carrying on the written discussion.

Brothers J. W. Brumbaugh of Pa., M. Meyer, and D. Miller of this county, held meetings in Foreston, Ill., on Saturday evening 6th and Sunday 7th inst.

It is thought by some, that we ought to perform a mission to be given by each congregation in the Northern Illinois, in support of the Brethren Mission work this year.

responded nobly to the many calls so far—the Mission has been amply sustained, and we have reason to hope it will continue to be supported by the free-will offerings of the brethren and sisters.

THERE are two classes of business men in the world. One class is all the time attending to somebody else's business, but neglecting its own. The other class attends to its own business and lets others attend to theirs.

Few ministers fully realize the importance of preaching to children. The sheep are fed plentifully while the wants of the lambs are neglected week after week, and then complaint made because the children and young people are so much unconcerned about religion and morality.

THE JEWISH CONVENTION.

THE Hebrew Convention held at Milwaukee, Wis., last week, proved a success to the Jewish interest of this country. They have now, as we learn from the dailies, become fully united as one body, resolving to work together advancing the interest of the Jewish race.

The action of the convention bridges the gulf between sections and paves the way for concerted action in the future. As one of the delegates remarked, the United States, because of the large religious liberty allowed, is more than any other nation the Jews' country; but the object of the union is not only to look after the Jews in this land of religious liberty, but to secure for them religious liberty in lands where it is now denied.

"The time is extremely favorable for action in behalf of the Jews subjected to persecution, and it is said that prominent Hebrew leaders exercised, through the Earl of Beaconsfield, much influence on the Berlin Conference. It is barely possible that Beaconsfield is purposely keeping in the background the full record of what he has accomplished in this direction.

LET none of you suffer as an evil doer, or as a busybody in other men's matters. 1 Peter 4: 15. In the light of this injunction, what must the end be of him who goes from house to house, trying to stir up strife—trying to carry persons against others? Are not such miserable and poor, and naked, and in need of correction, and the prayers of the righteous? Blessed are the peacemakers, and miserable are those who stir up strife and contention.

"SABBATISM."

M. M. Eshelman.—

YOUR tract entitled, "Sabbatism," has come into my hands, and having been informed that you will publish a respectful review of it in THE BRETHERN AT WORK, I will briefly notice a few points in it, and give some reasons why I think your arguments fail to establish your position.

1. I begin with your title page—"The Law and the Gospel Contrasted." (a) Are the Law and the Gospel two different rules of life? No. According to the New Testament, "Sin is the transgression of the law," not of the Gospel. The Gospel is the good news of pardon of sin through Jesus Christ.

(b) If the Law were abolished, no pardon would be needed; therefore the offer of pardon sustains the Law. The Gospel, in offering pardon, admits that the Law is right in condemning the sinner. They are two things distinctly; but they agree to the same truth. Where is the contrast? (c) The moral Law existed before man became a sinner by transgressing it; and the Gospel has existed from the time that the plan of saving sinners was laid.

(d) You speak of the Law and the Gospel as if they were two systems or plans of saving men; as if the ancients were saved by the Law, but the moderns by the Gospel. This is false. All are sinners, transgressors of the Law; and all that are saved will be saved through Christ. Abraham had the Gospel preached to him (Gal. 3: 8); he believed in the promised Savior; and his faith was not a dead faith; for he obeyed God's voice and kept His charge.

(e) On page fifth, you speak of the inspired writers of the volume which we call the New Testament, as writing the New Covenant. This is a fallacy. The writing of the New Covenant is not on parchment nor paper, but on the heart. A covenant is a mutual agreement. (See Ex. 19: 5-9. Under the New Covenant God promises, "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts.") (Jer. 31: 33. What law? Evidently that which was written on stones, at the time when the first Covenant was made.

2. (a) "The Law imperfect; the Gospel perfect." Where did you learn this? Very long ago the Holy Spirit testified, "The law of the Lord is perfect" (Psalm 19: 7). Is it more perfect now? James also speaks of the perfect law of liberty (1: 25) says, we shall be judged by it; and quotes from it, "Do not commit adultery," and "Do not kill" (Jas. 2: 8-10). I admit that the Gospel is perfect, but where is the text that says so?

(b) You assume that the first Covenant consisted of the ten commandments. This is the very thing which should be proven; but you make no attempt to prove it; and you would fail if you did, for the proof does not exist. God calls the ten commandments His Covenant, and makes the keeping of them a condition on which His promises were based. This the people promised to do (Ex. 19: 5-9). Here the mutual agreement is plainly recorded, and when it was ratified or "dedicated," after they had heard God's voice, Moses said, "Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words" (Ex. 24: 8). (c) The first Covenant was not the words, but an agreement concerning the words. Here is a distinction with a difference; and it is made by the word of the Lord. Christ's blood is the blood of the New Covenant (Matt. 26: 28). This can take away sin. The "better promises" are the remission of sins, the law of which sin is the transgression, written in the heart, and an "eternal inheritance" (Heb. 8: 12, and 9: 15). The New Covenant is better, because the promises are better (Heb. 8: 6). The moral Law could be made no better, for Inspiration had already pronounced it perfect.

3. You properly make a distinction between the ten commandments and the "ceremonial law, or ordinances." These ordinances, comprising the yearly Sabbaths, all are agreed are blotted out, being nailed to the cross. This can be, and yet the "royal law," distinguished by the voice and handwriting of Jehovah, remain entire. It was evidently of this law that Jesus said, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven. For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 5: 17-20). It is of this Law that the Apostle says, "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law" (Rom. 3: 31).

4. You say, "Then we cannot obey Christ by doing what Moses taught?" Not at all; for Moses himself said, "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things." This is a contradiction, for if we obey Christ in all things, we do "every thing that Moses taught." Moses and Christ are in perfect harmony. Who attempt to hold them in contrast? Moses was a Christian, he stood out to represent God above the people (1: 10). Heb. 11: 26.

5. You say, "Under the law," the seven days Sabbath, and the children of Israel only, were saved. God said to Israel, "Ye shall be a sanctified people, ye shall be holy." But did he say, "Ye shall be holy only by the Sabbath?" And if so, why were the David and the prophets were believers in Christ. Were they not required to keep the Sabbath? Jesus says, "The Sabbath was made for man." Does the term man include only the Jews? Put the argument in form. 1. The Sabbath was made for man. 2. The Jews are men. 3. Therefore the Sabbath was made for the Jews. Very well. Try it again. 1. The Sabbath was made for man. 2. Gentiles are men. 3. Therefore—what? for the Jews only? See Isa. 56: 2-4.

6. (a) I study briefly, and therefore shall not argue and spend on your "preferred day." The evidence for Sunday amounts to nothing; and it takes creative power to make a thing out of nothing. The effort has been shown a failure a hundred times. I will not dispute that Christ has "dominion over" the Sabbath, and has "power to alter it according to his will." The question is, Has he altered it? "Hear him," we say. His testimony is recorded in Matt. 23: 18. It relates to the very point in question. He has testified; will you hear him?

7. In conclusion, your argument is unsound, because your premises are false. Your two leading fallacies are, 1. Making the ten commandments the Old Covenant, and 2. Making the writings of the New Testament the New Covenant. (a) The term covenant is frequently found in the Bible, and is used in various ways. There are many covenants recorded; but the first and the second are only two of them, I have shown what these were. God calls the ten commandments His covenant; but they are nowhere called the first, or the Old Covenant. They are God's perfect and immutable Law, and as such they are the basis of both the Old and the New. In the Old, Israel pledged themselves to keep them; and they were written on stones. The New writes them in the hearts of all "the Israel of God." David had them in his heart; so had the Apostle Paul (1's. 119: 97; Rom. 7: 22). Christ's blood is the blood of the New Covenant. It is by the efficacy of this blood that the transgressor of God's Law is cleansed from his sin and has the Law written in his heart, according to the promise. (p) The first Covenant had also ordinances of divine service and a worldly sanctuary. "But the blood which was offered could not take away sin;" consequently all the ancients that are saved, are included in, and are saved by the New Covenant. There are not two ways of saving men, one by the Law, and the other by the Gospel. There is no greater delusion than this.

You say the New Covenant was written by Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, James, Peter, and Jude; and say, "They wrote precisely what the Lord wanted written; no more, no less." Suppose these writings to be the New Covenant. You teach that all this should be believed and obeyed. Let us read, then, from the New Covenant.—"They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them" (Luke 16: 29. "Search the Scriptures" John 5: 39. (q) Not a word of the New Testament was written when Jesus spoke these words. Paul also refers to the Old Testament when he says, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." Shall we go to the Old Testament to get instruction in righteousness, that is, right doing? Yes, Jesus says, "Blessed are they that do His (the Father's) commandments."

I close with the sincere desire and prayer to God, that you and the writer may be subject to the New Covenant, having our sins taken away by the blood of Christ, and the Law of God written in our hearts, and thus be heirs of the better promises of the New Covenant, and enter in through the gates into the city. R. F. CORRELL.

Holpway, N. Y.

REPLY.

(a) You ask, "Are the Law and the Gospel two different rules of life?" You not only ask the question, but you also answer it. Are they one? Your "No" says, yes they are. You do not seem to see that the Law was the School-master which brought the Jews to Christ, and that the Gospel is now our School-master to bring us to the same Christ. Under the Law dispensation, to sin against that Law was transgression. Do you maintain that to sin against the Gospel is not transgression? Is it a transgression to sin against "ceremonial ordinances" dedicated with the blood of animals, and not sin to transgress against the Gospel, which has been consecrated by the blood of Christ—the Being who came in the flesh? Inspiration says: "And you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven" * * * in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2 Thess. 1: 8. Here is the result of not obeying the Gospel. If sinning is not transgressing the Gospel, why take vengeance on them? If not obeying the Gospel is not transgressing, why punish with "everlasting destruction?" It is also declared that "all unrighteousness is sin." 1 John 5: 17. If all unrighteousness is sin, and those that do unrighteousness, obey not the Gospel, are punished with everlasting destruction from the Lord, can it be said that sin is not the transgression of the Gospel? Does Eby C. maintain that the Gospel ought to be obeyed? If he does, will it not be sin to not obey it? If it be sin to not obey it, is it not transgression? Will he maintain that it is sin to not conform to the Gospel, the word of Truth? "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." James 4: 17. We are now speaking of those who have the Gospel, who know it. If they know that they should obey it, 2 Thess. 1: 8, and do it not, will it not be sin? Is not Jesus the Author of eternal salvation to all that obey Him? Heb. 5: 9. Is not the Gospel more than "good news of pardon of sins through Jesus Christ?" Does it not interpret itself as "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth?" Rom. 1: 16; Eph. 1: 13. It is not only the source from which we learn of pardon from the sin of our first parents, but it is the good news of salvation from our own sins. It is the power of God unto salvation—a means which God uses for our salvation.

(b.) You ask, "Where is the contrast?" Can you not see this? Are not the sacrifices and offerings under the Law and none under the Gospel a difference? Being different, are they not susceptible of contrast? If there is no difference, why do you not practice precisely what the Law teaches? If there be a difference, then one is superior to the other, which superiority we shall show further on.

(c.) Who says the moral Law did not exist before man became a sinner? No doubt it existed in the mind of God; but it existing in the mind of God, and being revealed to man before man existed, are two things. We go no further than revelation. What God did not reveal to man, we know nothing about. When God said to Adam and Eve what they should and what they should not do, we know precisely the mind of God. If this Law was for the regulating of their morals, it was moral Law, and by what was revealed we stand. We cannot stand by what Elder C. seems to see revealed, but are willing to stand by what God has revealed. If you mean that the Gospel has existed with God since the plan of saving sinners was laid, well and good. The Gospel of Jesus Christ, no doubt existed from the time that the plan of saving sinners was laid, but there is a difference between the time of its existing, and the time of its revelation.

(d.) What is Law? "A rule directing and obliging a rational creature in moral and religious actions." Was not the Law God's constitution, given for the worship of the Jews? Turn to Heb. 10: 1-4 for the answer. Was not the Law one plan of worship, prescribed for one chosen, one peculiar people, the Jews? "The Lord hath chosen Israel for his peculiar treasure." Psalm 135: 4. "This is the law which Moses set before Israel." Deut. 4: 44. Did not the "First Covenant" contain the rule of faith and practice for the Jews? Does Elder C. believe and obey the First Covenant? Is he sacrificing sheep, goats and heifers? offering their flesh and blood as sacrifice to the Lord? No, he is not doing this. Why? "Because those sacrifices have been abolished," he replies. How does he know they are abolished? The New Testament declares they are. Very well, does it not also declare that Christ "taketh away the first that he might establish the second?" Does he believe that, "if the first covenant had been faithful, then should no place have been sought for the second?" Heb. 8: 8. What was the Gospel that was preached unto Abraham? "In thee shall all nations be blessed." Gal. 3: 8. This was "good news" to Abraham. He believed it, hence his faith was "imputed to him for righteousness." Rom. 4: 22. The Gospel was preached to him in promise, not in fact. As yet, the Gospel of Jesus Christ, in its power, had not been revealed. It was yet in the future; the nations, all nations were to be blessed, while to us the Gospel of Jesus Christ has come, is established practically, all nations have been blessed. No one denies that Abraham kept God's commandments, His statutes, His laws. When God said, "Sojourn in this land," Gen. 28: 3. Abraham obeyed. When God commanded him to offer Isaac, he obeyed. If Abraham believed and obeyed God by faith in Jesus who was to come, he was more faithful than many of the day who will not obey the Christ that has come—who instituted a better Covenant upon better promises. Heb. 8: 6. "The plan of the First Covenant does not mean the same Covenant. If the Elder were to give his neighbor apples to-day, then promise him better apples to-morrow, he would not give him the same apples for better apples, would he?"

Gen. 16 says not one word about the Sabbath being known and kept before written commandments. God's people never know and keep anything until it is revealed to them; for those who worship God, worship precisely as He tells them. We are willing to accept the counsels, the precepts and commands of God's Book—every word that relates to our salvation, but when a man comes up and declares that a thing was known and practiced by God's people before God revealed it to them, we must protest.

(e.) On page five of Sabbatism, we reason thus: By whom was the "New Covenant" written? By men chosen by the Lord, viz.: Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, James, Peter, and Jude. Were they inspired? They were; for "all Scripture is given by inspiration," and since they wrote the New Covenant, which is Scripture, it follows that they were inspired. Being under the immediate influence of the Holy Spirit, they did not write anything that the Lord did not want written, nor did they fail to write something that the Lord wanted them to write. They wrote precisely what the Lord wanted written,—no more, no less. Does the Elder maintain that the writers of the New Covenant were not inspired? A Covenant is "the promises of God as revealed in the Scripture, conditioned on certain terms on the part of man, as obedience, repentance, faith, &c." We now call up Jeremiah, who says: "But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people." "The covenant that I will make," certainly does not refer to the one which had been made. God did not say by the mouth of the prophet, "I will put my law, my covenant, which I made, in their inward parts," but He emphatically declares this of the covenant that He will make. "Will make" does not refer to things already made. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was a husband unto them, saith the Lord." Can prophecy be plainer?

(g.) The Law, as a shadow of good things to come, was perfect, but as making the comers thereunto of a "divine nature," it was not perfect. God Himself defines it. "The law having a shadow of good things to come, * * * can never with those sacrifices * * * make the comers thereunto perfect." Heb. 10: 1. As typical, it was perfect; but as being a true representative of what Christ has done, it was imperfect. There is a difference between the thing itself, and its shadow. What James and others quote from the Old Covenant, is by Divine Authority, and by no means proves that He wants us to observe something that He has not put there. The question is not what is in the New Covenant. That God requires us to believe and obey what is written therein is not a matter of dispute, but does He require us to believe and obey what He has not revealed? This is the point. In all the New Testament He says nothing about, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;" but Elder C. insists we must keep it anyhow. "Whether it be better to hearken unto"—Acts 4: 19.

(h.) On page one of Sabbatism I maintain that the First Covenant consisted of the ten commandments with the ceremonial law, or ordinances, added. We now bring up Exodus 20, 21, 22, and 23, and find that Moses had not only delivered to Israel the ten commandments, as you term them, but also many other commandments concerning men-servants, theft, slander, false-witnesses, justice, charity, feasts and sacrifices, after which He said: "Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words." Ex. 24: 8. Do "all these words" refer to the ten commandments only? Here we have Moses giving instruction concerning many things— all done in words—and then sprinkling the people with blood. What authority has any man to select a few of God's words, and set them up for law? His words? The God that gave the ten commandments also gave all the other commandments that were to be obeyed by the children of Israel, and now we behold men at this day, choosing some of those commands, and leaving others, in order to set up some pet theory. If Elder C. accepts one command in the Law, which is not in the Gospel, and negates ten, why does he not accept the others of the Law that are not in the Gospel? Why be so partial?

(i.) Man liveth not by the assertions of men, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. We fail to see a difference between your "distinction and difference." Of course, Christ came not to destroy the Law or the prophets. He came to fulfill the Law and the prophets. If the Law be fulfilled, of what use is it?

(k.) We establish, are witnesses of the Law, that it was just, that it was the shadow of good things to come,—things, not thing—and that it laid no claims to making the comers thereunto perfect. Paul would have us know that in preaching Christ, the truthfulness of the Law was established. It pointed to Christ, and Christ being here, proves that the Law was right. Can you not see this, Elder? "Now we are delivered from the law, that being dead whereunto we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in oldness of letter." Rom. 7: 6. Delivered from the Law—delivered from all of it, yet under some of it, according to Elder C. We prefer to serve in newness of the spirit, and let those who will, serve in oldness of the letter.

(l.) This has already been answered under the argument concerning Abraham.

(m.) We will try your style of reasoning here. "The Father which has made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light." Col. 1: 12. 1. The "us" are men. 2. Sinners are men. 3. Therefore sinners are partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. Or take this: "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." 1. The "you" are men. 2. Sinners are men. 3. Therefore the Holy Ghost hath made sinners overseers of flock of Christ. The logic is your own, not ours.

(n.) The evidence against "the Lord's day," amounts to nothing, and it takes God to make something out of nothing; hence the effort to prove that the Jewish Sabbath should be observed by Christians has failed as often as attempted.

(o.) God does not call the ten commandments alone His Covenant. The one made with Abraham, more than four hundred years before the ten commandments were given, was also a Covenant. This was simply enlarged, extended under Moses. The second is shown in Heb. 8: 6. "These are the two covenants: the one from Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage." Gal. 4: 24. Does the Elder insist on living under the Covenant that gendereth to bondage? We are content to be the children of the free woman. Gal. 4: 31. Paul says, "Christ taketh away the first that he may establish the second." Heb. 10: 9. If Christ hath taken away the first Covenant, what authority has Elder C. to try to bring it back? "In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old, is ready to vanish away." Heb. 8: 13. "If the first be old, decayed and vanished away, why try to resurrect it? For if the first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second." Heb. 8: 7. So the first was not faultless, and for this reason a place was sought for the second Covenant.

If some of the first Covenant was written on stones, that is no proof that the words never got into the hearts of the children of Israel. "Set your hearts unto all the words * * * which ye shall command your children to observe to do, all the words of this law." Deut. 32: 46. Were not the ten commandments in "this law?" Deut. 11: 18. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." Deut. 6: 5. Though some of the words were written on stones, they got into the hearts of the people. Though the inspired writers of the "New Covenant" put the words on parchment, God requires that we put them into our hearts, where He waters them with divine grace, making them His power unto salvation.

(p.) In one place you urge the perfection of the Law, and here you maintain that none were saved by it. You fail to recognize the fact that the writers of the Gospel, also give the history of Christ's labor, as well as the object, and result of His coming.

(q.) No one denies this, but let us look at a few facts. Christ gave words, spoken words, to

His disciples, did He not? Before He ascended up into heaven, He said that the Comforter which the Father would send in His name, would "bring all things" to their "remembrance whatsoever." He had said unto them, John 14: 26. The Comforter brought the words that Jesus spoke unto His disciples, to their remembrance, and then some of them wrote them, put them into form, which words we have under the name of the New Testament. The words are God's power unto salvation. Rom. 1: 16. A man believes them; they are life unto him. John 6: 63. By writing, they have been transmitted to us, so that we may know the mind of Christ, the will of God.

In conclusion we repeat our position in Sabbatism that no one has yet proven by the Bible, that the Gospel is not the New Covenant. 2. Prove that the "first covenant" (given on Sinai) is now in force. 3. Prove that there is any other rule of faith and practice for the disciples of Christ, besides the Gospel. 4. Prove that there is something in the New Testament that the Lord did not want there. 5. Prove that the inspired writers left something out that the Lord wanted in. 6. Prove, by the Bible, that Christ was not the "end of the Law," and that the "first covenant" did not "vanish away." The position taken in Sabbatism stands unrefuted, though it has been passed into the hands of some of the leading Sabbatarians in the land, and having been translated into the Danish language and distributed in Denmark by the thousands, it has withstood the criticisms of its opposers there. We write this not boastfully, but as an evidence that the truth will succeed in all nations. The writers of the New Testament nowhere say, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," and if God had desired it kept holy, kept as given to Moses or otherwise, He would have caused it to be written in the Gospel. When our Sabbatarian friends once show that God forgot to have this written, we shall prepare to accept their theory, but until it is done, we must accept what God says, not what He does not say. When He says we have been "delivered from the law," we believe Him rather than those who say, that from some of the law we have not been delivered. When God says, "He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second," Heb. 10: 9, we go that way rather than after him who says that nothing was taken out of the way to establish the second, but that the same thing was re-established. The question is not whether God made a New Covenant, but did He take the Old away, put it back and call it a New Covenant? Inspiration says the first "waxed old," vanished away. This we all admit, but when it vanished away, was taken away, did it come back? was it brought back? This is the point at issue. Elder C. maintains that the second is the same as the first, but the Book of God says otherwise. We stand by the Book. Will Elder C. do the same? M. L. E.

A TRIBUTE.

BY D. H. MENTZER.

'Tis Sabbath morn
And brightness marks the hallowed day
All Nature its beauties display,
And fields adorn.
The gentle shower
Has bathed the dusty, thirsty earth:
There's joy o'er every blossom's birth
And fragrant flower.
The merry bird
Mid verdant tree-top high I hear:
Full many a lay is wafted near
And Heaven-heard.
The ripening grain
A plentiful harvest shall bestow,
For God His mercies still doth show,
And not in vain.
Bless, O my soul,
Give thanks to God, Ancient of days;
Let all the earth be filled with praise,
His Name extol,
Bless the Lord!
His love protects me every day,
O, may He keep me in His Way
And in His Word.
Still I implore,
When all my days on earth are past,
May I, with all the saved at last,
Praise evermore.

A FEW THOUGHTS.

BY MARY C. MILLER.

I LIKE that idea of a brother's mother. He said she taught him he could not understand the Scriptures until he had the same spirit that the men had, who wrote them. Mothers, that was good teaching.
It is not good for a tree to grow faster in the air than in the ground, for the storms will be sure to blow it over. So it is with man. It is not good for him to grow into popular favor without trials and troubles to settle and ground him in the truth.
Selfishness likes to be exalted, but God loveth the humble.
Don't envy a man if he is higher than you, for he is your prober. Remember the small oaks are spared when the storms and lightnings come, because of the larger ones.
Backbiting cuts up a body of people, like canker. I would rather company with an intelligent person, even though in rags, free from this pernicious habit, than with those who pretend to cleanliness, but are like whitened sepulchres, beautiful without, but within full of dead men's bones.
A kind word in time of trouble, is like an oasis in a desert to the weary traveler.
Be not a ditch for mother to fall into; they are dangerous things to have near about. Human was hung upon the gallows he built for mother. God protects the righteous, but is angry with the wicked every day.
It takes longer to clean the mud off your boots than to go around the mud hole, and it is harder work. So a little discretion is better than thoughtless haste.

No one likes afflictions and persecutions, yet they are good for those who are trying to do what is right.
When I have a piece of work that I dread, I find the worst part to do is to begin! So it is with man doing his duty toward God. The hardest part of the work is to get his own consent, or in other words, to make up his mind to go to work.
They shall heap to themselves teachers having itching ears." That is, men shall be lovers of themselves and shall treasure up flatteries, work for them and hate reproof.
Henry Ward Beecher has, by his influence and example, slain more people than the sword devoured in the rebellion. And the cuts are deeper.
When a person loves God he don't need to tell it. Actions speak louder than words, and our actions are all well weighed by some silent looker-on, if in public, and always by that eye that never sleeps. It is not the things done to be seen of men which tell. It is simply being true that makes one appear so. To put on appearance without possessing may stand for awhile, but sooner or later it will crumble to a miserable wreck.

THE WORD OF GOD.

BY WM. BROUGH.

Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.—2 Tim, 2:15.
FROM this portion of Scripture we infer that there is a possibility of not rightly dividing the Truth. In reading this Truth, or Word of God understandingly, the same rules must be observed as in reading other books, or writings: 1. Who is the Author? 2. To whom did he write? 3. When and where did he write? 4. Under what circumstances or influence did he write? 5. The object.
THE BOOK OF GOD is divided into two parts. 1. The Old Testament, setting forth God's dealings with His people till within about 400 years of Christ, and was fulfilled by Him.
2. The New Testament, which will not be fulfilled until the second coming of Christ, or the end of the present dispensation. This Testament is the one which most concerns us, as it includes the time in which we live, move, and have our being. Then let us examine it carefully and prayerfully, that it may prove a help to our erring feet.
The New Testament contains a revelation of God in Christ, transmitted to the Apostles and other inspired men, and is divided into twenty-seven books. These books are divided into four general classes.

1. The biography of Christ and His antecedents, written by four authors: Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. Matthew's writing was addressed to the Jews in Judea, and was written in Judea, about A. D. 27 or 38. Mark addressed the Romans, and is supposed to have written in Rome between A. D. 60 and 63. Luke, by some, is supposed to have written his Gospel while in Greece, A. D. 63 or 64, to the Grecians. John wrote in Ephesus, A. D. 68, or perhaps earlier, to the Asiatic people. The primary object of these writers was, to prove that Jesus Christ was the Son of God.

The second general division is called, Acts of the Apostles, written by Luke in Greece, A. D. 63 or 64. This book gives an account of some of the acts of the Apostles under their second or great commission, and contains the grand historical facts of the organization of the church, and a history of its state and increase among the Jews and Gentiles. It also answers the question, How may a sinner become a Christian? In fact, the book is largely taken up with the subject of conversion, and shows us what we must do to be saved from our sins.

The third general division comprises twenty-one epistles, of which Paul wrote fourteen: Ephesians, 2 Timothy, Philippians, Colossians, Philemon, and Hebrews were likely written in Rome. Romans, Galatians, first and second Thessalonians were written in Corinth. First Timothy, Titus, and second Corinthians were written in Macedonia. First Corinthians in Ephesus. These epistles were written A. D. 52 to 63. The other epistles are called general epistles, and were written A. D. 64 to 90. James was written in Judea. First and second Peter in Rome. First, second and third John in Ephesus. Jude, unknown. These epistles were written to the churches and individual Christians, and contain God's system and means for instructing and discipling the church of Christ, and answers the important question, What are the duties of a Christian?

The fourth general division is the Apocalypse, or Revelation, written by John, on the Isle of Patmos, now called Palamos, in the Egean Sea, in the reign of Domitian, about A. D. 96. This book gives an illustration of things to come, and a beautiful pen picture of heaven.

In reading the New Testament, we should always bear in mind, that the circumstances or influence under which inspired men wrote, was that of the power of the Holy Ghost, and that whatsoever they found on earth was bound in heaven. Then if we wish to learn about Jesus, and what He said and did, we must go to the Gospel. If you wish to know how to become a Christian, read the Acts of the Apostles. If you wish to know your duty as a Christian, read the Epistles. If you wish to learn the destiny of the world and mankind generally, consult the Revelations.

Now I have given you a few of the outlines to be observed in reading the New Testament Scriptures, and hope many young readers will commence and read them carefully, thoughtfully, and prayerfully, that they may lead you into the fold of Christ.

A PUNCTUATION PUZZLE.

BY LEVI GABBER.

THE following is a capital illustration of the importance of punctuation. There are two ways of pointing it, one of which makes the individual in question, a monster of wickedness, while the other converts him into a model Christian. Let our readers exercise their ingenuity on the problem, and see whether they can discover its two-fold solution:

"He is an old experienced man in vice and wickedness he is never found opposing the works of iniquity he takes delight in the downfall of the neighborhood he never rejoices in the prosperity of any of his fellow creatures he is always ready to assist in destroying the peace of society he takes no pleasure in serving the Lord he is unmercifully diligent in sowing discord among his friends and acquaintances he takes no pains in laboring to promote the cause of Christianity he has not been negligent in endeavoring to stigmatize all public teachers he makes no exertions to subdue his evil passions he strives hard to build up Satan's kingdom he looks no aid to the support of the Gospel among the heathen he contributes largely to the evil advocacy he pays no attention to good advice he gives great heed to the devil he will never go to heaven he must go where he will receive the just recompense of reward."

Just as the above puzzle represents its character in two forms, when properly or improperly punctuated, so with every Christian character,

If the Christian professor is not thoroughly educated in the school of Christ, so that he will understand how to punctuate the history of his daily life, it is feared that it will read very badly in the eyes of those who look on. If the professor of religion will be guilty of the trait of character set forth in the puzzle, when improperly punctuated, it will just prove him to be the character set forth—a monster of wickedness. But, if those who profess to be disciples (learners) of Jesus, learn His rules and examples, and practice the same, there will be no danger of misplacing the punctuation marks. May every reader so exercise his spiritual ingenuity to solve the two-fold solution of their everyday life, that they may be able to punctuate the history of the same, in such a manner as will convert them, not only as a model, but as a perfect Christian.

CONGREGATIONALISM.

BY EMMANUEL UMBROUGH.

CONGREGATIONALISM is one of the first and most successful isms ever introduced into the world. It is the source of the many divisions into which the so-called Christian world is divided. It found its way into the hearts of many of the ancients, and we find, to our sorrow, that it is finding its way into the ranks of the army of the Lord in the present age. In one or the other of its dreadful forms, congregationalism is forcing its poisonous influence upon us. Serpent-like it wraps itself about the heart, and extracts therefrom the love for the church, and substitutes in its stead, the love of self, which becomes larger, and larger, until self becomes so significant in the eyes of self, that the church becomes too insignificant, apparently, to be governed by it, and consequently up comes a case of excommunication.

This same congregationalism causes persons to become dissatisfied with the good-meaning and faithful church officers, which has a very dreadful effect upon the church, and sadly retards both her extension and advancement in holiness. This form of congregationalism is properly called "Congregationalism of the Heart," and it never affects any one until after they have lost all traces of Christianity. Whenever an individual becomes troubled with congregationalism in this stage of its advancement, and still continues in the church, his love of honor, applause, &c., entirely eclipses his love for his brethren and sisters, and he entirely loses track of the injunction of our Savior: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, that ye have love one for another."

But there is another form of congregationalism, which in order to distinguish from the above, we will denominate, "Church Congregationalism." This form of congregationalism causes churches to divide, and subdivide until the number of congregations will equal the number of ministers.

The reasons for these divisions are very apparent. Christ has left the world, but has left His espoused bride to govern His followers, Congregationalism will not suffer the bride of our Savior to govern any particular congregation, but requires each congregation to govern itself regardless of the counsels of the bride of our Savior.

A fraternity assuming the name, "Congregational Brethren," organized in Northern Indiana by some of our Brethren, who having been attacked with "Congregationalism of the Heart," were expelled, is the best illustration of "Church Congregationalism" I can mention. The members and ministers of the organization being but few in number, the two main ministers both desiring the supremacy, and the bride of our Savior having no control over them, because they were congregational, they were severed into two distinct bodies in their very infancy. Here is a sample of Church congregationalism, which should serve as a warning to all who are opposed to having the Lamb's bride dictate for them in instances in which the Lamb Himself is silent. A person, in order to gain the esteem and affection of an individual must not undervalue the counsels of his wife, and if we claim to be loyal subjects of King Jesus, we must respect His bride—the church.

HAPPY MAN.—Happy is he who has Gospel submission in his will, due order in his affections, sound peace in his conscience, sanctity in his soul, humility in his heart, the Redeemer's yoke on his neck, the vain world under his feet, the crown of glory over his head—happy he lives; happy he dies. To attain this, pray fervently, believe firmly, wait patiently, work abundantly, live holy, be daily, watch your heart, govern your tongue, guide your actions, redeem the time, love Christ, and long for glory.

The Brazen Serpent, and the Savior.

Dear Brethren:—

A PASSAGE of Scripture occurs to my mind this Lord's day morning, that will be found in the 21st chapter of Numbers, verses 5 and 9. It reads thus: "And the Lord said unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent and set it upon a pole and it shall come to pass that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live. And Moses made a serpent of brass and set it upon a pole. And it came to pass, that if the serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived."

Now this serpent which Moses put upon a pole in the wilderness is an emblem of our Savior when he hung on the cross for our sins. — Luke tells us: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so shall the Son of Man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life." — The fiery serpents had a tendency to kill, and as such may well be compared to sin, for sin kills beyond the tomb. The Israelites were saved from the effects of the serpents' bite by looking upon the brazen serpent, and thus preserved their natural life. If we want to be delivered from the curse of sin, and become inheritors of immortal life, we must look to Christ, obey Him in all things, and a crown of immortal glory shall be our reward. J. P. HUGHES.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Among the Baptists.

Dear Brethren:—

THERE is an organization among the Virginia Baptists, (whether it is peculiar to them or common among Baptists everywhere, I do not know) called "Ministers' and Deacons' Association," which meets on Friday before every fifth Sunday for the purpose of discussing and examining Scripture subjects.

The modus of conducting these meetings, is substantially as follows, to wit: At each meeting all the preliminaries of the succeeding meeting are arranged by assigning Scriptural themes to chosen brethren who are required to write essays thereon, and exegesis of Bible texts are likewise written and then read before the association.

Then these essays are discussed and criticised, and finally the vote of the body is taken, and they are adopted or rejected according to their loyalty or disloyalty to Baptist principles.

The last meeting of this body assembled in Blacksburg, and I availed myself of the opportunity and the kind invitation of members thereof to attend its sessions. I did not hear the discussion on Friday, owing to pressing arrangements. On Saturday morning on entering the house, they were discussing the subject of co-operating with other denominations. The only trouble they encountered in reaching an affirmative conclusion was their strict Communion. After saying a great deal pro and con (not much con however), it was voted that pulp-it affiliating was not incompatible with strict communion. To a looker-on it does seem, notwithstanding a little incongruous to see Baptist and Peco-Baptist brethren riding along sweetly together on the same fraternal train, until they arrive at a sacramental station, when a sudden cloud envelops the Baptist's brow and they switch their late, loving yoke-fellows on a side-track, while they go into the Lord's restaurant for refreshments.

It is verily a hard nut for them to crack, and it is giving them a world of vexation in many places. English Baptists, and those of the Northern and Eastern states of our Union have cut the Gordian knot, by throwing the sacramental doors open.

Hall of England, in his inevitable debate with Kinghorn (both Baptists, Hall representing the liberal and Kinghorn the strict communions) has triumphantly demonstrated the utter untenableness of the strict communistic position.

Dr. Seiss, in his "Baptist System Examined," has dealt them a stunning blow, which has made their columns to reel. While I do not indulge in hasty predictions, yet the signs of the times unmistakably point to their abandonment of that party plank eventually. There is no substantial difference between them now, according to the Baptist's own confession, and reason and policy combine to urge an untrammelled affiliation.

This was followed by an exegesis of Mark 9: 9. It was maintained that this Scripture taught the necessity of believers passing through the purifying ordeal of temptation, which was the salting process spoken of, and that those who did not submit to the process were subject to the further punishment of eternal fire. They very correctly threw overboard the Catholic dogma of purgatorial fire, but the doctrine of the final redemption of the wicked, which is an inevitable sequence of their theory, was treated with dignified silence.

This was succeeded by an elaborate and lengthy essay on "Infant Baptism."

This essay afforded the ancient, inveterate foes of that rite, a rich opportunity to air their anti-infant baptism sentiments, and they went for the friendless waif with a vim. After mercilessly picking and battering the foundling, they sent it overboard, labeled: "Born of Papal Superstition and Baptismal Regeneration."

The discussion evolved a decided antagonism to the ordinance of baptism as an essential constituent in the plan of salvation.

The Baptist position on this question is remarkable for its aggregation of inconsistencies and contradictions.

Its prime signification, they maintain, is to symbolize an event that forms the basis of the Christian system; the burial and resurrection of Jesus Christ; yet the people need not symbolize it if they do not wish it. It is likewise an act of obedience, yet the people need not obey it, if they do not wish to. Its observance is an evidence of a non-converted heart. It is essential to Communion in the Baptist cloister, yet it is not essential to a triumphant entry in heaven. It is to be observed because the sins are pardoned, yet its non-observance will not affect the state of the pardoned sinner.

From the foregoing and other instances, such as pleading for immersion, because of its apostolical origin, and rejecting the trine form in which it was universally administered by the apostles and primitive Christians, as the New Testament and Baptist church historians prove, we are forced to conclude that their theology is inextricably mixed.

Come friends, lay aside your partisan theories and join the only organization that is exemplifying the doctrine and worship of the Apostolic churches.

Next an exegesis of Matt. 5: 5, was read, "The meek shall inherit the earth."

The essayist advocated the doctrine of the restitution of all things, both literally and spiritually, with reference to the material earth, and the righteous inhabitants thereof, and that this world ultimately would be the everlasting abode of the ransomed of the Lamb. The discussion developed the existence of two parties. One party, taking issue with the essayist, maintained that the blessings referred to, were those accruing from the state of peace and reconciliation with God, which secured the blessings and promises of this life, and that which is to come.

They maintained that an unconverted person was totally incapable of a proper and full enjoyment of God's various blessings, and that, in reality, none were capable of inheriting the blessing therein promised, but the servants of God, basing their views on such Scriptures as, "The unconverted are dead while they live." The party of the essayist supported their theory on those Scriptures that speak of the restitution of all things, both with reference to the literal return of the Jews to their Canaan, and of this world to its state of primeval glory which was lost by the transgression of Adam both spiritually and physically. They claimed that by the universal rules of Scriptural interpretation, which rules require the acceptance of the surface meaning of the Scriptures, when it does not involve an absurdity, or does not conflict with other Scriptures, we should accept their theory. Their discussions were animated and interesting.

They were not satisfied with their investigations, hence it was voted to reconsider it at the December meeting, which will be held at Big Lick in Roanoke Co.

I could not help reflecting while they were contending for the surface meaning of the Scriptures, as required by the rules of interpretation, that they were yielding an immense advantage to our cause.

What theological chemist could extract anything but literal Feet-washing, from the surface doctrine of John 13th, or a literal Charity kiss from the epistles, or a real Love-feast or agape, or deipnon from Luke 22: 15, 20; 1 Cor. 11: 25; John 13: 2, 4; Jude 12. Evidently and confessedly, the apostolic and primitive churches found abundant evidence therein, justifying a veritable feast, besides the emblems of Christ's passion.

At any rate, we, as exemplifiers of ancient usages, should be saved the jeers and scoffs that oftentimes constitute the chief point of the argument of our adversaries, who, at convenient seasons, call so loudly for the surface meaning of God's Word.

At the night session an essay on reason and revelation, was read and discussed. The theme was too metaphysical both for the speaker and the hearers, and the most philosophical of the former were conscious of their inadequacy to treat it satisfactorily. The only prominent point in the discussion was the prevailing tendency of the times to rationalism, which is the product of the elevation of reason on the ruins of faith.

A true exposition of the theme of reason and revelation would necessarily comprehend the great superiority of the wisdom evolved in the revelation of Jesus Christ, which is proclaimed in 2 Tim. 1: 10, over the most exalted monuments of human reason, to which the apostle alludes in 1 Cor. 1: 21, and which achieved its most marvelous triumphs in the justly celebrated philosopher, Socrates, who conducted his disciples along and up the dizzy heights of the un-revealed and mysterious, when suddenly halting, his own head whirling in the hazy atmosphere of his prodigious altitude, he points his eager inquirers to the necessity of one coming from heaven to instruct him further; and Plato whose grand and majestic soul dwelt in region of the gods, and who penetrated the depths of human wisdom, as the Leviathan explores the depths of the mighty ocean, or scaled the lofty summits of the Chimborazo of the mental world with the grace and ease of the king of birds, yet he could not comprehend or discover the simplest truth, — the resurrection connected with the mission and sacrifice of Jesus Christ as an essential element in the resurrection of the soul. Read the proof of the foregoing in "The Christian Element in Plato," page 146, and in numerous other places in his writings.

The meeting concluded with an essay on Home Missions.

It was shown that there were 70,000 Baptists in the state of Va., alone, and that the sum of one half cent per member was contributed to its support. This contribution, I presume, is independent of the contributions in support of State and Foreign missions, and for the salaries of the local preachers.

I submit the following reflections on the report of the essayist. They number more in the State of Virginia alone, than we do in the whole world. There is probably 100 per cent, more average wealth in our church than in theirs, yet we have no system of State or Foreign missions except what exists in embryo in the Brethren's Evangelizing Association, that was evolved out of the Church Extension Union on the 10th of last month, and some local arrangements.

We are thus hiding the lamp of truth from the world, while the imperfect systems of religious worship are supported amply by the wealth of their members, and converts thereto are made by the thousand. We need not expect to rival them in numbers, from the fact that their system does not forbid many carnal indulgences which ours will not tolerate. But surely we ought to, at least, equal them in zeal and make as great efforts to establish a perfect system of worship as they do an imperfect system.

Dear Brethren:—

AS we belong to the flock, and are blessed with the opportunity of communicating, through the kindness of our Saviour, we will attempt to inform each other.

Our elder, David Wolfe has been under medical treatment for about two months. Notwithstanding his critical condition, his case looks brighter to-day, and there are some hopes of his recovery, which will be joyful news to all the Brethren. Let us pray for the brother, and the Lord may not take him away from us. The second Sunday of last month there was a young sister baptized in the Concord church, and on the last Sunday in the month, a young brother was baptized in the Mill Creek church. Owing to the ill health of Bro. Wolfe we were not able to have our meetings as regularly as usual.

G. W. MILLER.

From Abilene, Kansas.

Dear Brethren:—

THE last council meeting of Falls City congregation will long be remembered by the dear brethren and sisters. It occurred on June 1st, and was surely a solemn occasion to me. I think all our meetings should be solemn to us and that for the following reasons:

First, Because God has ordained them for the upbuilding of his people, and promised, where two or three are gathered together in His name there He will be in the midst of them. And Paul saith, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering: for he is faithful that promised. And let us consider one another to provide unto love and to good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is."

Second, This meeting was solemn to me, because I could not meet all the members there, and should have liked very much to meet once more with all of them, because it was the last council meeting I had ever expected to attend in this district, of which I was a member ever since its organization, which took place eight years ago, the 16th of last Oct., at the house of Urias W. Miller, followed by a pleasant Communion season, the first ever held by the brethren in Richardson Co., Neb. The elders present at the time were Daniel Fry from Illinois, John Murray and David Brower from Iowa. — Now this last council meeting we had to take the parting hand, and God only knows whether we shall ever meet again on earth. But the echo of the last council meeting sounds daily in my mind and makes me feel solemn to-day, when I think of the labor the church has to perform at such meetings, to help each other along in the narrow way, and give one another good counsel in the spirit of meekness as recommended by the apostle Paul.

Let every member ask himself: Did I do all I could for the edifying of the church and the glory of God? And but not least of all, let us ask ourselves, Are we all ready, at such meetings, when called upon, to confess our faults one to another, that we may be healed as James tells us, or will we deny and hide our faults, until testimony is produced against us to find us in fault? No this should never, and will never be the case with the truly honest, Christian man and woman.

If I would deny that which I know is true in myself, just because the church cannot produce two or three witnesses in the case, I would make myself guilty of Acts 5: 4. I would lie, not unto men but unto God. God forbid that I or my other brother or sister ever should act the part of Ananias and Sapphira. Let us prove faithful to another, and to our God, is my prayer! Amen.

Yours in Christ,
JOHN FORNEY, SEN.

Dear Brethren:—

A FEW lines from this part of God's moral heritage may be interesting to your many readers.

Our members are much built up, and I do hope and pray, that we may continue so. Our love-feast was on the 4th of June, commencing at 5 o'clock in the evening. There was a large concourse of people during our services. Between five and six hundred members communed. In the evening six were baptized and next morning nine more came out and were baptized, making fifteen in all. Thanks to the Lord, and we hope that they will now enjoy themselves better, than they ever did before, knowing that a Christian life is the happiest that we can live. It will bring peace into our families, and into our neighborhood; for the man that lives a Christian life will not quarrel with his wife, children, neighbors, nor with any body else; neither will the wife or children quarrel and make trouble, if they live as they should. O what a pleasant time we will have if we are Christians; we will have a Heaven on earth.

On the 26th of June our dearly beloved Bro. J. W. Stein came to us, and preached five sermons in our church. Had large congregations, good order. All seemed to like Bro. Stein, and there was not one word said against his preaching. Being requested, he spoke on Baptism Saturday evening and Sunday at 11 o'clock. — Three souls were made willing to come out on the Lord's side and were baptized. I hope many more will come before long.

With the above additions, we had an increase of eighteen for the month of June, and seventeen since last Dec., making in all thirty-five in seven months. I hope there will be more during the next seven months. Let us all labor for the good of souls. Dear brethren, I do hope that our dear Bro. Stein will be cared for by the members, as he is devoting time and strength to the interests of the Master's cause.

Brethren let us all be more faithful than ever, devoting our time and means as much as we can to the salvation of poor souls. One soul is worth more than all the world.

JOHN KNISLEY.

Sinner, stop and consider what you are doing! What shall the harvest be?

JESUS.

BY M. H. FOWLER.

THE name of Jesus is always associated with all that is virtuous, pure, holy and good; and is always cherished in the heart of the Christian, and sometimes among those without. It is strange that one so pure and good could ever have been an object of hate or derision—one that is declared to be "chief among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." He who went about doing good, healing the sick, cleansing the lepers, opening the eyes of the blind, causing the lame to walk, the deaf to hear, and binding up the broken-hearted, one who was full of grace and truth; "nude himself of no reputation, and bowed to the yoke of suffering that he might appease the wrath of God which was kindled against the human family."

In his humiliation his judgment was taken away, he was despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief; he bore the contradiction of sinners against himself, and in all this not a word of complaint ever escaped his holy lips. When we look into the history of the past and search the record of this holy being in his three years and a half stay on earth, it is indeed refreshing to contemplate his character.

It seems impossible for us to know fully, or comprehend with certainty what he suffered in perfecting his mission on earth—the redemption of the human family, although he was Lord of all, yet he learned obedience by the things which he suffered.

We may by the Bible telescope and our mental vision illuminated by divine grace, see enough to fill our soul with admiration. What man save the man Christ Jesus could have so successfully overcome all the powers of darkness? To the children of men there was scarcely the glimmer of a single star to be seen piercing the murky cloud that warranted the hopes of the children of men, but Jesus dispelled the dark cloud by triumphing over all the powers of darkness, gaining the victory over death, hell and the grave. The legions of darkness were arrayed against the Lord, and against his Christ, even those that he came to save (Israel). "He came to his own and his own received him not," but the learned and the wise of Israel conspired against Jesus, yet amidst all the slander and torments he suffered not, but faithfully completed his work that the Father had given him to do; then was he betrayed, apprehended, led bound to the judgment hall; from thence to Calvary and nailed to the cross. Listen gentle reader, hear the sound of the hammer as it sends the rough nails crashing through his holy hands and feet; agonizing groans of the dying Lord; hear him say "Father forgive them, they know not what they do," and he cried, "It is finished." His part was complete, he gave up the ghost and went home to glory.

His valedictory is one of the best documents ever recorded, in which there is no word of complaint or bitterness, might but love to friend and foe. Has the present age no Jesus, or did he gather his mantle about him and leave it away forever to the world of bliss? No, "I will never leave you nor forsake you." "Lo I am with you always even unto the end of the world" is his promise. But this is given on conditions, if we do what he commands us, and love him as he has loved us; but where is that love that should characterize God's people? I fear the little foxes have crept in unawares and are sapping the beautifying substance from the lovely plant that should be well rooted in our very souls, and grow with all power of beauty, sending forth a sweet fragrance that wields an irresistible influence over all that comes within its reach, and yield to its power of attraction and admire its sweetness.

Sometimes the plant of love is drooping its beauty, is fading from the church. Is not this true my dear brethren? It needs the gentle showers of God's divine grace to revive the fading flower. What shall we do? I answer awake to a true sense of our obligation to God, and send forth our prayers in mass to that God that has measured the waters in his hand, and has meted out the heavens with a span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in balances, yea, let us pray to him for a gracious shower of divine grace from heaven, that love may grow within us in all its original power and beauty and sweetness. May God in his infinite mercy grant us all grace for every day and trial and keep us to the end that we may all obtain the crown of glory which Jesus will give to all the faithful.

GLEANINGS.

From Sister Stone.—We are but few in number here, and do not have preaching by the Brethren very often, yet we trust in the Lord to send laborers in the field in due season. The members are all in love and fellowship, as far as I know. We are always glad to get the Brethren at Work, for it is full of counsel. We have very pleasant weather now; are harvesting and threshing. The wheat crop is somewhat damaged with rust. Please give the earliest and best authority for Feet-washing, in the churches (as a church ordinance) from history.

Woodland, Yolo Co., Cal.

From S. Z. Shurr.—I finished my work in Elder David Bare's district a week ago. Had excellent success in taking subscriptions for Ashland College. Not a brother refused to do something when asked. C. Hooley is our local agent in this congregation. Next went to the district of Brethren Truby and Peter Long. Spent one week, had six meetings—preached at two funerals. Received an exceedingly warm reception by the Brethren here which will long be remembered by us. The Brethren here will do all for the College they are able. Bro. Noah Shuff is our local agent.

Goshen, Ind.

From Christy Hyler.—We have had six additions to the church by baptism this Spring and Summer. We have three churches in this county; in our own arm, namely the Brick church, we have between 200 and 300 members; seven deacons, five preachers. Next Saturday is our council-meeting. We have preaching once every month in our church, namely the first Sunday. Will some of the traveling brethren please visit us if convenient?

Greasy Creek, Va.

From S. C. Keim—I arrived home a few days ago, with my health much improved. Found one of our Brethren and citizen of Salisbury had passed away, shortly before I returned. When I went away he was in good health. I thank you for the favor of your paper at the Mountain Home. Bro. Merrill is still there and will remain for several months and would be thankful if you would permit the paper to continue its weekly visits to the Mountain Home for his as well as other invalid's benefit; hope it may also a benefit to you to bring it before many.

Ell. Lick Pa.

From South Bend, Ind.—We are glad to say one more has been willing to step down into the liquid stream to be initiated and engrafted into the Living Vine, for the purpose of drawing living water from the well of salvation, to thirst no more. He continues to ask, that he may receive fresh supplies, as an inducement to continue working for salvation; "For the crown is not," says the eminent Apostle, "at the beginning," nor half-way; "but he that endureth to the end, shall be saved." What a grand thought to contemplate, is the scheme of redemption. When we were sick and beyond human aid, God proposed to assist us by sacrificing His Son, who says, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink His blood, ye have no life in you." Our theme should be, brethren, to live not for our salvation, but all with whom we come in contact. "Salvation of the joyful sound."

INTERESTING ITEMS.

Joshua's Tomb.

THE following has been communicated to the committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund by Lieut. Conder. It embodies a fact which especially illustrates the value of the survey, viz. the value of Jewish names and sites. We have here Jews and Samaritans uniting in the belief that this place is none other than that where Joshua was buried and preserving still the high place dedicated to the memory of the "Prophet of the division." (See Joshua, chap. 13-21.)

There are two places in Palestine which might claim the honor of being the place of sepulchre of Joshua. The one is pointed out by Christian tradition, the other by Jewish. The name of the city where Joshua was buried was Timnath Heres, and it was situated in Mount Ephraim, but the exact site of it is not defined in the Bible, except by the statement that it was upon the north side of Mount Gosh, a place as yet not known. Christian tradition points to the town of Timnath, now the ruin of Tebech, on the Roman road from Antripatris to Jerusalem. Jerome speaks of this place as on the border between the possessions of Dan and Judah (though that border was not very well understood in his days), and on the way from Lydda to Jerusalem. Here Joshua's tomb was shown in his time.

The ruin of Tibneh has a remarkable rock cemetery, containing nine tombs, south of the site of the town, which was once the capital of the surrounding district. One of these tombs is large, with a portico supported on rude piers of rock, very simple. One of these piers was destroyed between 1866, when Major Wilson visited Tibneh, and 1873, when the survey party was there. There are niches for over two hundred lamps, once burning in front of the tomb entrance. Within there is a chamber with fourteen graves or kokim, and a passage, which at first looks like another grave, leads into an inner chamber with only one koka. There is no direct evidence as to the date of this tomb but in most cases where the more important rock tombs with such porticos can be approximately dated, they do not seem older than the first century of our era. Thus, though the Tomb may well be that described by Jerome, there is considerable doubt as to its being really that of Joshua; There two other curious facts as to Tibneh; the great oak tree, some forty feet high, near the tombs, is called Shiek el Tein, "the chief of the servant of God;" there is also a village about three miles to the east, called Kefr Ishma, or Joshua's village.

The second site for Timnath Heres is Kefr Heres, south of Habbus, and about nine from it. The Samaritans of the present day state, that Joshua, son of Nun, and Caleb, son of Jephunneh, were here buried. On the map of Marino Sanuto (1322) the same place will be found marked as Timnath Heres. The two tombs of Caleb and Joshua are noticed as here shown by Rabbi Jacob, of Paris, 1258, A. D., and thus three separate traditions point to the same place. Kefr Haris is an ordinary village on a hill among olive groves. It has on the east of it two sacred places resembling the other Mukam of the country, inclusive of Joseph's tomb. One of these has the curious name Nely Keffi, "Prophet of the division by lot." May we not under this title recognize Joshua, who divided the inheritance among the children of Israel? It seems by far the most probable that the place to which Jew and Samaritan both point would be the true site, for it is most striking to find Jews visiting and venerating a place in the country of Samaria; yet in Samaria the tombs of Joseph Eliezer, Phineas, Itamar, and Abishnah are still shown; and if we follow the indigenous rather than the foreign tradition, it is here that we should place the tomb of Joshua also.—Jewish Times.

Is Methodism Infallible?

THERE is one very curious fact in the basis of organized Methodism which has always seemed to us inconsistent with the genius of the body, though hitherto it has excited no dissatisfaction. We refer to the fact that Methodism can never alter its doctrinal basis, to the end of time; not even if the need to do so should be universally admitted. There are twenty-five Articles of Religion on which Methodism is doctrinally based. The highest administration of Methodist affairs is in the hands of the General Conference, and the constitution of the body places it under six restrictions, with a provision that five of these may be modified upon certain strict conditions; but the other never. This restriction, which is to stand forever, reads as follows:

"The General Conference shall not revoke, alter, or change our Articles of Religion, nor establish any new standards or rules of doctrine contrary to our present existing and established standards of doctrine."

That is what The Independent says about the unalterable doctrinal basis of Methodism. Right or wrong their "Articles of Religion" cannot be changed forever without a revolt against their fundamental law.

Recipe for Prosperity.

- 1. Let every youth be taught some useful art and be trained to industry and thrift.
2. Let every young man lay aside, and keep sacredly intact, a certain proportion of his earnings.
3. Let every one set out in life with a fixed determination to engage in business for himself, and let him put this determination into practice as early in life as possible.
4. Begin in a small, safe way, and extend your business as experience shall teach you is advantageous.
5. Keep your own books, and know constantly what you are earning and just where your stand.
6. Do not marry until in receipt of a tolerably certain income, sufficient to live on comfortably.
7. Never get into debt. A man who owes nothing can never fail.
8. Let every man who is able, buy a farm upon which to bring up his sons. It is on the farm that the best men, morally and intellectually, are trained.
9. Bear in mind that your business cannot be permanently prosperous unless you share its advantages equally with your customers. An "all turkey, all buzzard," system of business can never succeed in the long run. The parties to a transaction must be mutually benefited if the trade is to be kept up.
10. Experience has shown that a scrimping policy with employes is not the most profitable for the employer. Live and let live, is a better theory.
11. Never get your business so much extended that you are driven to take in another. If you engage in a partnership at all, let it not be forced on you.
12. If you had yourself incompetent to manage a business successfully, settle down contentedly to work for wages, do your best for your employer, make his interests yours and shape your expenditures so as to live within your income. Every one is not qualified by nature to manage successfully, but as much real happiness may be enjoyed in a salaried position as in any other, if the individual be only frugal and contented.
13. Do not seek political office.
14. Aim to be just and fair in all your dealings, and cultivate a good reputation for paying promptly.
If these few rules were generally observed, we should hear but little complaint of hard times.—Selected.

FATHER HAS GONE HOME.

Now the family chain is broken
One link from our little band,
He, we dearly loved has left us,
Left us for a happier land.

Like the oak of many Winters,
It has fell at last,
Sickness has prevailed upon him,
Jesus called him, he must go.

Vain were all our kind endeavors,
To restore his health again—
Friends, physicians none could help him,
Why were all our labors vain?

He had stood the storms of many a Winter;
But he had to leave us,
With mother and sisters,
He could not prolong his stay.

We have followed him to the church-yard,
There his lovely form is laid,
There among the falling leaves,
There we find his grave.

Weep not mother, weep not sisters,
Trust in God to meet again;
Yes, dear father crossed the river,
Free from sorrow, sickness, pain.

Mother, sisters let us try to meet him,
In a better world than this,
Here is no fading city,
There's a land of peaceful bliss.

Let us try to hold out faithful,
While the hoop holds out to burn,
And when the Savior comes to call us,
We will meet dear father at home.

THE AUTHENTICITY OF THE BIBLE.

[A synopsis of a sermon delivered by S. H. Basler on Monday, June 10th, 1878, in the Tent, Two miles West of North Manchester, Ind. Reported by M. M. Esheleman.]

"We also bear record, and ye know that our record is true."—1 John 1:2.

THE question is sometimes proposed to the professor of religion, in this day of light and science: "Do you know that the Bible is true?" We all reply that we know that the Bible is true; then some one enquires, "How do you know that it is true?" Thousands of professors of religion in this country say, they know it is true, but they cannot tell how they know it is true, or rather believe it is true, but they cannot give a single proof in support of the fact. Away back in yonder age, in the apostolic age, we hear one say, "The record is true." Now I believe that we have the same proof, the same evidence in this age that the Bible is true. But we shall proceed to give some proof in support of the fact that the Bible is true. I know that my audience is not composed of skeptics, but of Christian believers; however it may be profitable for me to investigate the truth in support of the Word of God. Some say that the Bible says it is true. This is true, but the simple assertion of the Bible is not enough to sustain that idea; we want other evidence in its support.

The first proof which I offer in support of the truthfulness of the Bible is its style of composition. Go back with me to Egypt and observe the style of learning there. The books of Moses are very full of the Egyptian style of composition. The origin of these books is not doubted by the best scholars of the age, for their style and composition are not found among other nations. The language of Egypt is not the language of any other people. The language used by Moses was used in the days of Moses, hence is proof in support of the idea the first five books of the Old Testament were written by Moses. Then there is the book of Esther, it bears evidence of the Chaldean or Syriac style. This was the language of the age when that book was written.

When we come to the New Testament which was written in Greek, we find the style of the age in which it was written. Language and style of language bear internal evidence of the authenticity of the Bible. It was written by three classes of men, Jews, Gentiles, Christians. It could not have been forged by the Gentiles, from the fact that in that case it would not have been received by the Jews—their being a wide field between Jews and Gentiles. The old Bible was not written by Christians, for they came after it was written. The New Testament was not written by the Jews, for it tells of their crucifying Jesus—a fact they would not have told on themselves. It was not written by Gentiles, for they were not in sympathy with Jesus and labored for the extermination of the entire system of the Christian religion. It could not have been forged by Christians, because it is so remarkable. They were subjected to afflictions, persecutions, buffetings and trials of every kind. What motives could have prompted them to write such a work, if the whole thing were fictitious? Does it not represent them as forsaking all for Jesus' sake? Paul one of the grandest luminaries of the age, left a high position and went forth to preach the truth, left the palace for the humble dwelling-place, worked at manual labor, walked often instead of riding, endured storms, tempests, imprisonments, stripes and even death for Jesus' sake. Our faith, perhaps, would be soon shaken, were we required to go that way. He gave up home, rest, friends and above all his great name for the religion of Christ. This last is a great loss.

Take away father, mother, brothers and sisters and still the loss is not like taking away your name. Take wealth, and you feel not the loss like that of giving up your position in life. But Paul not only gave up home, friends and wealth, but most of all, his highest standing in the world, to be thrown among wild beasts, whipped, scolded and dragged through the streets. But what did he gain? Tribulation, experience, eternal life, a home beyond the dark waters, in the mansions of the blest. The same argument will apply to any other apostle. Now that they should do all this and not be of God, is inexplicable, why should they do so? They could not have forged it for popular gain, for the people were against that system—to be a Christian then, was to be unpopular. Cowards would not have endured what they endured for mere nothing. From these considerations we conclude that the Old and New Testaments are genuine—the Word of God; hence John says, we know, not only think, but know the record is true.

The next proof in support of the idea that the Bible is true, is the history of the Bible. Go back to the Red Sea where the children of Israel stood, the sea in front and Pharaoh's army behind. There they were; they could not go forward; could not go back. Here Moses said, "stand still and see the salvation of God." He smote the sea with his rod, the waters separated, and the people of God passed over in safety. The children of Israel looked back and beheld the hosts of Pharaoh swept into destruction. I think I would like to have stood there and heard the shout of joy that went up from delivered Israel when they saw they were safe. Now if the account of Israel had been written by their enemies, and it were untrue, do you suppose they would have thus written? But if those things had not occurred, yet were recorded by Moses, would not his enemies have exposed him in his day? But not a word comes down to us from his enemies stating that the whole thing is false; but on the other hand, their silence is evidence of its truthfulness.

When I look back to Mount Pisgah and see the old prophet and leader of Israel giving his farewell address to his people, and going up to view the promised land, I think I would like to have been there and beheld his calmness, and sweetness of temper. If the great work he had done is false, why did not his enemies expose it? Go to Jordan, go to Jerusalem and behold the mighty works, and if they be untrue, why did not the enemies of that work expose it? But we come on down to the birth of Christ, do the men of that age deny it? A little further and we behold him raising the dead, healing the sick, making the blind see, and doing many wonderful works; do the men of that age deny their occurrence? Thousands repented, believed and were baptized, do the historians of that age deny these things? Josephus, the oldest historian of that age acknowledges Jesus Christ. He does not try to prove that Jesus was an impostor, but what he does say is for Jesus.

Prophecy is next in order to support the authenticity of the Bible. The sons of Shem and Japheth are ruling the world. Nineveh and Babylon were mighty cities, and God through holy men predicted their fall, and the prediction has been literally fulfilled. Tyne has gone to pieces, and Sidon is no more. Then go to Jerusalem and hear Jesus say, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings and ye would not." Though Jesus thus showed his love for Jerusalem, they would not hear, and that great city is no more. Fulfill prophecy in all of its details, and see how much of it has already been fulfilled. This then is strong evidence of the authenticity of God's Word.

We now come to the preservation of the Bible. Often have men tried to destroy the Bible, but so far have not been able to extinguish it. Thousands of books have been destroyed, have passed into oblivion, but the Bible has withstood all its adversaries. Immense numbers of Bibles have been destroyed with the hope of sweeping it from the earth, but blessed be God to-day it is found in millions of families. It lies upon nearly every table in this broad and beautiful land, and O may it lie in every heart. Its preservation is a miracle.

It is one Book, composed of sixty-six smaller books. Its authors were over 1500 years in making the Book. It contains poetry as well as prose. Through all the vast work, there is perfect sympathy, perfect harmony, and is "profitable for doctrine, for correction and for instruction in righteousness." By it we will be judged in the great and last day, when all the nations of the earth shall stand before God.

Select sixty-six books written on one subject by as many writers as have composed the Bible, and there will be no harmony at all. In them we would find discord and confusion of ideas, but not so in the Bible. In it we learn of the way of life, and our duties toward each other. It has done much for man, is now doing much and will yet carry the great tidings of salvation to immense multitudes. Infidels say, we do not need the Bible—that it does more harm than good. As well might they say, we do not need the sun, for it burns our faces. Infidels do not know that the Bible has been the means of planting religious liberty in this Western Hemisphere. It is the primary cause of all good educational institutions. Do without it and we are thrown into heathenism—thrown out into darkness. But it is found in Christian homes, not only Christian homes, but also in the homes of hard-hearted fathers and mothers who do not yield to its gentle influence, and turn to God and live. It has helped you and me to get this far on our journey to heaven—to live in God's love and precious promise. To the weary but faithful pilgrims to the celestial city it says, "Your journey is almost to a close here." Over yonder across the dark waters is a beautiful home prepared for you by the blessed Jesus. Soon you will be called to go; be true, be faithful and a crown of life shall be thine forever. May He who has called us and journeyed with us, be your everlasting Guide and Comforter.

FROM C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Sister Mary Ann Riggle:—

BOTH your letter and postal are here. Your history fills me with amazement. There are fathomless mysteries in every life. Yours seems to be full of them. Christianity is a perfect regulator of human conduct, and such a perfect mastery of evil, that whether our afflictions are the result of well or ill doing, they are educators to a higher character. So completely is everything under a gracious Providence, that our roughest follies become conditions of unspeakable good. Ambition often sets persons on a towering pinnacle, from which they presumptuously cast themselves for the consummation of selfish ends, and are dashed in pieces, to be regathered and rebuilt into sons and daughters of Almighty God.

Disappointment, loss, and suffering are a glorious trinity in the education of the soul. What a sublime attitude to be able to turn the face Godward, and say without misgiving, "I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day." 2 Tim. 1:12. This unreserved commitment secures the fulfillment of every iota of the Divine promise. If the "peace of God keep our consciences as we meditate THROUGH JESUS CHRIST," we will have the very serenity that sustained the Godman in His humiliation and destitution. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," and meekness will always make us the inheritors of all things. O how rare to possess the mind of Christ, and et in the riches of righteousness, and have the wealth of the universe though we may have nothing. Your discipline is severe, and nothing can give you the fact or the sense of victory or comfort, but the conviction that that your "life is hid with Christ in God," and that your mind and heart, your words and resolutions, are wholly under His direction.

To have our failings and errors issue a good, we must offer ourselves without reserve to the disposal of Infinite Wisdom, Goodness, and Righteousness. Our faulty may take us to a lion's den, and our treachery may bring famine, and take us to Egypt to endure the burdens of bondage. God will eventuate both a good to our souls, if we so allow. To please God under correction we must meekly, and trustfully, and with perfect integrity, look up into the face of the All-good, and say, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." Our Maker and Redeemer knows how stubborn we are, and how self-deceptive, and what painful guiding it takes and what smelting, until God the Father we can say, "not as I will, but as thou wilt." You are only in the mill in which all of God's bread is ground. The great Lord was between the same burrs. Sing your psalm of resignation as you pass through the disintegrating ordeal, and ever keep your soul seasoned with the "patience" that turns the dross of earth into the gold of Heaven, and the fire of chastening into the Skein of eternal rapture. Rom. 8:28. There is no Patmos without an Apocalypse unless we interpose the screen of self. Do not wait to be humbled, offer yourself to the lowest place, and God will see to your exaltation and coronation. Let Christ be all!

"The work of the righteous is life, and righteousness."—Psalm 119:105.

THE VICTORIOUS CHRISTIAN.

My married friends, can I forget,
 Or must the grave eternal sever,
 They linger in my memory yet;
 And in heart they'll live forever

They loved me once with love sincere,
 And never did they deceive me,
 But often in my conflict here,
 They rallied to relieve me.

I fain would weep, but what of tears,
 No tears of mine could'er recall them;
 Nor would I wish that graveling care;
 Cares like mine should e'er befall them.

They rest in realms of light and love;
 They dwell upon the Mount of glory,
 They bask in beams of bliss above,
 And shout to tell their happy story.

I heard them bid the world adieu,
 I saw them on the rolling billow,
 Their far-off home appeared in view,
 While yet they pressed a dying pillow.

I heard the parting pilgrim tell,
 While passing Jordan's stormy river;
 Adieu to earth, for all is well;
 Now all is well with me forever.

O how I long to join their wing,
 And range their fields of blooming flowers;
 Come holy watchers, come and bring,
 A mourner to your blissful bowers.

I speed with rapture on my way,
 Nor would I pause at Jordan's river,
 With songs I'd utter endless day,
 And live with a y friends forever.

WORK.

BY S. C. BEHRE.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10.

THE mortality of man being the leading subject of Solomon in this chapter, and observing that wisdom and piety exempt not men from death, he first inquires that God's love, or hatred to one man above another, is not to be gathered by His dealings with them here, where all things in the common course of Providence come alike to all. The Christian has duties on earth, though his afflictions are in heaven; while he is in the body and in the world; though he is not of the world, he is to show the influence of Christianity in every station in life. If the Lord be God, then let us follow Him; if our flesh be God, then serve it well. If heaven be better than earth and fleshly pleasure, come away then and seek a better country, and let us lay up treasures where moth and rust do not corrupt, and thieves cannot break through nor steal.

Agrippa, exclaimed, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Alas! how many are like Agrippa, only almost persuaded? Christians they are indeed in name, but they might as well and more consistently be called heathen, for they live "without God and without Christ in the world." And the love of sin—the fear of shame, the vanities of the world, and the habit of delay on the most important of all subjects, even leave them almost Christians; almost Christians they are; almost Christians they yidel; but almost to reach heavenly bliss, and no more, is never to attain it at all. O how many might not only almost, but might be persuaded to be Christians, were all the professed Christians to work with the power and light, that God has given to none.

We are all talents committed to our Master, and are accountable for the use or abuse of them. These talents may be employed for the glory and various in kind; but for all we must give an account, and God will require no more from us than is best. For just as Christ says to the minister, "Go into all the world, preach the Gospel to every creature." We are happy to know that the missionary spirit is kindling among the brethren; but would ask the talented ministerial brethren, why not go into our large cities, where the goddess of fashion is originating all the abominations and desolations? And the false teachers crying aloud unto them, "If there be a hell, come give your name to the church, with all your pride, pomp and dignity; and you shall pass into the realms of bliss." Oh why have them lead souls astray, without trying first to preach unto them, the true Gospel.

There is much for us all to do in the cause of Christ. Also to guard against, especially we who are young in years, young in the church. We promised before the most high God and a multitude of witnesses, that we would forsake the world, and live for God and heaven. Let us ask ourselves the question, are we fulfilling this promise? Or are we looking back into the ways of the world?

There is work enough on this populous and sinful world, to employ the heads and hands, and tongues and hearts of all. Let us show to the world by our walk and conversation, that we have been with Christ, and are learning of Him. There is more joy to be had in a day, if the Sun of Life shines clear upon us in the state of holiness, than in a whole life of sinful pleasure. Then let us work with our might while it is called to-day, "for the night cometh wherein no man can work." Yes, come He will, to judge the world in righteousness. To us, through the messenger of death, He may soon come. Then our state must be fixed, and we must realize the fact that "He shall reward every man according to his works." Behold! we were created in the image of God; destined for a noble purpose. If we consider the works of Him by whom all things were created, excluding therefrom man alone, we can see no mark of design, or any objects that tend to the glory of God. Behold Him as He enters life, possessing a faculty, a mind superior to all other terrestrial beings, a conscience by which we can discern right from wrong, surrounded by all that exalts and embellishes life, in the midst of plenty, with the power of providing for all our wants, and above all having the privilege of cultivating our minds, preparing ourselves for usefulness in this life, and joy in a life to come. Oh! what an imposing spectacle presents itself to view, as we thus contemplate man. The scene that is thus presented to the eye of our imagination, is second to but one other. "That one is beyond our description. Our imagination cannot conjecture the dazzling brightness of that scene, neither can we imagine the joy, the ecstatic bliss of those who participate in it. We refer to the scene that will take place when the object for which man was created shall have been completed. The object referred to, and for which man was created, is his immortalization, and his participation with angels in an everlasting glorification and honoring of the Creator and Redeemer of mankind.

Oh! what a magnificent scene that will be when, as Paul truly says, "This mortal shall put on immortality and this corruptible shall put on incorruption." May we all, with Paul, when we come to die, be able to say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

THE TWO KEYS.

BY H. W. LANDIS.

BY nature the hearts of men are closed against Christ, therefore the Master says, "Behold I stand at the door and knock." Rev. 3: 20. The door being closed, here signifies, that Christ is a stranger to the sinner. We conclude that ignorance is the key which makes fast the door, and knowledge the key by which it is opened.

If knowledge is a key that opens the heart to Christ, as is plain from Luke 11: 52, where Christ denounceth woe upon them that took away "the key of knowledge," then ignorance must be the key that makes fast the door of the heart against Christ. On this ground Christ told the woman of Samaria, that her unbelief was the root of her ignorance. "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink, thou wouldest have asked of him and he would have given thee living water." John 4: 10. Ah, sinner, did you but realize the preciousness of this blessed Savior, that is offered to your souls in the Gospel. Did you see His beauty, fulness, and feel your own need of Him, all the world could not keep you from Him; you would break through all sufferings, all self-denials, to come to the enjoyment of Him. Alas, if you will not seek after a knowledge of Him who hath eternal life, you must some day realize that ignorance is Satan's sceptre which he sways over all his kingdom of darkness, and by which he holds sinners in miserable bondage to him; hence the devils are called "The rulers of the darkness of this world." Eph. 6: 12.

Alas, were the eyes of sinners opened to see their woeful state, and their remedy in Christ, he could not hold them in subjection one day longer; they would break away from under his cruel government and run by millions to Christ; for so they do as soon as God opens their eyes; in the same hour that they are turned from darkness to light, they are also turned "from the power of Satan unto God." Acts 26: 18. Blessed Father, help, oh help all to cry aloud, "Thy will and not mine be done."

O that sinners could know the worth of their souls, the dreadful danger they are exposed to, and the fearful wrath of a just God that is hanging over them, they would beseech Almighty God to raise them from the sloughs of ignorance, that they might search the Word, and obtain a knowledge of the willingness and ability of Christ to save them, instead of resting secure and quiet, as they do, their lamentations and cries would be, "what shall we do to be saved?" Help Christians, yea, help Lord! O, sinner, will you at once strive to gain knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus? By so doing you will cast away the key to the door of your heart, called ignorance, and you will gladly cling to the key called knowledge, which will prepare you to open, when your blessed Lord says, "Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come into him." By admitting your dear Redeemer; your ignorance will be changed to knowledge, your unbelief to repentance, faith and baptism for the remission of sins, your pride to deep humility, your customs in sin, to working for Jesus, and your professed against holiness, to a sweet enjoyment of the religion of Jesus Christ, after which He shall sup with you and you with Him.

Having now a teacher that is full of grace, let us lean upon His strong arm, and become living witnesses for Jesus. May the Spirit of Almighty God accompany every true effort that is put forth for the advancement of His cause.

PRAYER.

BY JOHN FURNEY.

"I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting." 1 Tim. 2: 8.

THE Apostle, with much emphasis sets forth the need of prayer. "I will therefore that men pray everywhere." Let us properly search into this important commandment, and we will at once see the great need of prayer everywhere.

1. It is one of the Christian's weapons, to war a good warfare, holding faith and a good conscience, which some having put away; concerning faith, have made shipwreck; and were delivered unto Satan. 1 Tim. 1: 18, 19, 20. "I exhort therefore that first of all prayer, supplication, be made for all men, for kings and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty, for this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior, who will have all men saved." 1 Tim. 2: 1-4.

Prayer is for the safekeeping of the believer, and the salvation of all men is among the first reasons that Paul gives, for men to pray everywhere, and without ceasing 1 Thess. 5: 17. And in this Paul and his companions in the ministry made themselves ensamples to the churches. Phil. 4: 3, 4. "I thank my God upon every remembrance of you all, making request for your fellowship in the Gospel." Col. 3: 9. For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will. 1 Thess. 1: 2, 3. "We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers, remembering without ceasing your work of faith." 2 Thess. 1: 11. "Wherefore also we pray always for you, that your God would count you worthy of this calling and fulfill all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power." 2 Tim. 1: 3. "I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day." Phil. 4. "I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers; hearing of thy love and faith which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus and toward all saints."

2. Prayer is a power to help the ministry to preach the Gospel. Eph. 6: 18, 19. "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints. And for me that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly to make known the mystery of the Gospel." 2 Thess. 3: 12. "Finally brethren pray for us, that the Word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you. And that we may be delivered from unrighteous and wicked men; for all men have not faith."

3. Prayer is as necessary and useful to the Christian, as a vessel is to draw water from Jacob's well. Prayer is asking. Christ told the Samaritan woman, if she would have known him she would have asked of him, and he would give her to drink that she would no more thirst. But this she could not understand, He not having a vessel and the well was deep. The well, that Fountain of Life from whence we can draw living water, will always yield a supply of the living water. He tells us in Matt. 7, "Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you." Prayer is the deep expression and sensation of the hungry and thirsty soul, by which we can draw all the sweet blessings from that deep and inexhaustible Fountain of love, where all the rich treasures are in store, to supply all our wants, both for time and eternity, for soul, body and spirit. The child of God cannot be too thankful to the heavenly Father that He is ready to hear their prayers. 1 Peter 3: 2.

The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers, yes more so than any earthly father will be to give bread to his son when he asks him, yea He will avenge them speedily, and give them the Holy Ghost that asketh him, and cries to him day and night. For example see Acts 12: 5, when Peter was kept in prison: but prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him, 7th verse. "And behold the angel of the Lord came upon him, and brought him out quickly."

So we see Paul and Silas, when they prayed at midnight and sang praises unto God, and suddenly there was a great earthquake, and they immediately were released of their bonds. Acts 16: 25, 26; Acts 7: 55. Stephen being full of the Holy Ghost, could look up into heaven, and see the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. "And when they stoned him, he could say in his prayer, Lord Jesus receive my spirit, and so fell asleep." And again, Acts 4: 31, "When Peter and John were brought before the council, and were punished, and let go, they went to their own company. And when they had prayed, the place was shaken, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost."

I have now set before the reader, a few of the many examples, we have in the Bible,—how God speedily answers the prayers of His children, when they call upon Him. I might adduce one hundred more witnesses, such as David, Daniel, the three Hebrew children and Sarah, and Hannah. All the ancient people of God, both men and women, were praying people, and they all realized and appreciated the benefit of prayer. They did not only do it once a day or in the beginning of their holy life, but they continued steadfastly in prayer. Acts 2: 42. And they had also stated hours for it, the ninth hour was one of them, Acts 3: 1. Peter also went on the house top to pray the sixth hour. Daniel was three times a day on his knees praying. God wants our prayers. Do we give them? Behold, John saw the temple of God, full of the odor of the prayers of the saints.

CHRISTIAN UNITY.

BY S. T. BOSSERMAN.

THERE is no perfect happiness in the absence of unity. A well regulated family laboring together in love and harmony, is but the outgrowth of a perfect unity, which is characteristic of obedience to the divine Law. To be one is to render obedience to inspiration. Unity is co-eternal with God. Unity abounds in heaven. Estrangement is upon earth. Through the love of God, Jesus Christ came to earth to establish unity; left the beatitudes of glory, became poor, was despised, betrayed, in order to establish a reunion upon earth. He went in solitude to the garden, with all its agony, to lighten his heavy heart; was before the Jewish tribunal with its mocks and insults, expiated on the cross, enduring the penalty denounced upon the transgressors, suffered all things to establish this glorious, this heavenly union.

Now hear his petition as it falls from his everlasting lips, "that they all may be one; as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." John 17: 21. What a glorious union, to be one in Christ and the Father. Not only a few of his followers may be one with him; not only his disciples of old; not only a favored few; not only those who watch over the flock; no, bless his holy name; "neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." How charming "that they may all be one." Hence the Christian should labor for greater union. His efforts should not only be directed to the church in a general sense, but also locally. Local churches under his charge must have his attention. Unity must not alone exist between the ministers of local churches, but there must be unity between official and laity. When this is firmly established, then we see the fruits of the spirit, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering gentleness."

The thought of unity and union of sentiment was forcibly brought to my mind while in attendance at our late Annual Conference, as we saw there so much of the fruits of the Spirit manifested in the adjustment of queries in regard to church government. Then while this pleasing thought is so commendable, may it not, should it not be yet more cultivated? Let us all be one, and labor more and more for union. Let us ever show practically to our brethren and sisters in church government, that the youngest member has a voice (vote) and the bishop no more, that we are all one in Christ. Let us show our love practically to one another, respecting the efforts of each in their endeavors to worship God.

If the weak say but little; if they cannot talk much or pray fluently, if labored to their capacity, how much lower in the scale of human attainment, than they who talk, preach or pray more elaborately? All laboring in their greatest capacity, are equal; hence should be equally respected. True Christian regard for one another, will lead each one to feel that they have a position in the church or Christian society to fill which none can fill but themselves, and are made to feel welcome in that capacity. May we then as brethren and sisters in Christ labor more for unanimity in word and in action, in every thing that pertains to our holy Christianity, that we may be firmly united in love and Christian affection, that this fervent prayer and holy petition (John 17), will meet the design of its Author.

THE TONGUE.

BY D. A. BOWLING.

"Even so the tongue is a little member and boasteth great things. Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell. For every kind of beasts and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind; but the tongue can no man tame; it is an unbridled evil, full of deadly poison." James 3: 5, 6, 7, 8.

THE subject is contention among members. We as a body in Christ are commanded not to speak evil of one another, for he that speaketh evil of his brother, judgeth his brother. Then if we be a judge, we are not a doer of the Law. This brings us into a strait. Just here we should examine ourselves to see if we are guilty of talking about one another. If we are guilty, we undoubtedly know the result. When we speak evil of our brother or sister, we stand in jeopardy with God. He will hold us accountable for it. Can we in the name of Jesus, give our brother the hand and kiss, and yet behind his back speak all manner of evil against him? Will God Almighty recognize us as His children? It is the height of hypocrisy. O this tongue of ours, if we only could bring it more in subjection to God's will! But again, we learn from God's Word, "That from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

When the sinner looks into the church and beholds evil speaking one of another, they come to the conclusion that it is best to stay out. Hence if we are not very careful, we may become a stumbling-block to sinners, and eventually be numbered with the foolish virgins. How often one word spoken makes a great fire. It goes from one to another until it becomes a serious matter. "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hung about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." "Woe to the world because of offences, for it must needs be that offences come, but woe unto that man by whom the offence cometh." Matt. 18: 6, 7. Here we see there is woe pronounced upon us if we offend one another, and do not make it right. Christians should not commune and at the same time not be willing to speak to each other on account of a word spoken out of place. "If any man among you seem to be religious and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, that man's religion is vain." James 1: 26. If we do not bridle our tongue, our religion is vain. We see the danger of letting our tongue run at large, it makes bad feelings between members, it makes unruly members, and finally destroys our souls. "For he that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile." 1 Peter 3: 10.

Oh brethren let us as Christians denounce backbiting, hatred, deception and evil speaking, for it is not of God, but of the devil. Let us have more love, peace, harmony and a unanimity of feeling and sentiment, that we may show to the world that we have been with Jesus and learned of Him. Our life before the world, should be of such a character as to show that we are in reality, what we profess to be; for I do claim upon heaven's authority that professors do not let their light shine before the world as they should. I am fearful that men and women will rise up in judgment and condemn many for hypocrisy, for it is a positive command, "he that offendeth in one point is guilty of all." Dear brethren and sisters, may we all be engaged in keeping our tongues bridled, and if it is our besetting sin, we should ask God to help us; for we have the promise if we ask, we shall receive; if we ask consistently and in faith believing.

May the blessing of God attend us through this unfriendly world, and grant us grace to do His will, and finally save us with all the redeemed, is my prayer.

IN HEAVEN THERE IS REST.

BY ANNA NEIDER.

THIS is a truth deeply impressed upon the mind of every person, familiar even with the most thoughtless. In this life there is but little rest to be found. There is always something to disturb, disappoint and weary us. The rosy-cheeked infant, the blooming beauty, all appear dissatisfied. Some are unhappy for the want or loss of friends, of health, pleasure, riches or employment, but the greatest majority suffer from a guilty conscience. Oh how miserable do we feel, when we have done wrong, and our conscience condemns us; yet how often do we find ourselves thus. While the Christian may feel the effects of sin and suffer from bereavement, the assurance of rest in heaven cheers and comforts him amid all the sorrows and afflictions of time.

If we only try and do the best we can, we have a hope that in heaven we shall find rest. Sinners do not even try to secure a rest for themselves after this life is over, and where is their hope? How often do we look around us and see and think of the many of our associates that are going on in sin and folly, heedless of the many warning calls to come to Jesus and find rest for their souls. Dear young friends, let me with a heart of love plead for you to come. Oh don't delay until it is too late! Let us walk hand in hand through this troublesome world to that rest which shall never end. How vain are all things here below; often we feel weary and cast down, though friends all forsake us and foes unite. With Jesus for our helper we may yet come out right. Let us take Jesus for our guide through this vain world, and then in heaven we will find rest. There will be rest from sin, sorrow, sickness, troubles, trials and temptations. There will be no false, or treacherous friends, no unkind relatives, no enemies. There the mind will be no longer oppressed by cares; there will be no wearisome days; no secret sighs or scalding tears; no sundering of tender ties, no parting of those we love. All will be sweet and undisturbed repose. Why then do we not strive more to secure a title to that heavenly rest which shall never end?

Like the leaves of the forest we come forth in beauty, pass on with the Summer and then sink to the earth. A few days only and the rose fades from the cheek, and soon our forms will mingle with the dust. Then let us all be up and doing, work out each one our own salvation, while it is free to all. I envy no quality of the mind in others, but if I could choose what would be most pleasant and, I believe, the most useful to me, I should prefer a firm religious belief to any other blessing; for it makes life a discipline of goodness; creates new hopes when all earthly ones vanish. Through all the long weary days, we have hope that in heaven we shall find rest.

May we all live a Christian life by the help of God, our heavenly Father.

We are so shamefully perverse that we are unthankful for our present gifts and good, and think of little deficiencies. Let every one go home and count the gifts which he has; he will find more gifts than deficiencies, and let him thank God for them.

The most powerful of all beauty is that which reveals itself after sympathy, and not before it.

Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill.

LANARK, ILL., JULY 25, 1878.

The notice of the Forreston, Ill., meeting as published last week, should have read Aug. 4th instead of July 27.

In many localities, the heat, last week, was quite intense, causing hundreds of deaths from sun-stroke. In St. Louis the heat was terrible; as many as 150 being prostrated in one day.

NEXT week we will publish the startling account of the abduction and murder of William Morgan, who was kidnapped and murdered for revealing the secrets of Masonry. It should be read by every person in the land.

THE Brethren of the Mulberry Grove congregation, Bond Co., Ill., expect to commence a series of meetings the first Sunday in August, and hold their love-feast on the ninth of October. This feast to be followed by another series of meetings.

RAILROAD SERMON, is the title of a neatly printed tract of 12 pages, written by brother J. S. Mohler. It is just the thing for travelers from earth to heaven. This tract should be purchased by the hundreds and distributed in every railroad station in the land. Let each one before starting on a journey, purchase a few dozen and distribute them on the cars. They will be sent post paid to any part of the United States or Canada for the following: 3 copies, to one address, 10 cents; 12 copies, to one address, 30 cents; 100 copies, to one address, $2.00. Enclose the amount and address this office.

Our congregations want to make united efforts to improve in singing. Every body who goes to church, wants to learn to sing, and when the opportunity presents itself let every man, woman and child, who can, sing. We want familiar hymns, good tunes, and then all can take part. And if we sing with the spirit and understanding also, God will be glorified in the work. Ministers want to encourage the art of good singing in their congregations, for if properly used it is the very life of a meeting. Give us good singing, earnest praying, good reading, and we will not need to complain about bad preaching, for such things will help any man's preaching.

A mother wishes us to state, "Whether a brother, who moved out of one congregation into another, without a letter of membership, and in one year or more moves back again without a letter, has a right to speak in public at our comrad meetings, or assist in setting things in order?"

In the first place, brethren ought not to move from one congregation to another without a letter, much less wait one year or more. But as to whether the brother should take part in the church council, that should be left to the congregation where the brother is, as it is presumed he is known there, and they are familiar with his standing. Let everything be done decently and in order, not forgetting to manifest becoming Christian courtesy. We are all brethren. Do not forget the respect we owe to each other.

The Peace Congress of Europe has finished work, and the treaty of peace has been signed. Things are looking up brightly in the Old world, with good prospects ahead. It is strongly believed that England will build a railroad to the Mediterranean coast, so the Valley of Ephraim to the vicinity of her Indian possessions, opening the way for greater commerce and prosperity. The New York Times says, "The peace treaty is a great blessing to the world, and will surely bring about a new era of peace and prosperity."

cial relations with Jerusalem. The present movements are watched with great interest by the students of prophecy, looking forward to when the time of the Gentiles shall have been fulfilled, and the people who have been in exile for 1800 years return to their native land.

THAT PROPHET — FEET-WASHING.

"For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people."—Acts 3: 22, 23.

THE above is the language of Peter as deduced from Deut. 18: 15, 18, 19, and applied to the mission of Christ. Over 1400 years before the birth of the Savior, Moses, the chosen servant of God, prophesied that a Prophet should be raised up from among his own people like unto him. Peter, who spoke by the authority of the Holy Ghost, points out Christ as that Prophet spoken of by Moses, and reaffirms the declaration, "And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people."

Of that Prophet God had said, "I will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command." Deut. 18: 18. Christ says, "The Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak." John 12: 49. "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the work." John 14: 10. "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." John 6: 38.

From these Scriptures we learn that Christ came not to do his own will, but to teach the will of the Father, and that the "doctrine" he taught was not his, but the Father's, John 8: 16, and, therefore, to disregard the teaching of Christ, on any point, is a direct rebellion against God himself, and for this reason it is said, "That every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people," it having before been said, "Him shall ye hear in all things, whatsoever he shall say unto you." It is therefore the duty of every Christian to hearken unto that Prophet "in all things," and if they refuse to do so, the decree has gone forth, that they shall be destroyed, or cut off from among the people (of God).

The Prophet was to be "like unto Moses, a law-giver, and a leader of the people, teaching the commandments of God. These commandments were to be no less binding upon the people than the law given by Moses was upon the Hebrews. And "If the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?" Heb. 2: 2, 3.

Whatever was commanded by Moses was enjoined with divine authority, and if disregarded, the guilty party was punished to the furthest extent of the penalty. Even the simplest command had to be obeyed to the letter. As an illustration, and a confirmation of the position occupied by the Brethren, regarding Feet-washing, we refer to Exodus 30: 17-21, where the Lord spake unto Moses, saying:

"Thou shalt also make a laver of brass, and his foot also of brass, to wash withal; and thou shalt put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou shalt put water therein. For Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and their feet thereat: When they go into the congregation, they shall wash with water, that they die not; or when they come near to the altar to minister, to burn offering made by fire unto the Lord; So they shall wash their hands and their feet, that they die not; and it shall be a statute for ever to them, even to him and to his seed throughout their generations."

In this case we have the washing of feet connected with divine services, as commanded by God through Moses, and it was a condition of life on the part of those to whom the command was given. Aaron and his sons were to wash, that they might die not. The penalty for disobedience was death—a cutting off from among the people. We do not maintain that this washing of feet was intended as a type of the foot-washing commanded by Christ in John 13:

but it does show that when Moses commanded the washing of feet it was as positive as any command could be, and to violate was death.

But Moses spoke of another Prophet, who should be like unto him, and whom we shall hear in all things. This "all things" includes the feet-washing commanded by Christ, that Prophet. Under the Mosiac law it was death for Aaron and his sons to evade the washing at the laver, but in the present dispensation the decree is, "That every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people" of God. That Prophet has said, in terms unmistakably plain, "Ye also ought to wash one another's feet," John 13: 15, "For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." Verse 16.

Peter refused at first to have his feet washed—was not willing to hear that Prophet in all things. But it was told him, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me," John 13: 18, thus demonstrating to Peter the truthfulness of what Moses had said regarding the cutting off of those who refused to hear that Prophet. Christ, who came not to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him, designed to institute in the house of God a rite that should be perpetuated in his name—an institution that should be binding upon all his followers, as much so as the washing of feet was obligatory on Aaron and his sons. The penalty against Aaron and his sons, in case of a refusal to submit to the rite, as commanded by Moses, was death. The penalty for refusing to submit to feet-washing as commanded by Christ is, "Thou shalt have no part with me," hence "every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people."

We find this decree also verified in case of baptism, for Christ said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God," John 3: 5, thus making baptism, wherever and whenever commanded by God, a condition of salvation, for it is evident that to be "born of water" is to be baptized. Baptism was positively enjoined by the Savior when he said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark 16: 16. This, too, is one of the "all things" commanded by that Prophet to whom if we hearken not, we shall be destroyed from among the people of God, and refused an entrance into the kingdom of God.

In connection with both feet-washing and baptism we have positive and divinely settled precedents showing that those who reject the counsels of God against themselves, by refusing to "hear that Prophet in all things," shall have no part with Christ, and "cannot enter into the kingdom of God," therefore the confirmation of the eternal decree of Jehovah, "And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people."

That decree was made and published more than 1400 years before the Savior commenced preaching, and stood as a warning to those who would refuse to hear that Prophet, and is confirmed by Christ himself. He well knew that after his departure false prophets would arise, who, by good words and fair speeches would deceive the hearts of the simple by teaching another doctrine, hence that all might have a fair warning, and in the day of judgment be without excuse, he has had recorded and handed down to rising generations a divinely authorized precedent demonstrating the fact, that God's Word cannot return to him void, but that the decree pronounced by Moses must be executed, though it should consign the most zealous and energetic of the chosen Apostles to perdition. Though the Master loved Peter, and had a great work for him to do in the future, yet God's word must be executed, and if Peter had not submitted he would have been cut off from the people of God, and therefore have no part with Christ.

This will certainly be the fate of those who wilfully refuse to hear that Prophet. The commandments given by Christ were not his own, but the Father's, and are unchangeable, and will stand firmer than the heavens and the earth. One of them is: "ye ought to wash one another's feet," and right in connection with this command we repeat the threatening decree of God that if we will not hear that Prophet we shall be destroyed from among the people. If we are unwilling to hear the voice of our Lord and God against themselves, by refusing to wash one another's feet as commanded by Christ. John 13: 14.

A THOUGHT FOR CHRISTIANS.

THE following clipped from one of our exchanges, as a hint to ministers and teachers, will fit more than one case:

"Three young girls of from fifteen to eighteen, all members of the same city church, lingered in the vestibule one Sabbath, talking earnestly.

"I wish," said the younger, "I had never joined the church. Two years ago, when there was so much interest here, Mr. — and Mr. —, naming men prominent in the church, and my Sunday-school teacher, all used to speak to me so often on the subject of religion, and tell me what to do, but since I became converted and joined the church, no one has ever spoken a word to me about it, and I get so tired trying alone."

"It is just the same with me," said each of the others. "No one seems to think we need anything more."

There is much of that kind of work going on in more than one locality. Great efforts are made to get people into the church, but after once in and secure, as we sometimes think, they are almost wholly neglected, just as though they could light the battles of life alone.

The most positive command ever given by the Savior, was, "Feed my lambs," "Feed my sheep." It is not reasonable, nor is it possible, that Christians can grow to the full stature of a man in Christ without help—they need the sympathies and encouragements of their fellow-travelers along life's uneven journey, and have it they must if they would prosper in the cause of religion. Hundreds, for the want of care, are left to wither away and die, who might otherwise have become useful standard bearers in the ranks of the faithful. It is the tender fruit that is the most delicious, though it requires great care to bring it to a state of perfection.

It is too often the case that we are very attentive to poor people till we get them in the church, and then leave them to care for themselves. We speak kind words to the young, and appear much concerned about their salvation, till they join the church, then we stop and let them go. Brethren, there is too much of this kind of work going on. We imagine our mission ended too soon. When just born of the water and of the Spirit, is the time people need the most attention; that is often the turning point of their usefulness. If neglected then, they may become weakly and crippled for life, and be a burden instead of a help to the church. This is one reason why there are so many weak and sick in the household of the faithful.

The gentle mother takes the tender infant, handles and cares for its wants with the greatest of care. She spares no pains calculated to develop it into health and activity. Even the wants of other members of the family are, at times, neglected for the care of the little one. What a noble set of members we might have in the church if we were this careful about handling new converts! What a blessing it would be to the cause, if we were willing to sacrifice self-interest for the tender lambs of the flock!

While we were children at home, our mother used to tell us, we must be good children and thereby teach the baby to be good. "For," said she, "bad children cause babies to become cross." What a lesson is this for older heads! If those who have long been in the church act unmanly, and thereby set a bad example, what can we expect of the tender ones, who have just come into the flock? It is sometimes a wonder to me that they are as good as they are. Many of them are much neglected; their wants are not sufficiently looked after; the preachers put the feed up in the rack so high that many of the lambs of the flock cannot reach it. In many instances meetings are not interesting to them. The fact of the matter is, the lambs are not fed enough.

Let me pause here, and ask each minister who reads this article, How often do you preach a sermon especially adapted to the wants of the young members and new converts of the flock? Says one, "I have so much to do that I cannot take time to arrange matter suitable for this class of hearers." That is just where the trouble comes in. We have plenty of time to arrange food for colts, calves, and pigs, but when it comes to caring for those on whose shoulders the care of the church must one day rest, then we have no time. I am afraid that some of those who attempt to feed the lambs, spin out their threads, and that it will eventually bring both parties all heads to an untimely death.

Then new converts want to be made to feel at home in the church. It is in the flock and the house of the Lord that we are placed upon one common level, and no one should be esteemed above the other—they should rather prefer one another. We may sometimes spend too much time around the table, talking and greeting there. It would be far better if we would make an effort to seek out the weaker ones and encourage them with friendly, Christian greetings. They need encouragement, that is what they are in the church for.

TO A YOUNG DEACON.

DIVINE Inspiration declares that, "godliness is profitable unto all things." Piety weighs tons in the scales of Deity. To have great regard for God's principles is profitable unto all things. To receive profit is man's constant aim. Here is a kind of profit, godliness from heaven, which is good in all things. God provides the soil, the rain, the sunshine—all that is needful to produce a bountiful crop. How much profit would we receive from these if we should refuse to plow, plant, cultivate and reap? The labor is untold. God first works, we work, He increases, then we gather. This is the road to profit in nature. Let us look at the spiritual way. God prepares the way through His Son. He invites us TO DO the things ordained. We believe and obey, then He increases and finally we reap. Godliness is one of the tools with which we are to labor. Many plow, plant, and then stop. Cultivation implies labor, work, and the ease of the world being more enticing, they stop and of course reap not. Godliness is not ashamed of the hoe, the plane, the shovel, the plow, the yard-stick, the press, the school-room, the loom, the sick-room, nor any other useful labor.

Let your life be marked all over, top, bottom, and sides, with "the marks of the Lord Jesus." Look at right from the stand-point of RIGHT. Prejudice is always in the mud. Follow men who follow the Pattern; but where they turn aside go not after them. Put every man's declaration in the balances of Truth, and if it weighs aught, receive it. If you would know how to weigh well and correctly, study. The beam can only be seen to move, when you look at it from a point called "Calvary." Get all the truth you can into your heart, and it will keep your head, hands, feet, and body on the "narrow way." Truth bears most delicious fruit; godliness, love, brotherly kindness, meekness, temperance, faith—these are evidences of a "good tree."

As you grow older, your trials will increase, your blessings multiply. To withstand these, you need the sufficient grace of God. Having abundant grace, charity unfeigned, your patience and meekness will enlarge, and enlarging the beauties of coming life—of joy and peace in the world to come, will strengthen and magnify. Tribulation worketh patience. Godliness is full of patience. Patience worketh experience. A Christian without experience, is like a clothed being. Sometimes it is obtainable only through much tribulation; nevertheless it is exceedingly valuable to a faithful continuance in well-doing. You cannot afford to stand still for murmurers, complainers, evil surmisers. There is no pay in stopping to contend with these; if you do, you will not receive the interest, much less the principal of eternal joy. Evil surmisers never build up, never whiten character, never lift the erring out of trouble, never enlarge themselves in Christ, do nothing for the Truth, but much against it. There is no pleasure in the road they travel, hence company not with them. Seek for company those whose hearts are full of charity, whose conversation denotes much meditation in holy Truth, whose lives are living evidences of transformation from darkness to light. How to increase in this world's goods, you will learn without seeking a score or two of teachers, but how to hold the wealth of Jesus, you will never get too many good instructors. Study and meditation gives power for good work, true work, clean work. Pray much, not because it is fashionable, not because some one wishes it, but because you, like all others, need it. Christians to narrow our carnal inclinations, and widen our spiritual strength. Narrowness by the Cross, means breadth by the resurrection. Meekness and lowliness by way of Calvary, means glory and honor, as 1 Cor. 1:26-28. Of old, the "meekness of God," which had the "power of God," into heaven" teach us that the road is traversed by One who is all-powerful. We can afford to gaze that way too. "They that have used the office of a deacon well, purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus." This is said of those who have used the office of a deacon well. Such purchase a good degree and great boldness in the faith—two purchases that are profitable. "War a good warfare." Look unto Jesus, "the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God" to whom "be honor, and glory forever and ever, Amen."

THE HOLY KISS.

THE Holy Spirit of God has commanded the Brethren to salute one another with a holy kiss, or a kiss of charity as it is sometimes called. This positive command is given by Inspiration no less than five times, and yet the larger majority of modern professors refuse to either obey or teach it.

One class attempts to evade feet-washing on the ground that it was commanded and practiced before the setting up of the church on the day of Pentecost, but when they come to applying that logic to the holy kiss, they learn that it will not hold out, for the kiss was commanded after Pentecost. The same order of people, in their writings, maintain that the Gospels were written to point the world to Christ; the Acts, to show how people were converted, and the epistles were designed to show how the converted should live, but when they find the holy kiss taught in these epistles, they are as silent as the grave about it being a command.

Isaac Errett, editor of the Christian Standard, in his work on the "Elements of the Gospel," pages 26 and 27, says: "He will find a cluster of epistles, addressed to saved persons—to Christians, to give them a knowledge of the duties, dangers, trials, and hopes of Christian life; epistles which correct the errors, and reveal the perils of the Christian; give the instruction, and unfold the motives, necessary to furnish him to all good works. * * * So that we go to the four Gospels to learn of the Savior; to the Acts, to learn how to be saved; to the Epistles, to learn how the saved ought to live."

On turning to these epistles we find that in them the salutation of the kiss is commanded no less than five times, yet these very people, who say we go to the epistles to learn how the converted ought to live, pass this divinely appointed institution by as unconcerned as though it were not in the Book. They plead that it was an oriental custom, and therefore not binding now, just as though Inspiration had not the power to order an oriental custom to be kept sacred by the people of God.

Paul, who wrote as he was moved by the Holy Spirit, says, "Salute one another with a holy kiss." Rom. 16: 16. In this, as well as in many other things, God has been very precise in the giving of his commands, not only telling what to do, but how to do it, and to whom it must be done. The brethren were commanded to salute, the how is with a kiss, the whom is all the holy brethren. The kiss thus commanded is a holy kiss, intended for none but holy people; set apart by divine authority for that purpose, and was so perpetuated by the Christian church for centuries immediately following the Apostolic age.

Modern commentators and divines may say what they please about it being an ancient custom, practiced by the orientals—one thing certain, it is a command of God, and as such is stamped with the seal of the Deity, and to reject and ignore it, is direct rebellion against the positive thus saith the Lord. The same Paul who said, "salute one another with a holy kiss," also says, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Gal. 1: 8. The Gospel which Paul preached, contained the holy kiss, and any gospel that does not contain that command is not the one taught by Paul, but is something to the reverse, a gospel that came from another source, and not from heaven. Men who preach a gospel that is void of the holy kiss shame to declare the whole counsel of God; they belong to another school and consequently are teaching an unscriptural doctrine—a doctrine from which we should have been taken.

By saluting that the ancient Jews, Greeks and Romans salute each other with a kiss, what does that prove? It only proves that they, in this particular, were just that much better than nine-tenths of the modern professors of Christianity; or it simply proves that they, by nature, without the Gospel, did better than others with all their light and knowledge. This is the result of the reasoning of those who make void the commandments of God by teaching the doctrine and traditions of men, and rejecting one of the plainest commands in the Bible. Some of these very persons who reject this command, found five times in the New Testament, will ransack the Bible from Genesis to Revelation just to find a hint of infant baptism, and if no hint is found, they will imagine one, in fact, do everything in their power to work up an excuse in favor of infant baptism, but when their attention is called to the chapter and verse where the holy kiss is enjoined, for their lives they cannot see it. But they can see infants in the households of Lydia and the jailer. They are excellent at seeing something not in the Book, but when it comes to this command they are unable to comprehend it.

More than this, these very people, and some of them are men of acknowledged ability, will spend a little fortune ransacking the writings of the first few centuries in order to find some traces demonstrating an early practice of infant baptism, and while doing so will find scores of instances showing that the primitive church kept up the practice of the holy kiss for centuries. All this is worth nothing to them—has no weight whatever on their minds, but if they could find just one passage showing that an infant had been baptized sometime during the second century they would regard it as positive proof in support of their position; but you might lay along side that passage a hundred extracts from the same author, favoring the holy kiss and they could not see one of them. They have the peculiar faculty of seeing just what they want to see. We might mention other things just as inconsistent, but will leave them for the reader to branch out on.

That the holy kiss is taught in the epistles, will not be called in question by any honest Bible student. All that remains to be proven, is it a command? and if so, is it still binding?

That it was practiced in the Apostolic churches is too positive to be called in question. There is no dispute among the well-read on this point. Nor is there any doubt about it being practiced by the primitive churches of the first centuries. Sewell, when speaking of the Apostolic customs says:

"It was customary also to symbolize the fellowship and affection of the Christian converts by interchanging the kiss of peace before partaking of the Sacrament. St. Paul, in writing to the Thessalonians, says, 'Greet all the brethren with a holy kiss.'" History of the Early Church, page 121.

Justin Martyr, who wrote about the middle of the second century, when speaking of their manner of receiving converts into the church, says, "Prayer being ended, we salute each other with a kiss." Orchard, Vol. 1, page 24.

Quotations on this subject might be multiplied to a considerable extent, but we will let the following from Tertullian suffice for the present:

"Another custom has now become prevalent. Such as are fasting withhold the kiss of peace, which is the seal of prayer, after prayer made with brethren. But when is peace more to be concluded with brethren than when, at the time of some religious observance, our prayer ascends with more acceptability; that they may themselves participate in one observance, and thereby be mollified for transgression with their brother touching their own peace? What prayer is complete if divorced from the holy kiss." Vol. 1, page 192.

The strongest argument, and in fact, the real argument used to prove that the holy kiss is a command to be observed by all faithful Christians, is predicated upon the fact, that it is a command of God, given by Inspiration. Its authority is God, being backed up by the highest power in the universe, and will remain binding during the Christian dispensation. Since given in the days of the Apostles, it has not been repealed by the consent of divine authority. It is as binding to-day as when first given, and to reject it, is to ignore a positive and specific command.

"The importance of a sacred rite depends upon the Lord; for He is a being infinite."

"And awful is His Word,
If He a trifle shall command
His creatures to fulfill,
'Tis not a trifle to withstand
Or counteract His will."

OUR PAMPHLETS.

OUR greatly improved facilities for doing book work, enable us to now offer to the brotherhood and the reading public generally, pamphlets at greatly reduced rates. We do not aim to make much on this kind of work, but merely to clear expenses. We are willing to make many sacrifices in order to get our doctrine more extensively circulated among the people, and with proper efforts much good can be accomplished. The circulating of literature in this shape is one of the best known ways of spreading the truth.

The Waldenses, when driven from place to place by their cruel enemies, often carried books and tracts with them, and gave them to such as they thought would be benefited by reading them, and in this way they effected the conversion of hundreds, who otherwise would have remained ignorant of the way of salvation till death.

Pamphlets and small tracts are handy companions to hand to a seeker after truth. In this way you can gently approach people on the most particular subjects of religion. Books are sometimes like bomb-shells, you can throw them over walls whose gates are closed. There are multitudes of men and women, who will not attend preaching, that can be reached with books. The eye can be had when the ear is closed. A book can be, and is often read repeatedly, and then loaned to three or four friends besides.

You can send books where it is difficult to send a preacher. Money wisely spent in circulating good tracts, will accomplish more good than the same amount used in any other way. A few dimes, thus properly applied, may be instrumental in saving a soul from hell, and hide a multitude of sins. One good book may be as good seed sown in good ground. Eternity alone will reveal the good that is accomplished by circulating useful writings.

We cannot all be preachers, yet each one can keep a few pamphlets moving among his friends, and in this way instruct them more perfectly in the way of the Lord. We know brethren who keep constantly on hand, copies of good works to let their neighbors read, and when the books thus used are worn out they send and get more. There are thousands who have been converted just simply by reading a pamphlet sent them by a friend.

Some years ago, a lady of much intelligence, chanced to find a book written by a brother, among a heap of waste paper. She read it with astonished delight, and is now a sister. Then sow the good seed. Eternity will reveal the fruit of your labors.

Other people are busy at work, circulating pamphlets and tracts detrimental to the cause of pure Christianity, and it is time we were doing something to counteract their work. We know of one house where the presses are running day and night, putting out tracts and papers in defense of a doctrine that we conceive to be false. Shall we lay still, from one end of the land to the other, and do comparatively nothing towards meeting this mighty current?

We have just finished the Railroad Sermon, by Bro. J. S. Mohler, of which a notice will be found in another place, and are now at work on Bro. J. W. Stein's pamphlet on Non-Conformity to the World. This will be a valuable work when finished. It will be ready in a few weeks. Our own publications have been reduced to the following prices:

I DO NOT LIKE TO HEAR HIM PRAY.

I do not like to hear him pray Who loans at twenty-five per cent. For then, I think, the borrower may Be pressed to pay for food and rent. And in the Book of Psalms should read, Which says the lender should be blessed: As sure as I have eyes to read, It does not say take interest.

I do not like to hear him pray, On bended knee, about an hour, For grace to spend bright the day. Who knows his neighbor has no flour, I'd rather see him go to mill And buy the luckless brother bread, And see the children eat their fill, And laugh beneath their humble shed.

I do not like to hear him pray: Let blessings on the widow be, Who never seeks her home to say, "If want do takes you come to me," I hate the prayer, so loud and long, That's offered for the orphan's weal By him who sees him crushed by wrong, And does not for his sufferings feel.

I do not like to hear him pray, With jeweled eard and siber dress, Whose washerwoman toils all day, And then is asked to work for less such poems sheavers I despise; With fobbed hands, and lace demure, They lift to heaven their angel eyes, And stand the earnings of the poor.

I do not like such soulless prayers: If wrong, I hope to be forgiven; No angels' wings them upward bear, They've lost a million nodes from heaven, I must hear long prayers to hear, And stubbed from the legs depart, Our Father lends a ready ear, Let words be few, He hears the heart.

SELECTED GEMS.

"The kindest and the truest part, Will find occasion to be born: And something every day they live To pity, and perhaps forgive."

-It is a grand thing to rally the people to the cross of Christ.

Dr. Adam Clarke says, "strong drink is not only the devil's way to man, but man's way to the devil."

-Write your name by kindness, love and mercy, on the hearts of people you come in contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotten.

-We must not judge a man by a word or a single action. Life is composed of so many inconsistencies, that we would often take the exception for the rule.

-A girl who can put on a square patch may not be so accomplished as one who can work a green wasted dog on a yellow ground, but she is of far more real value in the community.

-The difference between the church and the world should be emphasized. A false culture levels the boundary, and has nearly obliterated the walls of Jerusalem. Such a lax practice, has never made heroes and martyrs.

-A CHINESE CONCERT.-One night in a thunder shower we thought the little ones were all asleep, when a little voice from the "trouble-bed" called out, "Oh, mother, the dark is winking! first it shuts up, and then it shuts down."

-Beware of the first glass; the secret of being sober, and of keeping sober, is to avoid the first glass. If you determine not to take the first glass, nobody can make you take the second. It is the first glass that the conscience grapples with; this taken, conscience grows weaker with every succeeding glass.

-When you can make an oak out of a mushroom, then, and not till then, you may hope to make a living tree out of that poisonous toad-stool, the theatre. It was, even among the heathen nations, considered a disgrace to be connected with one; and down through all the thousands of years which it has lived since then, it has come with perpetual dishonor on its head.

In the mountains of Tyrol, it is the custom of the women and children to come out when it is bed-time, sing their national songs until they hear their husbands, fathers, and brothers answer them from the hills on their return home. On the shores of the Adriatic such a custom prevails. There the wives of the fishermen come down about sunset and singing the first stanza, they will listen awhile for an answering melody from off the water; and continue to sing and listen till the well-known voice comes home on the waters, telling that the loved one is almost home. How sweet to the weary fisherman, as the shadows gather around him, must be the songs of the loved ones at home, that sing to cheer him; and how they strengthen and tighten the links that bind those humble dwellers by the sea.

WISDOM.

BY AMOS CHAMBERLIN.

WE find mentioned in the Scriptures, two kinds of wisdom. One is the wisdom of this world, said to be "foolishness with God," 1 Cor. 3: 19, yet this is the wisdom that passes extensively at this day. Men desire to appear wise to their fellow-men in self-conceit, regardless of how they appear in the sight of God. This may be denominated popular wisdom; the kinds that usually makes men proud and envious.

Of the other, James says, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth liberally to all men, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given," James 1: 5. Again, in the third chapter we have a description of the fruits of the true wisdom, (verses 13 to 18). In verse 17 we are told that the wisdom that cometh down from above, is "pure, gentle, peaceable, easy to be entreated, full of mercy, and good fruits, without partiality or hypocrisy."

How few, comparatively, seek this kind of wisdom, for its not popular. If a minister, or Sunday-school teacher finds some difficult passage in God's Word, and lacks wisdom to understand it, what does he do? Does he ask God for wisdom from above? or does he not frequently ask some of the learned in whom it is not safe to trust?

May God help us all to crave that true wisdom, which will guide us into the way of all truth. Let us not only read the Scripture of divine truth, but study, search, compare Scripture with Scripture, imploring wisdom from above. The Scriptures are able to make us wise unto salvation. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of (true) wisdom." Let us take God at His word, and do whatsoever He commands. Let us receive God's Word as He has given it to us and profit thereby.

CLOSE COMMUNION.

BY JOSEPH J. HOOVER.

CLOSE communion is one of the peculiarities of the church, and is one that many of the professors of Christendom do not understand. When being asked why we are close communicants, many of us are not able to answer as we would like to, and are frequently accused of being narrow-minded, bigoted, uncharitable towards other denominations, especially so, since we invite none to the Lord's table but our members.

Here comes a man and says, "I would like to commune with you, but you won't permit me. Please tell me, why is this?" We answer, we do invite you, and often with tears, but we say, come as we do. You are not like-minded with us according to Christ Jesus. "And he that doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith, for whatsoever is not of faith, is sin." Rom. 14: 22. We consider the order of the church—the Gospel and Apostolic order. If we commune with people who teach doctrine we do not believe, we commit sin; and will be inconsistent if we invite people to commune with us who have no faith in the doctrine which we teach. They will be sinning against their conscience if they commune with us, therefore we will be sinning by inviting them to sin. We will be sinning if we commune with people who are not "like-minded one toward another" with us "according to Christ Jesus." Our minds must be united in the union of sentiment, and if there is no union there can be no communion.

All persons desiring to enter the church, must enter in at the "strait gate." Baptism is an initiating ordinance by which we enter the church. The Apostle Paul says, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." If we want to put on Christ and enter in at the "strait gate," we must be buried with Him by baptism into His death according to His appointed way. Any other way than His, is not Gospel order. "He that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." We cannot commune with people who do not enter into the church according to His appointed way.

With regard to the ordinances in the church, they differ from us. Feet-washing is claimed, by most denominations, to be a command, but not to be practiced in the public assembly of the church, and many of those who claim it ought to be practiced in the assembly do not practice it at the proper time. The Lord's Supper they call the Jewish Passover, and the Holy Communion they call the Lord's Supper. Thus far you can see that we cannot commune with a people who do not hold entirely to the doctrine of Christ. The Apostle says, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed." 2 John 10. Marlboro, Ohio.

HE THAT IS GUILTY OF THE LEAST, IS GUILTY OF THE WHOLE.

BY S. S. LINDEMAN.

A CHRISTIAN is likened unto a man who engages as a partner in a firm. He first notices whether there is gain in the transaction; then he is ready to go to work, though there may be many obstructions in the way.

First, he must search the record and make himself sure of not losing his deposit or compensation.

Second, he must be on his guard, watching for impediments that may chance to be thrown in his way. There are many who give this but little or no thought at all, when engaged in Christianity, though in worldly affairs they are very cautious. As a matter of truth, if he is a man of great confidence, he is trusted in either case and should be a good sample to the minor ones. Men of good standing are not aware of the great influence they exert upon the minds of the rising generation. This is the reason why men and women of good standing should be cautious in all things; no matter how small. The smaller the better; for men of weak minds are more apt to take heed to small things, than larger ones.

There are many things in life that are of great importance, though rarely noticed. I never will forget the expression I heard S. H. Bashor make some two years ago, back in old Pa., concerning the great influence esteemed characters have over others. "If a well-esteemed brother goes in a saloon and takes a drink, (probably for his health), many weak-minded men think, 'well, my brother, an esteemed man, can take a drink, why can't I?' and goes in and takes a drink, but does not stop there, as his brother, but takes another, and another, and so on till he becomes intoxicated, and uses profane language, and all was caused by the good brother and him not aware of it. And likewise an esteemed sister probably gets her bonnet changed somewhat, something near the fashion; a weak-minded sister does likewise, but does not stop there. The remainder of her dress is also changed something near the fashion, or probably altogether as the fashion, and if counseled for it, she will say, 'Why, my sister has her bonnet made after the fashion, and I thought I could do likewise,' and will maintain her rights until she is thrown out of the church, and all is caused by the good (?) sister just simply changing her bonnet."

There are other cases similar to these, that are caused by esteemed men and women, and they are not aware of it. I once heard of a preacher being asked, if there was any wrong in telling an untruth in time of necessity? He said there was not. Now this is a case of influence. There is no need of untruth in any case, no difference how small it is; probably not so much in the sight of the world, but in the sight of God, is as bad as the largest. There are many cases of this kind committed. In case a poor brother, or a man of poor standing goes to a rich brother and asks him for money, the answer is, "I have not got it," and at the same time he has it laying in some bank, or in the house. But if a rich brother comes and asks, he can have all he wants. The rich man gets it, and probably the same brother goes to him, and receives the same answer. This man got it to speculate with, and the poor brother must let his property be sold to pay the debt. Then they will say, "I am sorry," telling the untruth twice for one case. This should not be the case with Christian professors. The bad influence you exert upon others, does more wrong than you commit personally.

Now there are many who hold the opinion, that there is no wrong in doing a little work on Sunday. I have heard some say that the Scriptures say, there is no harm in saying that which will likely be lost on Sunday. I will here ask, at any Bible reader, if they ever saw, between the lids of the Bible, "You shall labor to save money on Sunday?" There are many places where the Savior asked them, which of them would not save life on the Sabbath?

Now these are some important facts to be observed; they are small in the eyes of those who commit them, but are seen by the eyes of the world and observed by the eye of God. Let all, when once joined with a Christian band, live, walk and talk Christian-like. I once heard a man remark: "After a man joins the church he is like a man coming in a new country. If he once is in the country long enough to become a citizen, no matter what he does, he is still a citizen. So in the church; no matter what he does, he is a Christian." Woe unto the man who will teach such doctrine; they shall be hated in the presence of God. Salent, Neb.

SETTLING QUARRELS.

SOMETIMES difficulties arise among neighbors and among Christians, when honest, well-meaning people fail to agree, and it requires patience and shrewdness, to prevent serious trouble. Often, however, the practical common sense of a disinterested person avails, when argument and invective are in vain.

Two farmers quarrelled over a broken fence, through which their cattle passed without restraint. Each insisted that the other should mend the breach. Unable to agree, they left the matter to the decision of a neighbor, who, after listening attentively to their stories, and viewing the fence with care, informed them that he should require time for thought and consideration before rendering his decision upon a matter of such grave moment, and that meanwhile he would put a few sticks into the broken fence, as it needed immediate attention. Accordingly he fell to work, and in ten or fifteen minutes had the fence mended, while the two belligerents stood by, having nothing left to quarrel about!

A shoemaker who failed to collect five dollars of a customer, sued him at the law. The debtor went to a lawyer for advice.

"Do you owe him the money?" said the lawyer.

"Yes, but since he has sued me, I want you to fight him; here is ten dollars to begin with."

The lawyer took the money, and soon after called on the shoemaker and asked him if he would take five dollars and settle the matter. He was glad to do it, and the lawyer put the other five dollars into his own pocket.

"How do you come on with the shoemaker?" said the debtor to the lawyer one day.

"O, I have fixed him so he will never trouble you any more," replied the lawyer, and so the lawsuit ended.

In Marion, Wayne Co., N. Y., two widows of the Baptist church attended service in a country school-house. They occupied chairs in the center of the room. After intermission they changed seats, and as each had left her shawl in the chair, they changed shawls. One was very fine, the other coarse. After service both claimed the fine shawl. No one could tell which was mistaken; the church was about equally divided; and the parties were completely alienated. Two counsels had been called without success. A third was called, and an old preacher named Amasa Brown was sent for to attend it. After each side had presented its case, Mr. Brown rose and inquired what the shawls were worth. Some one said the best one cost ten dollars. "Well," said he, "let us buy it," and laid down a dollar as the first subscription. The money was raised, the fine shawl given to one and the money to the other. The coarse shawl was sent to the Missionary Convention, and the difficulty was settled.

The grace of common sense is one of the most precious of Christian graces. And if persons would only exercise this grace, many quarrels would be very short lived. "Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God."—The Christian.

PRAYER AND WORKS.

PRAYER was never meant to be a substitute for labor, an easy way of throwing our responsibilities upon God. The old classic story of the tempest, whose cart stuck in the mud, and who fell to crying to Hercules for help instead of using effort himself, and was told by the god he invoked, to put his own shoulder to the wheel, shows that even a heathen mind could see that faith was never meant to exclude work. That is a good anecdote which they tell about Mr. Moody—and an authentic one, too—in his earlier days in Chicago, when the noon-day prayer-meeting had been established, and he was a regular attendant. Bro. K., a man of wealth, rose one day and told the meeting of an opportunity which there was, to do a certain good thing if only three or four hundred dollars could be raised for the purpose, and he urged those present to pray earnestly that it might be done. Mr. Moody was on his feet, with a sudden inspiration, saying, "Bro. K., I wouldn't trouble the Lord with a little thing like that; I would do it myself." The universal smile proved that every one took the point of his joke. —Congregationalist.

Skepticism has never founded empires, established principalities, or changed the world's heart. The great doers in history have always been men of faith.

The Clock.

TO those whose business is quite near, the bell which tolls the hour in Independence Hall has a solemn sound. There is a low vibration between the strokes that seems to whisper, passing, passing, passing! And these questions enter our mind. Who are those that are passing? How are they passing? And lastly, where are they passing? Then the responses come to the soul. All are passing! Yes, dear reader, we are all passing as we will! And those who hear the low vibrations of the bell will soon listen to that solemn sound no more forever, forever, for they shall have passed to

"That undiscovered country, From whose bourne no traveler ever returns." Sinner, do you hear those soft and gentle vibrations of that still small voice that whispers "Come unto Me"? It is the pleading voice of Jesus. This voice will also finally cease to vibrate, or fall in sweet accents upon your conscience, and what will be your fate! Christ gently knocks at the door of your heart, will you let Him enter? Remember your life is passing away with the gentle, yet solemn vibrations of the clock, and soon, very soon, time may be no more with you, and where are you standing? Echo answers, WHERE! Remember you are passing into Eternity and into the august presence of an avenging God. Listen to that gentle voice that calls you, and seek Jesus while He may be found. "For His yoke is easy, and His burden is light." Matt. 11, 30, so that when you pass to that land of immortality, you be able to obtain that peaceful rest that "passeth all understanding."

The clock doth toll the solemn hour,
When mortals pass to rest,
O, may that be their happy hour,
To dwell among the blest!

E. R. STIFLER.

Prayer.

THE above subject is one of great importance and should have due regard from all the brethren and sisters. But we find this so much neglected by the Brethren. I tell you brethren and sisters, we can never get along as Christians without this great principle. A plant will die from lack of rain, so will the Christian without prayer. "Ah," says one "is that so? How do you know?" Recollect Paul said "pray without ceasing" that is, you must have a praying mind continually, or as the Apostle says "the fervent and continual prayer of a righteous man availeth much." What a delightful task to pour out our souls desires to Him that liveth and abideth forever. Oh, dear reader, try it if you never have done so in your life, try it for a week and continue to try as long as you live and God will surely hear you, and guide you in the right way. "But," says one, "I cannot. I have tried it and I could not pray." I will tell you how you ought to pray. You remember, the Saviour said, "When you pray, say, Our Father which art in heaven etc." Can you not then memorize the Lord's prayer? And then pray that in spirit and truth? Yes you can, and also pretty soon you can find other words to express your feelings to Him. If we would all engage more in prayer we would not find so much time to hunt up our brother's or sister's faults, hasten on their destruction or in other words to see them expelled from church. If you think there is no power in prayer just refer to your Testament and see what it says throughout. Jesus says, "search the Scriptures for in them ye think ye have eternal life and they are they which testify of me." This is a command to us, not a mere saying, hence should be obeyed. "In the morning I will call upon thee and in the evening I will remember thy ways, O God." H. H. BRALLIER.

Pay Thy Vows.

THE Lord wants us to pay or fulfill our vows or promises, we make towards him. How often do we make vows to God when we get in trouble, trials, and afflictions and perhaps at the point of death? There we called upon the Lord to help and deliver us out of our trouble and prosper our life then we would depart from God and love the Lord, keep his commandments. Have we all done as we promised to do? Perhaps some of the readers have not. When the Lord heard and answered their prayers; and restored them to health, they continued in sin as before. Now we are to take warning. God calls his people in different ways, and has given us his word and the promise of grace, so we can work out our souls salvation and if we are not saved, we must put the blame on ourselves. The Lord has done his part and will have us to do our part. H. H. BRALLIER.

that we should work in his vineyard and improve them to the honor and glory of God. God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. Therefore let us all sow to the spirit, that we may reap life everlasting. A. NELSON (GRAYBILL).

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Elder George Wolfe.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER WRITTEN TO W. MEYERS OF BRIGHTON, CAL.

YOU doubtless have seen the announcement in the BROTHERS AT WORK of the three Elders coming to visit us this Fall. I am glad our Brethren had Christian soundness enough to send us three such Brethren, as we think they are free from a soured or prejudiced mind. We believe they are coming to do us good and talk Scripture to us, for our benefit and not to try us, as a set of criminals.

Now, dear brother, let us, by the help of God, strip ourselves, and become free from all prejudice and malice, and receive those Brethren in the spirit of our Master Jesus, praying for one another's safety and well-being, so that if God permits us and them to meet again in that grave, where we have met before, and so many sacred associations came up to my mind, — then Jesus will meet with us to bless, as he did with his Apostles, when they met together to pray and praise his name. It is now about settled that the camp-meeting will commence in the evening of the 6th day of Sept. at the camp grounds. Get as many of the friends on the plains to come as you can, and especially Bro. and sister Bailey. The meeting will hold over two Sundays. Those three on the sand plains can not be lapsed till the meeting. I look forward to that meeting with fond anticipation, praying to the Lord to give us a Pentecostal shower. Stir up the gift within you and fight valiantly, as a good soldier of the cross lay it not down till you can change the cross for the crown. We will be glad to see you at any time.

From Lowell, Michigan.

Dear Brethren:—

WE wish to make known through your worthy paper our trip to Northern Michigan. We left our home in Campbell town Co., May the 24th, reached Petoskey (150 miles North of Grand Rapids) the same evening after 9 o'clock. Next morning crossed the little Traverse Bay on boat, 5 miles across. The Bay was rather rough, for one not used to water. Were met at Little Traverse by Bro. John Noss, and soon Bro. John R. Stutzman met us. Took dinner with Bro. and Sister Kruse, living in the village, had meeting in the evening at Bro. Stutzman's. Next day (Sunday) had meeting at the Cook school-house; the small school-house was densely packed. Same evening had meeting at the house of Bro. Noss; also good turnout and good attention to our talk. On Monday evening had meeting at a Mr. Thomas'. On Tuesday again at Cook's school-house. The place was again crowded. On Wednesday, at 1 o'clock P. M., had meeting in Little Traverse; rather small congregation, being an important land on hand the same time. While there we visited as many of the members as we possibly could, and were informed that 17 members lived in the County (Emmet). We were received and treated with kindness. These were the first meetings ever held here by the brethren. Much interest seemed to be taken by the people in general, and many calls to soon come again. These members nearly all take the BROTHERS AT WORK. GEORGE LONG.

From D. N. Workman.

Dear Brethren:—

ON my way to A. M. I stopped off at Peregton, Ind., in Bro. Jesse Calvert's district of church and attended their Communion-meeting, which was held June 7th. Remained with them until Monday following; held meeting in the evening, up to which time we baptized three. On Tuesday morning started for A. M. from that place. While at the same place was invited to spend a few days more in the same church, which I consented to do. So after the Communion I returned. Held our next meeting on Saturday evening, baptised three and on Sunday, when Bro. J. W. Stron joined as in the labor. We then continued the meeting for a little over a week; Bro. Stron and myself both remaining. Ninety were baptized in all during my visit to that church. May the good Lord ever be present near his servants.

is my prayer. The Brethren and Sisters and friends were all very kind to me while in Ind. May the good Lord bless them for their kindness. I enjoyed the privilege of forming an acquaintance with, and visiting many very kind families in the church. Among the many I was much pleased to form an acquaintance with Bro. Lewis Workman and family, also friend David Rolston and family who are relatives of mine. While at the home of Bro. Lewis I was made to reflect upon the past. There I found a family that was undergoing what our own family was obliged to undergo but a few years ago, when we were called upon to part with a Christian mother. Such is the condition of Bro. Lewis's family. But few months ago death came along and removed from them a Christian wife and mother. The stroke is felt in every department of that kind family. When they sing, her voice is not heard mingling with theirs. While penning these lines, tears force themselves thick and fast from the eyes of your Bro. for this and all other families in like sorrows. Believing that many fatherless and motherless ones will read these lines, let me ask you the question, are you trying to so live that may win a home in that world that knows no such sorrow as this. I was much delighted to see that in the family all of a proper age are members of the church; two of them united, while I was there. May the good Lord care for the sorrowing family is my desire. Also cousin Rolston's daughter, Mary is now a promising young sister, she having seen it proper to unite while I was with them. May the Saviour keep her near his side, and the day speed itself, when all the members of this kind family may also be members of the church the mother and several of the children being members already. I landed safely home and found all well, thank the Lord. Ashland, Ohio.

Our Annual Meeting.

Dear Brethren:—

OUR Annual Conference passed off very pleasantly, and we are assured that, though man proposes, God disposes. For more than thirty years past, there were from time to time fears entertained of a rupture or split in the body, and yet the body only struck deeper root, and came closer together. This last Annual Meeting appeared to me the most successful in gaining harmony and union of all former meetings. Expressions of word and look, at the closing exercises, indicated nothing less than perfect love and harmony.

The resolution to entertain none else but those sent on business at 10 A. M. is a problem to be solved. Unless the brotherhood places more confidence in a selected body to do business, than they have hitherto, it will prove a failure, but it must be tried. We used to think this meeting together, once a year, from far and near was the best means to keep the body together in one, like Israel in coming together, not only once but three times a year. — Jealousy feared this union, therefore prevented their going up to Jerusalem and the consequence Bible readers know.

It is true, vast sums of money are expended which might be used to greater advantage. (2). Sixty-two cents was the tax this year for each member, and if that sum impoverished the churches so that they could not do anything more for the Lord, truly the A. M. expenses ought to be curtailed. Our religion cannot be worth much if we cannot give as much a year, as some of my neighbors paid for their preacher alone, namely from fifty to one hundred dollars a year.

But it is not so much the money, as the labor and trouble and then the disorder, but perhaps the gain may overbalance all, taking all things into consideration, of which the opportunity to preach the Gospel to thousands at once, is not the least of items. There is a desire to hear the pure Gospel preached. We are not permitted to put it under a bushel. Then why not make use of the best candlesticks at command? The preaching that was done at the time, though imperfectly arranged may bring people compensation in a future time. T. P. Loran.

From Altoona, Iowa

Dear Brethren:—

FOR the first time since May 12 Wyoming Territory I take up my pen to write you a few lines. Five years ago I left Iowa, and since that time passed over a good portion of the West. I would have been to Kansas, not liking the country where I had went to, namely Marselis County, near the South of Junction City, we went back to Jefferson Co. Stayed only about two or three weeks, and then went to Falls City, Neb. The river counties of Kansas are, as a general thing, quite fertile, but back further the land is somewhat hilly and rocky. — Wood and water are not very plenty. In some portions there is considerable hard pan. Brown Co., in the North-eastern part of the State, is a nice country! I believe when it has groves planted all over its broad plains, which, no doubt it will have some day, it will be one of the finest counties in the State.

About the nicest thing I saw in the State was the ford across the river at Louisville. — one unbroken rock all the way across the stream. The water generally is about twelve to eighteen inches deep. The country around Falls City I liked very well, although, like Kansas, it is often visited by grasshoppers.

From there we went to California. While there, I saw a great many grand and interesting sights. I visited the Calaveras grove of big trees. The most of these are named. There we have for instance, the Father of the Forest, a tree that has been prostrated many years before the white man discovered them. It was 430 feet high. The mother of the forest is still standing, has been barked over half its height, and the bark is kept for sale at the hotel, that has been erected on the grounds for the accommodation of travelers. The pioneers cabin took fire and burned out a space twenty-five feet inside. The fire died out and left the tree standing with a shell, three or four feet thick on the outside. Two large openings, like doors burnt out on the East and on the West. One large tree has been cut down, the stump chiseled off smooth and on it an octagon building is erected, 30 feet across. It was painted white, but the hundreds and thousands of names wrote in it, make it look nearly black. Among the many names of the most noted trees, are George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, A. Lincoln, Gen. Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, and one the nicest in the grove is named in honor of Gen. J. C. Fremont. These large trees are a species of red wood. The sloughs, swamps, etc., are covered with what is called tules, a kind of rushes or cane growing 12 to 18 feet high, without a joint. Among these, wild hogs abound in considerable numbers, and often I have enjoyed a wild hog hunt, although I ran several narrow chances with them, for when wounded or cornered, they will fight to the last. I also visited San Francisco, except from Stockton to San Francisco, a steam boat, and saw a great many wonderful sights. The place where the most knowledge can be gained is the Anatomical Museum, Mr. Dyall's gardens, and the Chih House, during the season. In Woodward's gardens is the greatest collection of animals I ever saw. I next went to Wyoming Territory.

The Larabee plain, have an altitude of from 6,000 to 8,000 feet. The eighth day of last June it snowed about three or four inches deep, when I was on one of the hills next to the plains. Down on the plains it was only about two inches. I camped on one of the mountains about five miles from the plains. During June and part of July almost every night it would freeze. From our camp we could see the snow-capped mountain of the Rocky range and the fields of eternal snow only about 12 to 15 miles distant. Thousands of rattle live on the plains all Winter, without being fed any more than what they can pick. Although some times twelve inches of snow fall every twenty-four hours, the wind blows it all into the gulches. But sometimes a heavy snow falls, then come a few warm days and melt the top of the snow. Then comes a hard frost and the wind cannot blow the snow off, and hundreds of cattle starve. But this is seldom, having occurred but once or twice in eight or ten years.

Next I went to Colorado. Here my eye was delighted again with the sight of corn fields and golden grain ready for harvest. These were the first fields of corn I had seen since I left Nebraska. The farmers of Colorado realized a good crop last year. I staid in Colorado but a short time, when I made up my mind to return to my native State. So in the forepart of last Winter, I again made my appearance in Iowa. With the greatest delight I visited my aged grandparents, and other relations and friends that had long since been forgotten. A great many fond recollections of my childhood returned to my mind, and nevertheless, how great the change! Now I can go to meeting again, and that is much appreciated by me, for during my travels in the far West, I sometimes saw not even a school-house, for six or eight months.

The greatest objection I have to the Western country, is the rough society. Good society is one of the greatest blessings to mankind. — Without its cheering influence, man is miserable. As for the country, I can speak more favorably of Colorado than any other, as I like it better for various reasons. Although I feel contented here where I am, my mind often runs back to the past and I long for the beautiful mountain scenery, the broad, level plain, clear mountain-streams and tall, green trees of the Western wilds, for by them I have learned many a noble lesson.

J. J. ELLYSON.

From Denmark.

Dear Brethren:—

THE communication giving an account of the District Meeting is to hand. We are glad, the Lord was with you, and very glad that you had peace and union, and could weep and sympathize with our people. This will help you to act, and action will save many redeemed souls even in Denmark. Indeed if you could all see how greatly your kindness is received, and how much good actions are needed everywhere, none would even feel to hold back. May God bless our dear brethren and sisters all over free America, and make them fruitful in love to the glory and honor of his name.

On the 19th of June our dear friend Thaanum came to Hjørring and after some sweet conversation, I invited all our members to attend meeting at an appointed time. Nearly all were present, and Bro. Eskildsen addressed the meeting from Rom. 5. After he concluded I read a letter from Bro. Enoch Eby which caused all to weep. Such loving letters do much good. May the Lord always give the effect of such good letters.

I then asked Bro. Thaanum if he still desired to unite with us and he said he did. All the peculiar doctrine believed and practiced by us was laid before him, and he promised to go with us in all things, hence was received. The members then went about three miles to a place where baptism could be administered, where Bro. Eskildsen did the work. I had to remain home on account of wife's sickness. I mingle daily with all kinds of people, and am happy to say that the doctrine of the Brethren, the Bible doctrine is steadily gaining in influence. We hope to be able to hold meeting in town every week next winter. All goes well and it seems the enemy has given us room in the land.

We received your new paper along with No. 22, and was much surprised to see it. Well we say the more you can do, the better for the cause. We wish you could print a Danish paper, as we think it would do much good here. Surely the devil did not invent the printing-press. No it is God's own invention. He wrote or printed the first letter on stones and thereby taught his children the art. Satan tries to abuse the art of printing, and uses it in trying to make the Lord's ways crooked. Printing is a short and quick way of writing, and is a great power for good. No one will say that there is any more moral wrong in a printing-press than in a harvester. The wrong comes by their abuse. Machinery can not use itself, hence all the wrong comes from man who makes had use of them. Now if Satan uses these for his ends, it only shows that he is quick to discern what means serve him best. We may learn many lessons from his children who are generally wiser than the children of light. We have not too much good printing, not too many earnest, hard working editors, but too few. A clear brain, good understanding, long suffering conscience, a heart full of love is necessary to edit a paper. So long as our dear editors possess these, they will work hand in hand and do much good in Israel. Of course Satan will try to stick in his hand occasionally, and sometimes it may be very difficult to detect him, hence let all of our dear editors have our earnest prayers not that they shall die, but that they may flourish, grow and be a hundred fold more able than Satan's printers. "Ask and ye shall receive," will if obeyed, by all our readers render our press more useful and the periodicals a burning flame that will put fire on the world. The Holy Spirit urges all to work, yet none endure more than editors, none need help more than they, none get so little encouragement, none receive fewer thanks, none are mentioned less in prayer. Editors do you know this? Brethren and sisters this ought not so to be. Our love to you all.
C. HOPE.

GLEANINGS.

From Oaks, Pa. — Will some brother or sister in each individual church, please inform me by letter, whether or not you have a Sunday-school. Also give the name of the Superintendent, and the probable number of scholars. Answer promptly and oblige. J. T. MEYERS.

From Waterloo, Ia.—Three numbers back you made a mistake in the obituary notice. I sent you. Instead of Speicher, it should read: "In South Waterloo church, William Frankie, son of Bro. William and sister Abby Miller. — Was born July 23rd, 1877, died June 8th, 1878, aged 10 months and 15 days. Funeral preached by Bro. Lewis Peifer and the writer.
JOHN SPEICHER.

From Ashland, Ohio.—Yesterday we enjoyed the pleasure of receiving by baptism another beloved sister into our home church, at Ashland, Ohio. May the Lord ever keep her, is my prayer. Our church is in a prosperous condition.
D. N. WORKMAN.

From Landon West.—Allow me to correct a statement made in No. 26 of your paper, 4th page, 4th column. M. M. E. says, "2,864 distilleries," when it should have been "2,874 distilleries and rectifiers." There is only the difference of two letters as to the number of letters and size of words, but allowing ten persons to each distillery, will make a difference of 25,766 men. There are already too many now engaged in this world-wide curse and traffic, and we would not wish it said that there are more than there are. Do not think, dear brother, that we fault you with the mistake, for we do not. We only wish with you that all statements of facts be true, for we all know, that they are bad enough when only the truth is told. We think your paper is still taking higher ground. We say, success to all that will elevate fallen man.

From Dunkirk, O.—The good work is still going on in our midst. One more received into the fold by baptism yesterday. May refreshing showers fall upon the kingdom everywhere.
S. T. BOSSERMAN.

Erratum.—In No. 27 of your paper, first page, second column, 22nd line from the close of "The New and the Old," for warning read waving.
C. H. BALSBOUGH.

From Longmont, Col.—We are having some very hot weather; harvest is near at hand and crops of all kinds are good. Many citizens are seeking recreation in the mountains, where they find a cool retreat and much to employ the mind and recuperate the health.
J. S. FLORY.

From Union Bridge, Md.—I have just been in the Pipe Creek congregation, Md., soliciting for the Ashland college, and must say that the thanks of the friends of that institution, are due to a number of the brethren, sisters and friends of that congregation for their liberal subscriptions to the college. Hope the Lord will bless them for their liberality and may others catch the same spirit as days come and go. The future prospects of Ashland College grow brighter and brighter, and the day is not far distant when our children will have a first-class institution of learning, under the wholesome influence of the Brethren. E. C. FAVERE.

From Alfred, Kansas.—Our Love-feast, the first of June, passed off very pleasantly. It was a time of refreshing to the church, and all the Brethren who were here. Wm. Wise and Prolene Sherly were chosen to the ministry and James Kinsey and Isaac Garst for deacons. The installation services were conducted by Bro. Jesse Studebaker and attended with much solemnity. The new officers received a very hearty approbation and God speed from all. In fact, all seemed to be interested. I thought it was one of the best meetings I ever attended, and heard others say so. All seemed to say, it was good for us to be here. The ministers who came to our assistance, were, G. Meyers, D. Longmacker, J. Studebaker, Sam. Baker, Jas. Hilkey, Bower and Kartz; these last two from Ohio, besides some others who live near us in Douglas Co. The brethren preached with power and told the story of the cross with simplicity. The church seems to have been refreshed, and four have been baptized, while others are almost persuaded to turn to Christ. Our Sabbath-school is increasing in attendance and interest, and it is to be hoped that the labors in this field will not remain without effect.
I. H. BRADER.

From Warsaw, Ind.—Bro. Stem left us the 25th of June, Bro. Workman the next day, and we can say, their labors were successful. — As a result nineteen were added to the church, and many more were almost persuaded to follow. One sister united with us since then, making in all twenty-five for this Summer. — May the grace of God abide with us, that we may live faithful unto the end is my prayer.
N. B. HEFFER.

From Waterloo, Ia.—The undersigned, a minister in the church of the Brethren or German Baptists, will travel to Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri. Will start about the 20th of August, and travel about three months. His course of travel will be Liscomb, State Center and Dallas Co., Ia. Thence to Neosho Valley, Southern Kansas and the Platte Valley, Mo., to the neighborhood of the Shoemaker's. Brethren and others living along the line of travel as above, may secure his services by writing to him at Waterloo, Iowa, before the 20th of Aug., or at Fall City, Neb., before the fifteenth of September. We will travel by private conveyance.

M. BREABLY.

From Quincy, Minn.—In reading your excellent paper, I noticed a piece under the heading, "From Mountain Home, Pa." In that piece the brother described how he realized the value of your paper when isolated from the church. It is my opinion, that if every brother in the church would be isolated from the church just six months, we isolated brethren would not have to make another call for preaching; for I think there would be ministers sent in every direction, wherever Brethren could be found. I have been trying to get the Brethren to preach here for the last six years. They have been here several times. Bro. Wetzel from Iowa was here and preached two sermons in German in the Evangelical church. The third time we got there, the door was locked. They are afraid some of their members will go astray. I have no doubt in my mind, that some would believe the truth if some brother would preach here regularly. If they want to believe the truth, they must go astray from their churches, and that is the reason they did not want any more of Bro. Wetzel's preaching.
J. H. BISHMAN.

From G. W. Miller.—Opposite my home in the village of Liberty, Ill., is the Christian church, and about the yard there were a great many citizens collected for morning services. — Among them were strangers who are called tramps by some people. To be brief, in the way of the conversation, one of the tramps stated that they had been badly treated from the fact that their breakfast was refused them. One word brought on another, until finally one of the citizens spoke about preaching at the Dunkard church.

When that was mentioned one of the tramps eagerly exclaimed, "Dunkards, Dunkards, are there any Dunkards here?"

"Yes," said a bystander, "a good many."
"Well," says the tramp, "Thanks to God, we will get something to eat." They inquired for some that might be met and journeyed on joyfully.

The news lately received that an unvisited tribe of Eskimaux possess the relics of Sir John Franklin's party has induced the fitting out of a new expedition to go in search of the same. The schooner carrying the expedition sailed June 19.

A strand of one of the great cables of the Brooklyn bridge slipped from its place recently killing two men. A shoe attached to the cable, and weighing 1,400 lbs., was shot like a cannon-ball over house-tops and telegraph poles, a distance of an eighth of a mile, by the force of the mishap.

An artesian well now being bored at Pesth has reached a depth of 3,300 feet. The well now furnishes 175,000 gallons of water at a temperature of 164°. The boring will continue till a temperature of 175° is reached. The well is expected to supply the city with warm water. By ingenious apparatus the water arising from the well is made to operate the drills.

Tea and coffee dietary for children is, as had in effects as its use is universal. Dr. Ferguson found that children so fed, only grew four pounds per annum between the ages of 13 and 16, while those who get milk night and morning grew fifteen pounds each year. This needs no commentary. The deteriorated physique of tea and coffee-fed children, as seen in their inability to resist disease, is notorious amidst the medical men of factory districts.

A new Pompeii has been discovered in Italy. At the foot of Mount Gargano a buried town has been laid bare, the houses being twenty feet below the surface. A temple of Diana was first brought to light, then a portico composed of columns without capitals, and, finally a necropolis covering nearly four acres. The Italian government has taken measures to continue the excavations on a large scale, and has already discovered a monument erected in honor of Pompey after his victory over the pirates. The town is the ancient Sipontum, of which Strabo and Levy speak, and which was buried in an earthquake.

Some idea of the headway the socialists are making in Germany may be gathered from the fact that no less than ten thousand of them followed the remains of one of their body to the grave in Berlin, each one openly wearing a party-colored emblem. The coffin was bordered with brilliant red.

OUR BATTLE CRY.

BY J. B. CONLEY.

Come brethren one and all,
Let us once more unite,
Put on the armor of our King,
And battle for the right.

Let union be our cry,
Our colors, love to all,
And watch our footsteps as we march,
Then we can never fall.

Our sword the Word of God,
Our faith, our helmet on,
Let it burn brightly evermore;
And light for God's own Son.

Strike, strike for God our King!
No quarter will we give,
If we defeat our sinful foe,
We shall forever live.

There's rest beyond the grave,
To thy true soldiers given,
A rest from all their toils and woes,
A blissful, peaceful heaven.

IDLE SPECULATIONS.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

THE advocates of modern miracles are boxing my ears left and right on account of what I said in "Lock and Key" in relation to Mark 16: 17, 18. I am used to buffeting, and seldom wince. My response in brief will lump their objections and assertions, and then leave my critics to demonstrate the correctness of their views in the only satisfactory way—by working miracles themselves.

It is strongly affirmed that if the "ocular demonstrations required for the inauguration of Christianity are not needed for its perpetuation," Christ was an impostor, and that my assertion of the former settles the latter. He declared that "these signs shall follow them that believe." It is insisted that this dominion over the order of nature and the realm of evil spirits, is the necessary, inherent result of faith. That faith alone could do this is unquestionable; that it was integral to faith lacks proof. The declaration of Christ had reference to specific reasons, to which it must be confined. It is the oldest of all of speculations to contend that the original gifts of the Spirit still continue, when God has for many centuries demonstrated the reverse in the history of the church. If it can be shown that the primary reasons for miracles still exist, the point contended for is gained, as a matter of argument. But what does this avail when the fact itself is wanting. Such an amalgamation of miracles with faith evinces an incorrect conception both of the nature and purpose of a miracle. It is an exact reversal of the Divine order as to miracles and faith. With those who call for miracles as the necessary effect of faith, the purpose of God in allowing miracles at all is utterly lost sight of. The larger the scale of the miraculous, and the longer its continuance, the feebler its effect by the necessary laws of mind in relation to the ordinary. Miracles for the purpose of faith was the Divine order, and not miracles as the necessary outcome of faith.

In my "Lock and Key" I say, "No Divine dispensation can be changed without Divine authority," and that the "continuance of the credentials needed by Christ for this purpose would lose their effect by becoming common." To which it is replied: "Christ did not say so." Christ was never tautologous; He never spoke nonsense. He never betrayed ignorance of any law in my department of being. There was no more necessity for Christ telling us the results of perpetuating miracles, than to tell the people of His day that the sun and rain and vegetation excite no surprise and evoke no faith because they were common. To make the sun stand still is no greater wonder than to keep it in its orbit. If the great luminary had rolled back in its course "ten degrees" daily for the last millennium, it would to-day have no more religious effect than the regular order of the seasons. To plead for the continuance of miracles through successive centuries, as the necessary fruit of faith, betrays ignorance of the Divine Economy, and of the fundamental laws of mind.

NOVEL READING.

BY J. S. FLORY.

THE article of brother Moore in number 28 of the BRETHREN AT WORK, is a timely one and to the point. While my mind is exercised upon the subject, I feel to add something more upon the subject, as I can speak from experience in regard to this evil habit.

Before I was twenty years of age I read probably a cart-load of works of a fictitious nature. Had I my life to live over, I would be more careful of how I would spend my leisure hours. No benefit whatever did I receive from this worse than useless habit, and I would, it were so I could say, I suffered no loss or harm by it. I lost the most precious hours of my life thus, that I might have devoted to the acquirement of useful knowledge; and as I made no special effort to remember what I read my memory became like a sieve, when I wished to memorize anything useful I could not do it only with great difficulty, and through life this has been my one great trouble. The powers of memory were not cultivated when young, and now I have to suffer the consequences.

I would say to every young man and every young woman, shun novel-reading as you would a viper, it is an evil of such magnitude that we can't more than picture out the mere outlines. The demand for works of fiction, because of perverted, mental taste, has become of such a nature that sound, solid, sensible, high-toned literature has to go begging. The very food necessary to the development of man's higher nature, is what is lost sought after, while that which tends to dwarf and demoralize the human mind, flows as free from the press as water from the rivers. No marvel then, that our legislative halls are filled with men of selfish, sordid desires, with dwarfish intellects; the same may be said of the masses generally. It is astonishing what a ready market literary trash finds in this our day.

Not long since a noted writer was informed by his publisher that his productions were too high-toned to meet the public taste. Smarting under the reproach, he seized his pen and runs off a piece of nonsense in childish rhyme, strange to say, in a short time one hundred thousand copies were sold.

It seems that the more nonsense there is in a book or paper, the better it sells. Take for instance, such novels as Helen's Babies, the publishers of which made a fortune off its sale. Is it not passing strange that men of seemingly high intellect, will stoop to dally with such mental trash? What would we think of the judge, the senator or men who fill the important stations in life, to leave their seat and go out into some dirty alley to pass their leisure hours playing with rude unkempt children, wallowing in the dust with them or delving in the earth, making mud pies? There would be about a much propriety in them doing so as to read such novels as above mentioned. Another strange thing, is to see professors of religion, not only thus wasting their time, but claiming there is no harm in novel-reading! and are ready to denounce any one who will raise his voice against them.

I remember once while traveling through a part of the State of Va., I preached one night at a certain place, and after the close of service, a very intelligent lady, a member of the Baptist church, remarked that she was very well pleased with the discourse, except the remarks against novel-reading, when I said she, "in commenting denouncing novels, I felt like throwing my shoe at him!" Now that is just the way it often is when you denounce the sins that people love to indulge in, they feel like throwing the "shoe," no matter what their profession. As an instance showing the tendency of novel-reading, we will mention a circumstance told us, by an eye witness, when we were at one time on a visit in the city of Cincinnati. A lady in one of the higher circles of life in that city, sent for her pastor. On arriving at her house he found her in tears and deep distress; her accomplished daughter, an only child had eloped with a profligate man. She said she could not account for this step on the part of her daughter, she had done all a mother could to raise her in the best society, to inculcate principles of morality and religion into her mind, and why she should thus throw herself away, she could not understand. "Ah!" said her pastor, "it is no mystery to me, there on your centre table lie enough novels to doom a thousand souls! 'Tis true the Bible is there, but I see the novels have had pre-eminence. Your daughter has drunk the delusive poison, and now she has gone to realize the fruits of a perverted mind. Ruin and degradation is the ultimate result of a tenderly inclined mind and feelings wrought up to a sickly sentimentalism. Ah! yes the demon upon your table, so near by the words of Life and Light, has done its work too well, your daughter is gone, your heart is wrung with the deepest agony, eternity alone can only reveal the evil those trashy books have wrought."

The above is only an instance of thousands. Much is said of the evil of intemperate drinking. It is indeed a monster evil, but how much less is the evil of intemperate reading? The one destroys and unfits the physical nature of man to even attain that sphere destined for him to occupy; the other in like manner has its demoralizing effect, and brings ruin and misery to millions.

The converting power of God alone can save men and women from the evils of all intemperance, and that conversion that does not bring with it a hatred for works of fiction of the nature of novels and a dislike for all that is untrue, lacks the elements of sanctification or the power of God.

In answer to the plea often put in by the lovers of fiction, that the Bible contains allegories, etc., we will say, such writings are quite different from novels, and if nothing worse has ever been read than good, sound allegories, such as "Pilgrim's Progress" etc., no harm need be feared. Allegories are simply truth in a chain of understanding to the mind of the reader, truthful illustrations of a character that are in harmony with facts, and never intended to impart to the mind other than the realities of things as they do, or shall exist.

THAT CATECHISM ON BAPTISM.

BY C. F. BETWELLER.

IT may be of interest to the readers of the BRETHREN AT WORK (as well as to that brother in Indiana whose postal card and address I lost) to give you a little testimony in regard to Christian baptism, by an eminent Baptist. The book from which I copy this testimony, seems to be a copy of an edition about twelve years old. On page 47 of this little book, we find the following question and answer:

"In what manner was baptism administered in the early ages of the church?"

"It was immersion; and not only so, but true immersion. This was first mentioned by Tertullian about the beginning of the third century, and is continually referred to by other writers for several centuries afterwards. Jerome for instance (died A. D. 420) says, 'We are thrice immersed that there may appear one sacrament of the Trinity.' Eph. 4: 4, 5. The council of Trullo A. D. 692 'condemned the Eunomians for practicing one immersion only.

A council in England (A. D. 816) commanded the priests not to pour water on the heads of the children, but to immerse them according to the example of the Son of God, who, the council affirms, 'was thrice immersed in the waters of Jordan' (Galde at Cosart 6, p. 1181; 7, p. 1487). The Spaniards thought one immersion sufficient, and their views ultimately prevailed, except in the Greek, in which true immersion still retained."

One more question and answer, the last in the book, would be very appropriate right here: It is this: "Am I to understand from the remarks you offered just now, that you regard the Baptist churches as perfect?" "By no means. The system which we uphold is identical, in my opinion, with the practical Christianity of apostolic times. The administrator may often demand improvement. Every thing human tends to declension. Man is prone to lay his unhalloved hands on the ark of God. He likes to see His own work. He would fain paint and gild that which ought to be left in unadorned simplicity. All this, wherever seen, and by whomsoever indulged should unsparingly be denounced and forsaken. If we Baptists have in any respect deviated from the original fathers, it is our duty to retrace our steps. Chillingworth's motto, must be ours, 'The Bible, the Bible only, is the religion of the Baptists.'" The same author brings in some very good points in regard to infant baptism in ancient church history, and on the whole the little book of 96 pages is well arranged and logical. It was published by the American Baptist Publication Society, 530 Arch street Philadelphia, and the preface by its author J. M. Cramp D. D. Acadia College, is dated Dec. 1st 1865.

THE DIAMONDS AND THE MAGPIE.

A NOBLE lady had ordered a jeweler to make her a beautiful gold ornament, and had given him several valuable diamonds to put in it.

Robert, his apprentice, was delighted with the lovely stones, and often admired them. Suddenly the jeweler missed two of his best diamonds. He suspected his apprentice of the theft and searched his room where he found the precious stones hidden in a hole in the wall. Robert assured him that he had not taken the diamonds, but his master flogged him, and said he deserved being put in prison, and turned him away.

The next day another diamond was missing, and the jeweler found it in the same hole. Now he watched more carefully to try and discover who hid the precious stones there.

A magpie, which the apprentice had tamed, alighted upon the work-table, took a diamond in its beak and carried it to the hole in the wall. The jeweler was then very sorry that he had unjustly suspected the poor boy.

He took him back again and treated him very kindly, and was very careful in the future how he judged others.

ACROSTIC.

BY J. W. FORTHOOD.

From all evil let us flee,
And, true Christians always be;
Taking heed and Jesus trust,
Having turned our eyes from lust;
Every precept try to keep,
Running not as straying sheep.

Soon our Shepherd's call we'll hear,
Oh, be faithful! ever near;
Near to Him whose love is great,
And the strait and narrow gate;
Near the Savior's bleeding side
Do we constantly abide?

How could we endure the thought
Of a life spent here for naught?
Let us cast on Christ our care,
Yielding not to Satan's snare,
God will give the saints on high,
Homes of rest from every sigh,
Oh, then let us e'er be true,
Stand for Christ, our work pursue,
Till we gain the heavenly crown.

CONFESSION OF THE MURDER
OF WILLIAM MORGAN.

[The following "Confession" was dictated to me by Mr. Henry L. Valance, who had for some time previous to making it, resided in this place. Called in to attend him in my medical capacity, and having early felt it my duty to warn him of the fatal nature of the disease under which he was suffering; I won his confidence, and the result was the following narrative, which will go far toward clearing up a great mystery in the criminal history of this country. The "Confession" is given in Mr. Valance's own words, I having acted only as his amanuensis; and I am of the opinion that the statement contained in it can be implicitly relied upon, from a multitude of circumstances of a minor character that attracted my attention, but which would have been entirely unimportant by themselves. My first intention, after I had made up my mind to give the "Confession" to the public, was to re-ent it; but on consideration, it struck me that such a proceeding would scarcely be a compliance with the author's intention, and I have therefore printed the book from the original manuscript, as the "Confession" was taken down and read to the unfortunate man who made it. Such as it is, I give it to a discerning public, which will find it a narrative of much interest.]

JOHN L. EMERY, M. D.

Wisconsin, September 11, 1848.

I WAS twenty-nine years of age when I came to America. This was in 1822. I lived in Canada, but in what part of that country I shall not particularly state. My life there was more settled than it had been, and I was in a fair way of becoming as good a man as most of those whom we commonly find in the world, when circumstances occurred which resulted in my being outlawed, and made the enemy of all who regard the obligations of morals and of society, as they in turn were made my enemies. For some years I had been a member of the Masonic Fraternity, in which I had attained to the honorable degree of Master Mason. I have no hesitation in saying, that the effect of this association on me had been good, and that had I construed my obligations in the spirit which marked their administration, and which is always inculcated in Masonic meetings, I should never have been guilty of that terrible error which has turned my life into bitterness, and shortened my earthly career. I never heard, either in the lodge or from individual members thereof, anything that would have warranted the perpetration of crime. The object of the fraternity was always explained to be the promotion of good among men by the practice of benevolent acts. It is true that the imperative necessity of observing our obligations was often dwelt upon, but never, and never was anything intimated that the most Jesuitically inclined intellect could with a shadow of reason have interpreted into either a permission or justification of blood-guiltiness. I say this in justice to the men who have been made to suffer through the mad folly of myself and a few other misguided men. Misguided, I mean, by a blind zeal in behalf of an order to which they were attached, and to maintain the ascendancy of which they believed would warrant the perpetration of the foulest wrong which one man, or society, can suffer at the hands of human beings.

In the early part of the Summer of 1826, it was rumored among Masons that the order was about to be assailed by one of its members, who, from the mere desire of making money, was taking measures for publishing to the world all that constituted its secrets. It was in the United States that this injury to the craft was to be perpetrated, but this did not prevent the occurrence of considerable sensation on the subject among Canadian Masons, especially those of their number who lived near to the American line, which unfortunately happened to be my case. Various opinions were expressed in the conversations that grew out of the matter. By far the larger number were of the opinion that Morgan and his publication should be treated with silent contempt, in the hope that thereby the world would fall into the belief that it had been imposed upon. They argued that all that could be published must necessarily fall so greatly short of popular expectation, that if Masons regarded the book with silence, and moved not to the injury of its author, people would soon come to the conclusion that they had been imposed upon, and would sufficiently punish the man who had been false to his obligations. They fortified their argument by reference to the small weight that had been attached to previous disclosures of Masonic secrets, to which mankind had absolutely refused to give credence, utterly disbelieving that the secrets of the order consisted only in its ceremonies, passwords &c. Others, however, were of the opinion that the perpetration of a little violence against the liberty of Morgan would be justified by the nature of the case, though they expressly disclaimed any desire to shed his blood. They thought that he and his papers should be seized, and that while the latter were destroyed, he himself should be placed in confinement until he should agree to refrain from all attempts to injure the order, by exposing its proceedings to the gaze of the uninitiated—the fraternity, in the meantime, providing for the support of his family, they argued, in support of their view, that the publication of a book like that announced as about to come from Morgan's pen, would produce a very different effect in America from what had flowed from any similar publication in Europe—that in a nation where all were readers, believers would be found in sufficient numbers to make the book a profitable one; and that therefore other treacherous brethren would be induced to write and publish other books on the subject, against the effects of which silence could be no shield, until the power and usefulness of the order should cease to exist, and the order itself become a laughing-stock among men. It was better, they said, to crush the evil in the bud, than to run the risk of such disastrous results coming about. Among this latter class was I ranked; but in justice to myself, no less than to those who held the same opinions, I am bound to say, that we regarded the whole matter as one of theory. Practically, it did not seem to concern us, in the least, as we supposed that the American Masons, against whom the offense was to be immediately committed, were competent to deal with the offender. It is true that there were communications and correspondence on the subject between Lodges in both countries; but at the time of which I am speaking, it had never occurred to us that we should be called upon to take any active part in the affair. Had we supposed that our assistance in an illegal and violent act was to be demanded, most of us would have departed from our opinions and joined the moderate party; for we knew that when the first step in crime has been taken, there is no safety, and that one error is often productive of a thousand others. I am more particular in relating what were the sentiments of Canadian Masons with reference to Morgan and his book, and the proper course to be pursued under circumstances so critical, because precisely the same state of things existed in New York; and because Canadian Masons have by many been supposed to have urged their American brethren to the adoption and pursuit of violent measures.

Time passed on, and we heard of the seizure and confinement of Morgan. We were informed that Morgan was to be brought to Canada, and put on board a ship and sent to Europe. This seemed to us a very rational plan of operations, as far as the term can be applied to a proceeding wrong in itself. We entered into the plan, as our co-operation was said to be necessary; but we are doomed to be disappointed, and a few of our number were made to drink of the cup of crime to the very dregs. The captain of the ship in which Morgan was to have sailed for Europe suddenly died, and no other opportunity offered for banishing him in the manner proposed. The necessity of sending him off in a ship manned by Masons only, must be obvious to every reflecting mind. We could not trust the uninitiated, not even had we the means of bribing them highly, which did not happen to be our case. Among so many, to whom the secret would have to be intrusted, some one would be almost certain to expose the abduction of a free American citizen; and the dread of this was more pointed, as the crime would have been committed by the subjects of a foreign Monarch, of whom Americans are naturally jealous. All things combined to make us give up the idea of sending Morgan to England, though we came to the conclusion with deep regret, and with the gloomiest anticipations as to what must be the end of the illegal course into which we had been drawn, more through the force of circumstances than from any preconceived design. All the hope we had was, that another opportunity in the course of time would offer for sending him out of the country not subject to the hazards I have enumerated. It was a faint one, but not altogether without consolation.

It is from this time that my connection with this unhappy business more particularly dates. Up to the time of which I am now speaking, I had not been more concerned in it than others. But, from some cause or other, the more daring of the American conspirators, who had resolved in their hearts to go all lengths in the awful path on which they had entered, should it be necessary for their safety so to do—these men, I say, selected me and some few other of the Canadians, as persons upon whom they could most rely in the event of their resorting to extremities. They took us into their confidence in a very marked manner, and the consequence was a degree of intimacy far greater than would have followed from the ordinary Masonic tie. We discussed the whole matter, in all its bearings, and the death of the offender was darkly and obscurely hinted at in our nocturnal consultations. It did not, however, ever assume other than a shadowy shape, and the crime itself would have remained unperpetrated, had it not been that we had placed ourselves in a position where a feather's weight was sufficient to turn the scale against the life of the victim of a mistaken view of our Masonic obligations. Circumstances, in themselves trivial, led to the death, rather than the continued confinement, or banishment of Morgan, as I shall now proceed to show.

Morgan, as all the world knows, had been confined in the magazine of Fort Niagara. The keeper of the Fort was a Mason, and a man upon whom we could most confidently rely, as he had entered heart and soul into the plan of abduction, and was ready to go as far as the worst of us for the purpose of preventing Morgan's disclosures, or for punishing a traitor, as we all held Morgan to be. Had he been alone there, all would have gone as well as the most lenient of our number could have desired; but his wife was with him, and it was through her conduct that we felt ourselves compelled to silence him who could have borne testimony against us, had he managed to obtain his freedom. This woman came to the knowledge of the fact that some one was confined illegally in the fort, and she demanded to be made acquainted with the whole circumstances of the transaction in which we were engaged. Her husband not only refused to comply with her request, in the dread that it would lead to the discovery of the entire matter, and the arrest and severe punishment of all the parties to it; but he endeavored to enforce silence upon her. This, of course, she being a spirited woman, only rendered things worse. Dispute followed dispute, and one quarrel trod fast upon the heels of another, until the wife finally left her husband, and returned for protection to the house of her father. To her father she communicated the cause of those domestic dissensions which had led to the separation from her husband. He was struck with her narrative, and determined, after considerable reflection, to see his son-in-law, and to demand an explanation of the mysterious circumstances, rather than to make a public affair of what, after all, might prove to be one of those difficulties which occasionally occur in married life. He said nothing to his daughter, however, of his intended course of action, but proceeded to the fort, and saw his son-in-law. There was much composure in the manner of the latter when the subject was broached, and he endeavored to give such a coloring to his matrimonial difficulties as would, had he succeeded, have placed the inquirer on a wrong scent, but his very manner was sufficient to give the lie to the part he was attempting to perform in so skillful a way; and the old man probed him so deeply as to almost penetrate to the details of the whole business. Had he done so, how much better would it have been for poor Morgan! and still how much better would it have been for his murderers!

The result of the father-in-law's inquiries amounted to this, that some one was illegally confined in the fort, but who he was, or for what purpose imprisoned, he could not ascertain. He then told the keeper, that he would give him twenty-four hours in which to release the man, and if within that time he should not be released, resort would be had to legal means to restore him to the enjoyment of freedom. It was his duty to have insisted upon his immediate liberation, and that duty would have probably been performed had not the keeper been so nearly connected with him, his wish being to prevent his relative from suffering the consequences of his conduct, provided he should at last act in accordance with the dictates of justice. I should have mentioned that the keeper's father-in-law was not a Mason, and therefore the keeper could not confide to him either the name of his prisoner or the cause of his incarceration.

As soon as his father-in-law had left him, the keeper proceeded to notify us of the nature of the interview he had with his relative. He plainly told us that something must be done immediately, and that if Morgan was not disposed of before the next morning, not only should we all be arrested and severely punished, but that there would be a great excitement raised against the order, and that it would fall before the torrent of public indignation, suffering more severely than it could have done had Morgan's book been published, and allowed to pass without question. It needed not that he should tell us this, for was self-evident to every man in the dark and agitated company. A long and serious consultation took place. Many plans were proposed, discussed and rejected, in their turn, having for their object the removal of our prisoner to some secure place of confinement; for it was difficult to settle upon a place less likely to be disturbed than that which had been originally selected. The fort had been selected, at the start, because it was supposed that it combined in a superior degree the leading essentials of a secret prison; yet this deeply contrived plan had been baffled by so simple and common-place a thing as the curiosity of a woman! What security could we have that any other prison would prove a better retainer of its secrets? Such security was not to be had, and we saw before us the prospect of continued danger, a constant dread of detection and punishment, to say nothing of the danger to our order, so long as Morgan should live. Our liberty, our property, our character, and the great institution in whose behalf we had originally undertaken to act, would all, for very many years, it was probable, be at the mercy of every woman or child who should chance to be in the vicinity of our victim's prison.

It was while we were in this state of doubt and uncertainty, regretting the past and trembling for the future, that one of our number rose to speak. He was a thoughtful, silent man, generally, but always ready to act when any thing was to be done, and had the reputation among us of being more deeply concerned in the business of kidnapping Morgan than any other of the conspirators. "Brethren," he said, in a firm voice, "there is no denying that our situation is a most critical one; but it is the characteristic of determined, resolute men, that they always rise superior to those difficulties which are fatal to the weak and vacillating. If we are firm, and do not allow ourselves to be deterred from pursuing the only course, that can lead to safety, all will yet be well with us. What have we to fear? It is, that Morgan may recover his liberty, and bring down upon our heads the whole weight of the law, and put our order under the ban of public opinion, against which, no institution, however strong, can maintain itself. How are these difficulties to be avoided? To me it seems clear that they can be avoided only by consigning Morgan to that confinement from which alone there is no possibility of escape—THAT OF THE GRAVE! This may appear to some of you a dread alternative, but I have been prepared for it from the beginning, as the probable result of this man's seizure and imprisonment. Nor will there be any thing so decidedly unjust in our thus disposing of him. Has he not placed himself in the position of a traitor; and have not the laws of God and man, in all ages, condemned traitors to suffer in full the penalty? And what is the treachery which directs itself only against a country or king, in comparison with that which aims at the overthrow of a vast institution which is gathering into its fold of men of every country, and binding all mankind into a common brotherhood? I say, that Morgan has incurred the penalty of death, and that to visit that penalty upon him will be an act of justice, and according to the principles that prevail among men in all forms of society. Our own safety, too, points to the same course; and, for one, I am ready to bear a full part in placing him in the only prison that can make us all safe, while at the same time it will be a just punishment of his treachery."

The words of a bold man, in times of doubt and trial, are always effectual. They were so in the present case, and the greater part of the company were carried away by the speech of the daring American. They assented at once to the force of his arguments, and avowed their readiness to aid him in any measure that he should deem proper under the circumstances. Some few were silent, and neither approved nor condemned the sentiments that had been put forth; and from this position they were as deeply involved, and as guilty, as those who were most forward in their desire for the shedding of blood. Before we separated, the death of Morgan was fully resolved upon; and it was agreed to meet on the evening of that day, and fix upon the mode of execution.

In the evening we all met. Several plans for putting our prisoner to death were proposed; but that which was finally adopted came from the same man who had been so successful in convincing us that we should proceed to extremities. We were eight in number, and it was determined that three of us should be selected by lot to perform the part of executioners. Eight pieces of paper were procured, five of which were to remain blank, while the letter "D" was written on the other. These pieces of paper were placed in a large box, from which each man was to draw one at the same moment. After drawing, we were all to separate, without looking at the paper that each held in his hand. So soon as we had arrived at certain distances from the place of rendezvous, the tickets were to be examined, and those who held blanks were to return instantly to their homes; and those three who should hold the marked tickets were to proceed to the Fort at midnight, and there put Morgan to death, in such a manner as should seem to themselves most fitting. The tickets were placed in the box, and drawn simultaneously, and we all left the place, in different directions, without looking at our papers. The proceeding was so rapid that I had no time for reflection until I found myself in the open air; and walking fast to a point at which I thought it would be safe for to examine my ticket; and even then I did not think so much of the atrocious nature of the crime in which I was engaged, as of the chances that there were of my having drawn a blank, which would indeed have been a prize to me. After walking a mile or thereabouts, and seeing that no one was near, I halted, and examined my ticket, which I had kept within my clenched hand. I started back with horror, as, by the dim light, I was enabled to trace the fatal letter, distinctly drawn on the white ground! My first thought was to turn and fly; but where should I fly to? Would not my comrades suspect the cause of my absence, and would they not, from regard to their own safety, deem it necessary to treat me as they were about to treat Morgan? Besides, was I not bound in honor—aye, and my oath, too—to go onward in the enterprise, horrible and unlawful as it was, and fearful as might be its consequences? I had offered no remonstrance against the plan for the making away with Morgan, but had gone on, step by step, with the other conspirators; and was I not, therefore, bound in honor to continue in the same fearful path unto the end? Strange as it may appear, and so singularly is the mind of man constituted, the sensation that I most deeply experienced at that awful moment, was one of shame, that I should have thought of evading the dread task that I had been selected by fortune to perform. All idea of its criminality was absorbed in this, and I resolved to go through with the enterprise with a bold heart and a steady hand.

As the hour for the meeting of the three approached I proceeded toward the Fort, not without a lingering hope that the two who were to be associated with me as executioners, would be less punctual than myself, and that they would fail altogether of keeping their rendezvous. But this hope soon left me, for as I arrived near the Fort, I was joined by two of those from whom I had so recently separated, and then it was that we ascertained who had drawn the death-tickets. Both these men were Americans, and neither of them, I am certain, had less desire to take any part in the affair than myself. However, there was now no show of reluctance, all of us acting as if we had made up our minds to the performance of a terrible task, from which there was no retreat. Immediate arrangements were made to carry out the sentence, if such it can be called, that had been passed upon the prisoner. My comrades left to procure a boat, one of them knowing where it was easy to find it, it having been agreed upon that Morgan should be sunk in the Niagara, in the hope that he and our crime alike would thus be buried beneath the waves. My part was to proceed to the magazine and announce to Morgan his fate, to prepare him, so far as I could, to meet it.

When my partners in crime had left, I passed to the magazine. On entering, I found Morgan asleep, and for a few moments I stood and regarded him by the light of the lantern that I had brought with me. He was pale and haggard, and looked like an old man, though in reality he was not much past the prime of existence. Nevertheless, he slept quietly, and my entrance did not appear to have disturbed him. I gently awoke him, and he started wildly up, and gazed upon me. I was a stranger to him, and he hurriedly demanded my business. "William Morgan," I replied, "I come to you on a sad duty—it is to prepare you for your last hour on earth. The great crime of which you have been guilty, has been duly considered by those against whom it has been committed: and they, possessed both of the right and power to act, have resolved that you must die. It is now past midnight, and before the earliest dawn shall have appeared, you must be no longer on earth. I leave you to prepare for the great change you are to undergo." Thus saying, I placed the lantern on the floor, and was in the act of leaving the magazine, for the purpose of stationing myself at the entrance, when Morgan loudly called me back, and poured out a number of questions. He demanded by what authority we had condemned him? who had been his judge? were they Americans or foreigners? how was he to die? and many other questions of the like character. I told him I had not come there to answer questions, but to notify him of his sentence, from which there was no appeal, or possibility of escape. I added, that I had heard he had been a soldier, that I had been one myself, and that I hoped he would meet his end as became a man who had borne arms. He took no notice of this, but commenced wringing his hands and talking of his wife and children, the recollection of whom in that awful hour terribly affected him. His wife, he said, was young and inexperienced, and his children were but infants; what would become of them were he, the husband and father, cut off, and they even ignorant of his fate? I endeavored to console him on this point, by assuring him that the fraternity, of which he had been an unworthy member, and which he had sought to ruin, had already provided for his family, and that they would not be permitted to want any thing. He then commenced a rambling discourse, and begged to know if there was no avoiding his fate, promising to give up all his papers, to go to any part of the world we might send him, and there reside, seeking to have no communication with America, and living a different life from that he had formerly pursued—by which I understood that he would maintain his Masonic obligations. Just as I was about to reply to him, my comrades came to the door of the magazine, which they opened, and beckoned me to come to them, which I did. They had informed me that they had procured a boat and a number of heavy weights, and that every thing was ready on their part, and demanded to know if Morgan himself was prepared. Before I could answer, Morgan commenced shouting, as if in the hope of obtaining assistance. "By God!" said one of our number, "that must be stopped, or we may yet all be discovered!" So saying, he entered the magazine, followed by myself and—striding up to Morgan, he bade him cease that useless alarm, which could avail him nothing, for that die he must if we had to kill him where he stood. As if cowed by the fierceness of this demonstration, Morgan stopped shouting, and again began remonstrating against our conduct, which he declared to be wholly unjustifiable, even if he had violated his masonic obligations, for Masons had no right to put men to death. He was again told that all remonstrances were idle, and that he should prepare himself for death, otherwise he would have to die without making his peace. From this moment, and as if his nature revolted against the oppression of which he was the object, his bearing underwent a change. He became more firm, and disinclined to make further appeals for mercy for himself; but the feelings of the husband and the father were still strong within him, and he humbled himself so far as to plead in behalf of his family. He begged that some permanent provision might be made for them, and above all things, implored us to communicate his fate to his wife.

BROTHER H. J. KURTZ has on hand a lot of Brethren's Encyclopaedia containing Mack's writings which he wishes to sell. If any of our readers desire a copy they can receive one by sending seventy-five cents to brother Kurtz, at Dayton, Ohio.

THE School Board of Boston is discussing the propriety of dropping spelling-books, lessons in spelling to be taken from the reading-books. Much weariness and mechanical repetition could be got out of the way by adopting this course.

SOME of our correspondents must not think hard of it if their articles, which were written with a pencil, do not appear in print, for articles written with a pencil are often so dim by the time they reach us that they cannot be used. All our compositors will say, "Please do write with pen and black ink."

By the treaty of Berlin all the fortifications along the river Danube from the Iron Gates to its mouth, are to be pulled down. No ships of war shall navigate the river except guard ships of the principal nations. Now if they will get up another International Congress and pull down all the fortifications in the world, burn all the war vessels, and change all war implements into tools of usefulness, we will have the peace on earth that has been so long desired.

THE Illinois State Medical Board has thrown out about twelve hundred professed physicians because they lacked the necessary qualifications to heal the people. Now if different churches will stop all the preachers who slum to declare the whole counsel of God, we may look for better preaching. Men who lack the qualifications to preach the Truth—and refuse to stand up for the thus sayeth the Lord, are not worthy of the title of a minister.

LEON Beaconsfield, Prime Minister of England, is highly eulogized by the public press of both continents for the active and noble part he took in the Berlin Congress, advocating the granting of religious liberties to thousands who have hitherto been debased and nearly ruined by corrupt and misguided religious legislation. He is a Jew of genius and pluck, and a Statesman of rare attainments. While in the Congress he worked nobly for the interest and freedom of the Jewish race in Bulgaria and elsewhere, for which he is receiving the united thanks of the Jews throughout the world.

THE migration to the West is very great this season; perhaps greater than has been in any previous year. Kansas, however, takes the lead in selling land and Dakota comes in next. It will not likely be long till the wild prairies of the West will be thickly settled by an industrious and well-to-do class of people. We are glad that the Brethren too are getting a foothold in most of the Western States and Territories, and are laboring hard to build up churches in every locality. Their struggle may be a hard one, but victory will come to the persevering by and by.

PERILOUS TIMES.

OUR theme comes from God's Book of religion. "This know also," says the man of God, Know what? "Know that in the last days PERILOUS TIMES shall come." Mark the language of Inspiration. Perilous times shall come—not that perilous times were, or are, but shall come in the last days. There it is—LAST DAYS. Are the days of 1878 among the last days? Can any man prove by the Bible that they are not? But we are not left without an evidence of the last days. God tells us what men shall be in the last days—in the perilous times. "Lovers of their own selves." This is the first sign of perilous times. The scramble in the political world for position, power and honor, tells how earnestly men love themselves. No stone is left unturned by demagogues to further their personal interests, even if the poor laborer must work for a mere pittance, or beg his bread and seek the shelter of a friendly shed or tree. The holders of capital seek high rates of interest, and have so arranged as to protect themselves. As a prominent man recently said to the writer, "I do not blame the tramps very much. If they work for present wages, at the end of the year they simply have their living. If they tramp over the country, they have the same." As to the outcome, this is perhaps true, but as to laboring and tramping, the former brings hundreds of blessings that are strangers to the latter. These are truly "perilous times," and it would be well for those who hold the wealth of the nation to seriously and carefully consider the best method to better the condition of the poor. Unless the rich will meet the poor as friends—hold out to them good inducements to become situated in good homes, with sufficient to eat, drink and wear, these "perilous times" may become worse and worse until terror shall reign every-where.

Covetousness is the cause of much misery. The shortest definition is greed. I have seen this exemplified even among swine. Give them some good food, the best of milk and one of the company is sure to snap, push and squeal to get it all. A covetous man acts very much the same way. He is greedy. He would take all that belongs to his neighbor, gather all for himself, exert himself to gain every dollar in the country. Watch his dealings. Now he has something to sell. Look at covetousness carefully. He is not a sense article, but is getting pretty plentiful, because "perilous times" have come. In selling, he wants a price a little higher than the highest, and in buying, a price a little lower than the lowest. He goes to a dealer in stock and says: "Mr. G., what is pork worth to-day?" "Six dollars per hundred," says G., "and the market will not warrant my paying any more." Covetousness says, "I'll see further." Of course he "sees further," and goes straightway to Mr. D. and asks: "What is pork worth?" "Six dollars," replies D. "Can't you give me a little more?" Mr. G. offered me six dollars, but I would rather sell to you; and if you give me a little more, we will make a bargain." This touches Mr. D.'s pride a little, and rather than to be outdone by Mr. G., says: "I will give you $6.10," while at the very time he knows that he is endangering his business by going beyond the market price. But Covetousness drives him to it, and his pride will not let him retreat. This is one side; now turn to the other. The covetous man wants ten yards of calico and ten pounds of sugar, so he goes to Mr. F. and says: "What is calico worth?" "Here is some for five, some for six, and extra good for seven cents a yard," replies the merchant. Covetousness looks at the goods, fumbles them over awhile then plyingly, pleadingly says: "Can't you let me have this five cent calico for four and a half? You know I pay cash, and I think you ought to favor me." Mr. F. replies: "Why it cost me that, and I ought to have a little profit." "Well, but," says Covetousness, "I think I can get it for that at Mr. L's, but I would rather buy of you; we have known each other for twenty years, and I think you can let me have it for four and a half cents." The merchant is outdone. He loses about fifty per cent. in humanity, and declares that we have truly come into "perilous times." Yes, truly the covetous man makes it perilous for that merchant. But we have not done with Covetousness. He wants some sugar. Mr. F. shows him some good sugar and informs him that he sells nine and one-half pounds for a dollar. "Can't you give me ten pounds for a dollar?" pleads this greedy man. "No," says Mr. F. "I cannot do that. I make so little profit on sugar that I must stick to my price." "Well, then, give me fifty cents' worth," says Covetousness, the idea occurring to him that while he is using the fifty cents' worth of sugar, the other fifty cents will be drawing interest, so that by the time he wants more sugar, he will have a little more money to buy with. This reminds me of the man who always took the hindmost seat in the hind car, and when interrogated concerning it, replied: "I never buy a ticket; and by taking the hindmost seat, I hold my money that much longer, as the conductor always reaches this point last. You see I have the use of my money a little longer than if I purchase a ticket or sit in the front seat." These characters prove that "perilous times" have come. But another chapter, then I have done with this subject at this time.

Men are writing for the press. They aim to write the truth, the whole truth; not that men may get hurt,—not that men may go on in the way of death, but that they may reform, may turn to serve the true and the living God. Good and holy men aim to put the Truth into men's hearts, aim to lead to a higher and better life—not to drive men from Christ—not to make men disobedient, the children of the devil, but to lead to Christ, to have them respect and obey the Gospel—the whole Truth. This is the mission of the men of God. They look to Jesus as their Pattern—their Leader who shunned not to speak of the evil deeds of men, in language that could be understood. There are not too many holy writers, not too many bold preachers. There is wisdom in boldness and boldness in wisdom. The two combined, give power for great good.

"Ah!" says one, "you hit some persons, and they feel bad." Not precisely! If anything was "hit" it was the evil deed—the unrighteousness—the idol of the heart, and if a man will not give up the "idol" for something better, he has fallen into a "perilous" condition. Do not ask—do not expect the minister, the editor, the contributor to keep back some of the Truth. If the unholy acts of men and women are not somewhat exposed and their evil tendencies pointed to as examples of warning (2 Pet. 2: 5, 6), we may soon all go the same way. In all ages of the world, there lived men who raised the voice of warning so that some might be saved.

Those easily-hurt people always want men to write and preach so as to miss them and hit some others. If you tell of Peter's faults and Paul's failings, they are delighted; but if you come home to the nineteenth century and expose the evil deeds of this generation it will occasion considerable squirming. Ministers and editors, you know how this is. Look at the man who cannot endure the denunciation of his evil deeds! See how uneasy he is! He cannot look at the preacher. Perhaps his conscience hurts him, then he hastens to complain to others, telling that the minister meant "him." Of course he meant "him" if he be guilty. He did not mean to put the words of Truth into the heart of him who is whole,—who is clear of such misdeeds as he may have mentioned, but he meant to drive out evil with the sword of Truth and if the sick will not accept the medicine, the physician is clear.

Once the Savior told the professed righteous men of His day that, "Ye seek to kill me, a man that hath told the truth, which I have heard of God." This hurt them, and they replied to Him, when He answered, "Ye are of your father, the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." Pretty severe language, yet suited to hypocrites. When I hear a man fret, worry and denounce because some one told the exact truth in his preaching or writing, I am pretty well convinced that the man has brought himself into "perilous times." I do not mean that men should be singled out and publicly exposed for their faults, but when those faults are spoken of in general terms and men are "hurt," it don't speak well of them to make a noise about it. God help every man to receive the whole Truth and then keep it. M. M. E.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

MOST people have fallen into an error by supposing that the Sabbath of the Old Testament has been changed from the seventh to the first day of the week. Of course they cannot tell when, where, how, nor by whom the change was made, yet they are satisfied there has been a change, and so teach, not only in preaching, but writing, when in fact no such change as they teach, has ever been made. There has been a change, but not in what they write and preach about. The man who, in debate with a well-read opponent, undertakes to prove that the Sabbath of the Old Testament has been changed from the seventh to the first day of the week, gets himself into a pretty close place. For if it can be proven that the Sabbath, as taught by Moses, is still binding, then it falls on the seventh and not the first day of the week.

1. There has never been any change of the Sabbath from Saturday to Sunday. The Sabbath of the Old Law has always been on Saturday, on the seventh day of the week, and not once since the world began has it been on the first day of the week, or Sunday, hence respecting the Sabbath of the Old Testament there has no divinely authorized change occurred. The Bible says not one word about a change of the Sabbath. Right here is where people get into difficulty. They advocate a change, when, in fact, there has been none so far as the Sabbath is concerned.

2. There was a change made, but that was not a change in the Sabbath, but a change in the Law. If they look to the Sabbath for a change they look to the wrong place; it is to the Law that they should look for the change. So long as the Old Law remains unrepealed, just that long the Sabbath continues in force, and falls on Saturday.

3. God was not willing to work in the dark, hence the first thing he made was light, for he said, "Let there be light; and there was light." Gen. 1: 3. Having worked six days he rested on the seventh. He did his work first and rested afterwards. Gen. 2: 2. In course of time this same day was, in the Mosaic law, set apart as a day of rest and worship, to be kept holy unto the Lord. Like God, the people were required to work six days and rest on the seventh. This law was given to the Hebrews only, nor was it binding on any other nation under heaven. Unto them God had promised the land of Canaan as a possession, and then gave them a code of laws which they were to keep in view of this promise thus made to them. The promise was made to no other nation, nor was the law binding on any other.

4. God made Abraham two promises. (1.) The Land of Promise, or Canaan, and (2.) "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." The first promise was to the Jews only, while the second was to affect the welfare of all nations, both Jew and Gentile. The code of laws given Moses at Mt. Sinai was to those alone, who were to enjoy the benefits of the first promise or covenant God made with Abraham, that unto him and his seed would he give the land of Canaan for an inheritance forever. In this law the seventh day of the week was set apart as a day unto the Lord, and was called the Sabbath, and continued in force just so long as the law was binding. For a violation of this law the penalty was temporal, as was the reward for obeying it.

5. But we have a new era of things; the Old Law is now abolished; it was only added because of transgression till the seed, Jesus Christ should come. We have observed that God ended his work on the sixth day, and rested on the seventh, so with Christ, on the evening of the sixth day, at the close of the Old dispensation, he ended his great work when he said, "It is finished," rested his body in the grave on the seventh. On the first day of the week he arose from the dead, to the joy and hope of his broken-hearted followers. That day was fully devoted to the spreading of the glorious news of the risen Lord. Eight days afterwards, or on the next first day of the week, we find them assembled again, and this day was ever afterwards kept by them in memory of their risen Lord. They did not call it the Sabbath, but the Lord's day, to be kept to his honor; or frequently the first day of the week, because in numbering the days of the week it came first. In the Mosaic law the first six days were to be devoted to work, and the seventh to rest, and was by the Jews called the Sabbath, but not so in the Law of Christ, or the Gospel; we devote the first day to the service and worship of the Lord—and call it the Lord's day—their labor the other six, hence we offer unto the Lord the best fruits of our labor.

6. The Sabbath day has then not been changed to Sunday at all. The Old Law required that the seventh day be kept unto the Lord, for the simple reason that God commanded it, and it was also authorized that it should be called the Sabbath. But this law has now been done away with, and of course so has the Sabbath as a day of rest also passed away. In the room of the Old Law we have the Gospel of Jesus Christ, another Law more perfect than the former; one that contains no seventh day as a day of worship. But the Apostles and ancient Christians, came together on the first day of the week, in memory of the resurrection. As before remarked, they never called it the Sabbath, never spoke of it being changed from the seventh to the first day of the week. We hear so much about the Sabbath being changed, but can't find one word of it in the Bible. The change was not in the Sabbath, but in the Law. The Sabbath is still on Saturday, and will remain there while the world stands, but it is not binding on us who live in the Gospel dispensation, we have another day set apart for a more noble purpose.

7. The first day of the week being the Lord's day should be devoted to his service, and those who do not keep that day dishonor their risen Master. The Lord's day is a purely Christian institution, and as such should be observed by all professing Christians in honor of their risen Master. It is binding on all Christians everywhere, and cannot be neglected without greatly dishonoring the Resurrection day of the Lord. We are called the Lord's people, have the Lord's Supper, and certainly should celebrate the resurrection of the Master by keeping the Lord's day—the first day of the week. The Sabbath, being a purely Israelitish institution, need not concern us. Since the day that Jesus Christ rested in the grave on the Sabbath no one has been divinely authorized to teach or observe it. It is forever gone with the types and shadows of the Old or past dispensation; gone with "the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones;" nailed to the cross; abolished and taken out of the way; gone with the law which was added because of transgression till Christ the seed should come.

The ten commandments may be regarded as the Constitution of the Hebrews as a nation, and in that sense should be distinguished from the law made under it. Why talk of the Hebrew system passing away while the Constitution remains? Is that logical? The ten commandments are not the Constitution of the Christian system, nor are they any part of it unless found in some sense incorporated in the Gospel. This law which was added because of transgression, till Christ should come—the law that "was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator" (Gal. 3: 19) "was our school-master to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a school-master," Gal. 3: 24, 25, no longer under the law. We have another Law Giver, another Mediator in the room of Moses; he is that Prophet spoken of by Moses, and we shall hearken unto him in all things. That Prophet did not command us to keep the Sabbath of the law that he came to fulfill and nail to the cross. He has in the New dispensation given us another day, not in commemoration of God's rest on the seventh day, but in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ from the dead.

JOHN'S BAPTISM.

A BROTHER sends us several questions about certain points in John's baptism, which we give below, followed by our remarks:

1. "Was John's baptism a trinitarian baptism? If not, why not?"

John's baptism was from heaven, and therefore called. It was a baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, Luke 3: 3, and was pre- ceded by faith, Acts 19: 4, without which it is impossible to please God in any act. Accompanying it was also the confession of sins, Matt. 3: 6. It is in no instance called "Christian baptism" in the Scriptures, but always "John's baptism," or the "baptism of John;" but in course of time, as John and his mission diminished, and Christ and his superior claims increased, the idea, "John's baptism," passed out of practical existence, and the identical same word became known as "Christian baptism."

I can conceive of no practical difference, so far as the action is concerned, between John's baptism and that afterwards taught by the Saviour, though there were some points of difference in theory. Christian baptism is John's baptism sanctioned and commended by Christ. There can be no difference regarding the mode, though there may be in theory. The theory need not now concern us, as we are not under the "forerunner," but under Christ. John came as the harbinger of the Messiah—as a witness of the light, but not the light itself.

As he continued baptizing for sometime after Christ commenced preaching and baptizing (by proxy), it is evident that his method of baptizing was the same as that used by Christ. I is not reasonable to suppose that there were two modes, for that would have created a division among the disciples regarding the action of baptism. Though Christ made and baptized more disciples than John, yet not one person baptized by John was ever rebaptized. This shows that each party used the same method.

2. "Did John use the same formula given in Matt. 28: 19? If not, how can we follow Christ's steps in baptism?"

Nothing is said in the New Testament in regard to the formula used by John, though it would seem evident that he used some formula, and it is most reasonable to conclude that he used that which was afterwards given to the disciples by the Saviour. John baptized vast numbers who were afterwards recognized as members of the church without being rebaptized, and certainly there would be no use of two formulas for one body.

By the Saviour submitting to John's baptism he both honored and sanctioned it, and hence set an example for all generations to come. This baptism was not under the Law, but under the Gospel, and therefore belonged to the Christian dispensation, though neither it nor any other mode is ever called Christian baptism in the Bible. While used by John it was called "John's baptism"—he being the first to practice it—and afterwards "one baptism" by Paul, Eph. 4: 5.

3. "Can we under John John 4: 1, 2, that Jesus baptized any one? If not, who baptized his disciples?"

From John 4: 2, we infer that Jesus baptized no one with his own hands. Anderson's translation of the New Testament has this verse rendered thus: "Though not Jesus himself, but his disciples immersed." This makes it plain that Christ himself did not baptize. Had he done so, it might have made some unhappy divisions among his followers; some of those receiving baptism from His hands might have claimed a degree of superiority over others. Here is a lesson for those who put so much trust in the administrator. In connection with this, ponder well the first clause of 1 Cor. 1: 17.

Two baptisms are plainly taught in the Scriptures. One of the water, and the other of the Spirit. One is the human part, and the other is the divine part. The baptism in water, being the human part, has been committed to earthen vessels to be performed; this much John could do—he could baptize in the water—but no human power is authorized to administer the Holy Ghost, or Spirit baptism; this is a divine work to be performed by divine hands, hence Christ, who is divine, administers none but Spirit baptism.

By a careful reading of John 3: 22-24, it will be seen that the disciples were baptized by John. "They came (to John, who " was baptizing in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there") and were baptized." Evidently some of them were baptized before this, hence John simply baptized, on this occasion, those who had not yet been baptized.

CONCERNING THE "CHILDREN AT WORK."

TWO months have elapsed since the Children at Work made its first appearance, and since then it has greeted the ears and eyes of many dear children. Though but a child, it has steadily grown in favor with many families throughout our brotherhood, and bids fair to grow to full stature in manhood, by the blessings of God and the help of brethren and sisters. Already many Sunday-schools have called it to their aid, and many are the words of love and encouragement in our behalf. Sorrows, troubles, vexations come thick and fast all through life, and were it not for words of comfort from dear brethren and sisters and the gentle voice of Jesus through the Holy Spirit, our hearts would fail and the pathway be strewn with continued sorrow.

O, if we could, in flaming letters, urge every parent to be just as much concerned for the minds and eternal welfare of their children as they are for houses, lands, worldly goods, the world would soon see the happy effect, angels in heaven would sing glorious hallelujahs, and God would bless us He alone can bless! Go into the book-stores in every town and city and behold the great pile of light, trashy, reading matter, set before the youth of our land to entice them on the way to ruin. Look at it, dear fathers and mothers—see in it the ruin of your darling boy, your gentle daughter, and then say, if you can, that there is no room, no need of work. Something must be done to counteract the growing evil, or our land and nation will suffer untold misery. Look at the "poor tramp," and see in him the effect of improper training. Homeless, unconcerned, strolling from place to place, he seeks his living as best he can. If you would have your child better, give him good reading matter. Put sound words into his heart, and they will make him a man, a Christian, a good citizen, in honor to God and man.

To bring our youth into closer sympathy with the whole doctrine of the Bible—to persuade them to love the endearing principles of true manhood and womanhood—to instill into their youthful hearts, love for parents, teachers, and all good men and women, the Children at Work was begun. It now remains with the lovers of these sentiments—the lovers of pure and undefiled religion to say whether our youth shall be abundantly supplied with such reading matter as may lead them in the path of virtue and religion, or whether by inaction thousands shall continue on in the way of destruction. From my youth I have had a strong sympathy and love for children, and especially the poor and misguided ones, and how to help them, how to make them better has been a matter of earnest thought and prayer. Donations and contributions for the free dissemination of the Children at Work, and other good and wholesome reading matter would be thankfully received and judiciously applied. Brethren and sisters traveling might carry with them a lot of papers and pamphlets and give them to the young in cities, in the cars, steamboats, and all public places. Until we arouse to the fact that evil is going about by telegraphic speed, and that we must work just as rapidly, we will leave the field to the enemy. Who then is ready to come and work with us for the good of the youth of this land? Who is ready to join hands with us to better the condition of the poor and unfortunate children of free America? Ah, free America! Fast art thou going into bondage of sin and selfishness. Who stands ready to hold up our arms in this vast and noble work? God help thousands and tens of thousands to send up the shout "I, I," and then will the coming generations call our nation blessed. Send for sample copies, and put them to work.

INFANT BAPTISM.

BY ABRAHAM H. CASSEL.

A REMINISCENCE OF THE PAST. INFANT BAPTISM DECARED UNSCRIPURAL BY CIVIL LAW.

ABOUT 1750 a man by the name of Samuel Heaton from Mass., settled at a place called Schoody, in New Jersey, where a son was born to him. He was anxious to have him christened by Mr. Sweesy, a Presbyterian minister, to which the wife objected, saying, "If you will show me a single text that warrants the christening of a child, I will take him to Mr. Sweesy myself." The husband offered several texts, but the wife would not admit that infant baptism was in either of them. Then the husband went to Mr. Sweesy, not doubting but a thing so old and so common as infant baptism must be in the Bible. But Mr. Sweesy owned that there was no text which directly proved the point, but that it was provable by deductions from many texts. This chagrined Mr. Heaton a good deal, as he had never doubted but that infant baptism was a Gospel ordinance; so he went home with a resolution to act the part of the more noble Benians, and searched the Scriptures for himself, and soon met with such convictions, that instead of getting his infant christened, he went to a Baptist church near Kingwood where he was immersed by Mr. Bonham. And so satisfied was he with what he had done that he soon began to preach up the baptism of faith and repentance with so much effect that it was not long till a little church of believers was organized in the vicinity where he lived, known as the Schoody Baptist church.

When the above transaction came to the knowledge of Robert Calver, a Rogerene Baptist, it induced him to publish an advertisement in the newspaper, offering a reward of twenty dollars to any one who would produce a single text to prove infant baptism. Mr. Samuel Harker, a minister, took him up, and carried a text to the advertiser. But Calver would not admit that infant baptism was in it. Harker contended it was, and so sued him for his promised reward. The case went to court, but it appears the court was of Mr. Calver's mind, for Harker lost the case and had the court charges to pay, besides losing his expected reward.

After that, Calver published another advertisement, offering a reward of forty dollars for such a text, but as Mr. Harker's attempts failed, none dared to take him up.

Will conclude by saying that infant baptism has been perhaps ten thousand times condemned by argument, but this is probably the first and only time that it was ever condemned in a court of civil law.

THE WRITTEN DEBATE.

OUR readers must not get out of patience waiting for the written debate to commence, as we are pushing the arrangements along as fast as possible. Quite a number of letters have passed between us and Mr. Ray, but full arrangements have not yet been completed. It sometimes takes a good deal of writing to get matters of this kind fully adjusted. We think one more letter from Mr. Ray will settle the question as to when the debate will commence, and all other things pertaining to it. We will announce the time just as soon as it is definitely determined.

SPIRITUALISM—WHAT IT DOES.

NOT a few are at a loss to know why so many Spiritualists commit suicide, and thus put themselves out of the way. Surely the doctrine is delusive and is proving itself detrimental to the good of society. The Daily News thus speaks of its sad effects in Chicago:

"The community is naturally startled to learn that Dr. Witheford, formerly a practicing Spiritualistic medium, and recently the center of considerable interest as an 'exposer of Spiritualism,' has committed suicide. This deed of self-destruction was done scarcely two weeks after, and only two blocks distant from, the event and scene of another suicide—that of a highly-esteemed and promising young man, an avowed Spiritualist, the son of a prominent business man, himself an active Spiritualist. Only a few months since one Pike, a professed Spiritualist, was sent to a lunatic asylum (instead of the gallows) for the murder of another Spiritualist, Mr. Jones, the proprietor and editor of a Spiritualists journal.

The question naturally comes,—Whence and why is this?—And what does it mean? And answers cannot be avoided. To deny that it has any connection with Spiritualism is unsatisfactory, for appearances at least are the other way.

Mr. Ray, of the Battle Flag, has been holding a public discussion with a Methodist minister, a synopsis of which, is now being published in the Flag. The Methodist takes Ray to task pretty lively on single immersion, and also shows that trine immersion was practiced much earlier. He says, "My opponent tells us that the three dips were not practiced by the Novations and the true church. He says, 'Outside of the Romish apostasy they did not practice true immersion.' Will he be so good as to prove that statement? Mosheim says, Vol. 1, p. 96, 'There was no difference in the point of doctrine between the Novations and other Christians.' So says Benedict and Reuter. Now, therefore, if Rome administered three dips, so did the Novations."

He continues: "Now it is clear from these ancient histories, that the only immersions practiced up to A. D. 375, was trine immersion, and that the single dip was born of Arianism."

BROTHER Sharp, Professor of the Ashland College, Ohio, reached Lanark last Saturday in good health and full of zeal for the success of the school in whose interest he is now traveling. He will likely remain in Northern Illinois a few weeks, during which time we wish him success in his work.

could purchase. Kindness is one of the blessed results of Christianity, and therefore belongs to it. The character of a person nearly always takes its form in the early part of life.

How pleasing it is when children are always kind and obedient to their parents; and brothers and sisters are kind and obliging to each other, and never allow cross words to come among them.

Then, parents, let me say to you, that you love a greater, and better, influence over your children, by being kind to each other, and speaking kind, mild words to your children, than by being cross and surly, and showing a scowling countenance.

Reader, look around and see some one who has always a kind word ready to fall from his lips, and a pleasant smile on his face for every one he may chance to meet, then follow his example, and you will be loved and respected by every one, and win the affections of One who will cling to you when all others shall forsake you.

MYSTERIES OF THE SCRIPTURES NO HINDRANCE TO GODLINESS.

BY J. W. SOUTHWOOD.

SOME claim that the Scripture is very mysterious; so much so that it is a very difficult matter to understand, even those parts that are essential to our salvation, and thus claim that mystery is a hindrance to godliness.

We are willing to admit that the Scripture contains some mysteries, but we are not willing to admit that those mysteries are a hindrance to godliness.

We might as well claim that mystery is a hindrance to farming, or the physical locomotion of our beings, for there is as much mystery connected with farming and our physical movements as there is with the Christian's duty.

But wherever we find a mystery we are very apt to find two or more plain and well-known facts; for example: The farmer plants a grain of wheat, which is one well-known fact; the grain produces a stalk and many grains, is another well-known fact, but the germination, growth, and production is a mystery, even if we are able to analyze the grain and stalk, and give names to the different parts, and apparently know all about it, yet the mystery is still there; but it is no hindrance to farming, as a knowledge of the mystery is not essential to farming.

Again: when we will to extend our arm, it is a plain fact that we have the will, and when our arm is extended it is another fact, but how we did it is a mystery, yet it is no hindrance to our physical motions. Just so with the Scripture; if it does contain some mysteries they are no hindrance to godliness or our salvation, but are evidences of some well-known facts; for example: "God created man of the dust of the earth," is a plain, Scriptural fact; man actually exists, is another fact; but how God could create man of the dust and preserve the race until the present, is a mystery, yet no hindrance to godliness. Again, we have two well-known Scriptural facts, one is, there is a God, the other is, He is triune. Now if there is some mystery how three are one, it is no hindrance to godliness or our salvation.

But a lamentable difficulty with many is, they are not willing to accept of the plain and literal meaning of the teachings of Christ and His Apostles, even if their faith directs them aright, they do not heed it, but form some opinion of their own, or accept the opinion of some popular man or creed, and follow it in preference to their faith, or even Christ's commands; and just so soon as they leave the true or literal meaning of the Scripture, and begin to spiritualize and theorize everything, and follow the opinions or commandments of men, that soon they find mysteries, and will continue to find them until they turn back and accept, for doctrine, Christ's commands, and not the commandments of men.

When men leave the literal interpretation of the Scripture, they prove things by their theories or their opinions, and then one man has as good a right to his opinion as another, and thus some one establishes his opinion under the appellation of a form of faith and doctrine, hence a church in which are many mysteries they solve only by their theories—a church void of the Scriptural characteristics which justly entitles it to be called the church of Jesus Christ.

If men will have full faith in Christ Jesus, and follow that faith in all His teachings, and not the commandments of men, they will find that many apparent mysteries will disappear.

Christ has made the essential part of the Scripture plain, as He desired that men of but little or no education might be saved as well as professors and men of great learning. But if man had to try to reach heaven through the deep, mental theories of some of the learned divines, there could be none saved, except a very few of the wise (?) divines, as the way would be so difficult that I am pretty sure a way-faring man, though he were not a fool, would ever therein.

On the other hand we find the theories of others trying to destroy the mysteries by teaching that it matters not what we believe just so we are sincere, that is all that is required; but when such theories are exposed to Gospel light, they are found to contain many mysteries; I mean things that will not harmonize with the Scripture. One is, How can a man be saved by his own way when Christ says, "I am the way." Another, How can a man enter into the kingdom of God without baptism when Christ says, "Except a man be born of the water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John 3: 5. And so may be found many things that will not harmonize with the plain teachings of Christ and His Apostles. But when we, with full faith, accept of Christ's commands, then we shall find that the apparent mysteries will so much disappear that they will be no hindrance to godliness or our eternal salvation.

COMPANY.

BY J. H. MANAHAN.

THE word at the head of this article has reference to the fellowship we have one with another. There are no less than three distinct classes of company. The first, we will denominate as had, the second, as better, the third, as best. Each has its own particular sphere—bounds over which it seldom passes.

The first has a natural inclination to do evil; while the second has more internal or self-knowledge of right and wrong, but not careful to select the best of company. The third class differs from the first and second as widely as night from day, because it practices nothing but wholesome and amiable virtues, and selects only such for associates as are pure and upright.

The natural inclination of men is, to seek society. There is nothing in all Christendom that can give us more pleasure, cultivate the mind more tastefully, or has a greater tendency to elevate us from a ridiculous to a sublime degree, than the society of those who are refined and holy. It knocks off the rough corners of speech—elevates our moral standing, and polishes the most uncouth and disorderly person into symmetry.

The world never grows weary of listening to those who are refined in speech and cultivated in thought, and backed up by the most refined feelings that ennoble our race. The shining lights of the world in all past ages, are those whose names have been intimately connected with the best interests of society, and whose reverence for morality and religion has excelled. There is nothing we need fear from such men; their deeds shine with as much lustre and beauty as the silver stars in the firmament of heaven.

There is great danger of keeping too much company, or of keeping bad company. Young man, stop and think of the yawning gulf into which many of your fellow-men have been hurled, who started out with as fair prospects as you in the voyage of life. Intemperance, pride, and bad company, these gnawing cankers go hand in hand, one is a firm supporter of the other, bearing us onward to an untimely end. Look abroad, cast your eyes over the list, and see how many there are of your acquaintances who started in life as the associates of bad company. They found the short, sure way to happiness, or prospered as well as those who sought only good company and refused all other. It is an easy matter to get into bad company, but a hard matter to rise above it. When you have chosen your station, you must keep it; you cannot go above it, nor beyond it. The good will not admit you into their society, for they have no relish for anything that savors of only that which is pure and upright; and justice demands that they should not, as it brings them into disrepute with those whose characters have been soiled by anything but robust, sanctified manhood. The advantage derived from keeping good company may be summed up as follows: First, it gives us "a good name which is rather to be chosen than silver and gold." Second, it is the badge of true nobility worn in all past ages, by men of every nationality.

ADVICE OF AN OLD LADY.

NOW, John, listen to me, for I am older than you, or I couldn't be mother. Never did you marry a young woman, John, before you have contrived to happen at the house where she lives, at least four or five times before breakfast. You should know how late she lies in bed in the morning. You should take notice whether the wash and the towel have robbed her of her evening bloom. You should take care to surprise her, so that you can see her morning dress, and observe how her hair looks when she is not expecting you. If possible you should be where you could hear the morning conversation between her and her mother. If she is ill-natured and snappish to her mother, so she will be to you, depend upon it. But if you find her up and dressed neatly in the morning, with the same countenance, the same smiles, the same neatly combed hair, the same ready and pleasant answer to her mother, which characterized her deportment in the evening, and particularly if she is lending a hand to get breakfast ready in good season, she is a prize, John, and the sooner you secure her to yourself the better.

SELECTED GEMS.

- Picking the grapes at the vineyard, Gathering nuts in the Fall, We little children are busy, Yet, there is work for all. —True zeal is a sweet, heavenly and gentle flame, which maketh us active for God, but always within the sphere of love. —Prayer is the pitcher that fetcheth water from the brook, wherewith to water the herbs. Break the pitcher and it will bring no water, and for want of water the garden will wither. —It is the water outside the ship that tosses it about, but it is the water that gets into the ship that sinks it. —Sin is a hard task-master and pays dreadful wages. "The wages of sin is death." —Confession of faults makes half amends. —True men make more opportunities than they find. —Pay supreme and undivided homage to goodness and truth. —An act of kindness to a shivering beggar child is a profession of religion. —Patience is the quiet endurance of a known evil or wrong, when it is out of our power to correct it. —If we had no faults ourselves, we should not have so much pleasure in discovering the faults of others. —To bring forward the bad actions of others to wash our own, is like washing ourselves with mud. —Neglect not the Book of God for the books of man. The latter may be read as the interpreter, but not as the substitute for the former. If you would grow in grace, search the Scriptures daily, and never take the Word of God in your hand without lifting your heart in prayer.

GLEANINGS.

From Edna Mills, Ind.—We went to West Lebanon, Ind., on the 15th of this month. Had three meetings and three more precious souls were added to the church by baptism. May the Lord bless them, and the little band of members to be as lights in the world, is my prayer. J. W. METZGER.

From Silver Lake, Ind.—I will try to tell you about the death of Nellie Ayers, a lad in his thirteenth year. The 30th of June he took his shot-gun and started off from home and went to spend the Sabbath as best he could. He played with some of his school-mates till about five o'clock, when he started home alone. Going along the woods he saw a squirrel and went in the woods. He set down his gun beside a log and then caught hold of the gun to pull it up to him. It caught on the log and shot him in the bowels. He lived till Monday night about 1 o'clock, when he left this world of sorrow and temptations to try the reality of a spirit world. It was a sad sight to see him suffer but he bore his pains patiently and was sensible till the last. Now my dear young readers, take warning from little Nellie, and don't go out hunting on the Sabbath day. You had better go to church and learn about Jesus. But little Nellie's parents did not teach him to go to church, nor did they go themselves. I think it is the duty of all parents to go to church, and take their children along; not to go themselves and let their children at home to get into bad habits. BETTIE LANDIS.

From Dunkirk, O.—There is continued joy in the camp, which elicits praise from the saints of God. Two more accessions to the church since my last report, making seventeen in all since the beginning of the current year. May the good work be revived and go on everywhere. S. T. BOSSERMAN.

From Peabody, Kansas.—Again our little congregation has been made glad by the uniting with us, of two more precious ones by baptism.—J. H. Longfellow and wife. Bro. Longfellow is 48 years old, was a member of the missionary Baptists for 27 years, and an ordained minister among them 21 years. He is a man of keen discrimination, sound judgment and a fine speaker. He leaves a host of warm friends behind, many of whom, it is thought, will soon follow him in uniting with us.

The weather here is fine; Spring grain all cut and nearly all stacked. Corn looks well. Fruit is abundant, and upon the whole we can be well pleased with our home in Kansas. Having lived here a little over ten months, we see nothing to find fault with. Those writing for information, will please enclose stamp. G. W. THOMAS.

From Cowley Co., Kan.—As many of your readers desire a brief description of this part of the country, we will endeavor to do so to the best of our ability. We have a healthy country, good limestone soil, extra water, and good for most all kind of produce. The climate is good. Peaches are so plenty, that we think they will hardly be worth anything. Our wheat harvest will commence the 20th of May. To those who intend making the West their home, I would say, now is the time to come. — Almost everything is cheap here now. Land is worth from $1.25 to $25.00. Some have inquired, how much money would be required to live there. That all depends upon circumstances, for we have known some with only from 150 to 500 dollars, that are now doing well. Timber is middling plenty and also good building rock. We have lived in the West five years, and like it better, especially in Kansas than any place we ever lived.

The small band of Brethren living here, numbers about 24, and we think, that this little church is in a healthy condition. Two speakers and two deacons are among us. Right here let me call the attention of the Brethren in the East, to the great need of preaching the Gospel in the West. Thousands are famishing for the bread of life, while we are idle. These things ought not so to be. Let us think of it, brethren! F. HOOVER.

From Crescent Hill, Mo.—We have not seen anything in the columns of your paper from this arm of the church. I will commence by saying that there are nine members here without a minister. If any ministering brethren intend emigrating to the West, we would be glad to have them come and locate with us. We have a good country here for all kinds of grain; water, timber and coal are plenty. Small grain is good, and good prospects for a large crop of peaches. Apples are rather scarce; improved farms are cheap. Before closing we cannot forbear to call the attention of the Brethren to the fact that much good could be done here, if the Gospel was preached in its original purity. Come over and help us. G. W. FANSLER.

From S. A. Sutter.—Your much esteemed paper makes its weekly visits with its sound lessons full of instruction. May the good Lord continue with you, so that you may hew close to the line. We are anxiously awaiting the written debate. The church is in love and union, battling against sin and trying to cause sinners to repent.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

Exercise Good for the Mind.

MOST people suppose literary men have an easy time of it, and, as a consequence, never work. Below we give an extract from a letter written by William Cullen Bryant of New York, just a few days before his death. He was a man of great literary attainments and died at the advanced age of eighty-four years. An account of his manner of life and diet may prove beneficial to others engaged in literary pursuits.

THE LLITER.

I rise early, at this time of the year about half-past five; in summer, half an hour, or even an hour earlier. Immediately, with a very little incumbrance of clothing, I begin a series of exercises, for the most part designed to expand the chest, and at the same time call into action all the muscles and articulations of the body.—These are performed with dumb-bells, the very lightest, covered with flannel, with a pole, a horizontal bar, and a light chair swung around my head. After a full hour, and sometimes more passed in this manner, I bathe from head to foot. When at my place in the country, I sometimes shorten my exercises in the chamber, and, going out, occupy myself for half an hour or more in some work which requires brisk exercise. After my bath, if breakfast be not ready, I sit down to my studies till I am called. My breakfast is a simple one, — hominy and milk, or in place of hominy, brown bread or oat-meal, or wheaten grits, and in the season, baked sweet apples. Buckwheat cakes I do not decline, nor any other article of vegetable food, but animal food I never take at breakfast. Tea and coffee I never touch at any time. Sometimes I take a cup of chocolate which has no narcotic effect and agrees with me very well. — At breakfast I often take fruit, either in its natural state, or freshly stewed.

After breakfast I occupy myself for a while with my studies, and then, when in town, I walk down to the office of the Evening Post, nearly three miles distant, and after about three hours, return, always walking, whatever be the weather or the state of the streets. In the country I am engaged in my literary tasks until a feeling of weariness drives me out into the open air, and I go upon my farm or into the garden and prune the fruit-trees, or perform some other work about them which they need, and then go back to my books. I do not often drive out, preferring to walk.

In the country I dine early, and it is only at that meal that I take either meat or fish, and of them but a moderate quantity, making my dinner mostly of vegetables. At the meal which is called tea, I take only a little bread and butter, with fruit, if it be on the table. In town, where I dine later, I make but two meals a day. Fruit makes a considerable part of my diet. — My drink is water, yet I sometimes, though rarely, take a glass of wine. I am a natural temperance man, finding myself rather confused than exhilarated by wine. I never meddle with tobacco, except to quarrel with its use.

Roads in Palestine.

ONE of the most unexpected things a thorough explorer finds in both Western and Eastern Palestine, is the number and high state of preservation of roads built during the Roman era. They were laid out on all main routes and were constructed so perfectly that in many sections they endure to-day, as well as if finished not long ago. Nor do they exhibit a better than Oriental art alone, for in the matter of engineering they are high examples of scientific success. The country of Palestine was one of the most difficult to carry a system of roadways over, and yet its obstacles were surmounted with the least possible expenditure of labor. Every route was curbed on each side by lines of stones projecting from one to two feet above the surface of the soil; between these boundaries, the avenue was paved; streams were crossed by bridges, whose style remains preserved alone in those of Italy to the present hour, — as, for example those of Venice; valleys were traversed by viaducts; and causeways carried the line up or down mountain-sides, either by piers of masonry or in channels sufficiently wide cut out of living rock. Often zig-zags and steps were resorted to in climbing steep ascents. Whenever the street passed over solid rock, the wear of chariot wheels in the course of time, made ruts, which remain to this day as plain and deep as when the last car passed over, and which will remain forever as clear and permanent there.

When Palestine shall be reopened by Christian civilization, these very Roman roads will be followed by modern routes, and many sections will scarcely require repair for commodious and easy travel.

Sensible Words about Dress.

ARBA Gould Woolson, who has said numerous good things about healthful dress, is the author of the following excellent paragraphs:—

"Health would say, 'If your dress is to be tight, let it be tight anywhere but over the region between the upper, fastened ribs and the hips. If its weight is to be great, let it hang from the solid frame-work of the shoulders, not from this sensitive central region where there is nothing to support it. If any part is to be overheated, let it be the extremities, and not this. For here lie the vital organs whose unimpeded action is essential to life,—the lungs, the heart the liver, and the stomach. That they may have the fullest opportunity to expand and move, they are covered only with loose flesh and a few movable bones."

"But custom says, 'Let your dress be tight nowhere but over this region between the ribs and the hips. Loosen your clothing over the bone-encased shoulders; from your hips to your feet having wide-floating draperies; but bind and pinch and tighten over the lower air-cells of the lungs, over that throbbing heart, the active liver, and the expanding stomach. Fortunately there is nothing there, by way of bones, to prevent you from squeezing yourself all you wish; and only by squeezing yourself there, can you be made beautiful in my eyes."

Opposing the Bible.

A FRIEND at Rome writes, that the high church dignitaries of Spain have made such representations to the Pope respecting the wide distribution of the Bible in the country, especially among the poorer classes, that a decree has been issued prohibiting, under pain of excommunication, any person from affording food or shelter to any Protestant missionary in Spain. The greater excommunication is also decreed against any Protestant religious publication, whether for sale or otherwise. These decrees, which are ordered to be read in every parish church in Spain, are accompanied by an autograph letter from the Pope to King Alfonso, urging him, for the sake of the great Catholic country of which he is the ruler, to use all his efforts to bring the civil power to bear against the missionaries for their expulsion and confiscation of their establishments throughout the country.—Christian Cynosure.

A Lee (Mass.) electrician was experimenting with a telephone the other night, talking through 50 miles of wire, when he was surprised to hear laughter and festive sounds from many different voices, and concluded there must be a jolly room full at the other end. But his surprise was greatly increased when he learned that his fellow operator had been entirely alone during all of their conversation.—The most reasonable explanation of the phenomena is that the wire must have gone near some hall where a large and jovial party were assembled, and transmitted the sounds of their merriment to the sensitive telephone.

A little village in the neighborhood of Draguignan France, has lately been the scene of a remarkable subsidence, which has attracted the curious from all directions. An elliptical tract of ground, containing over ten thousand square feet, sank gradually one day, accompanied by loud noises, until it left an orifice of over one hundred feet in depth with water at the bottom. Numerous trees and vines disappeared completely in the depth of the new lake. A similar depression on a smaller scale occurred in the same vicinity a century ago, and both the phenomena are attributed to subterranean streams.—Nature.

Gen. Howard attacked the Indians at Beasley's Mill, Oregon. The hostiles were about 400 strong. Howard repulsed them three times and captured from 400 to 500 head of stock together with provisions and ammunition. Fifteen were wounded. Two mortally. The war Department has received a dispatch from Gen. McDowell confirming this account of Gen. Howard's fight with the Indians.

It is hard to believe, but it is nevertheless a fact, that the number of suicides in this country published in the newspapers during the year ending July 15, was nearly 2,000, and the number of murders during the same period exceeded 1,500. Most of the suicides are attributed to mental alienation caused by financial or domestic troubles, and most of the murders are attributed to strong drink and jealousy.

A party of tourists on Mt. Washington, a few days since, found the wind blowing eighty-four miles an hour, and a heavy snow storm in progress. One had his ears frozen, and another two fingers frost-bitten; while at the foot of the mountain the weather was the warmest of the year so far.

A telegram from Sydney, New South Wales, dated July 11, states that two tribes of natives have risen against the government on the island of New Caledonia and massacred 155 whites, including women and children. They have also captured two military stations.

MARY ANOINTETH THE LORD.

THE Saviour lodged at Bethany,
And soon did some prepare,
A supper; at which Martha served,
And Lazarus was there,
And their good sister strove
To show her tender, fervent love.

She came behind our blessed Lord,
And at His feet did stand;
A box with costly ointment filled,
She held within her hand.
The box she broke, the ointment poured,
E'en to the feet of her dear Lord.

She wiped those feet with her long hair,
She kissed them in her love;
The fragrance of the ointment spread
Through all the air above;
But wicked Judas running said,
"Why was this waste of ointment made?"

Pretending that he wished it had
Upon the poor been spent;
But Jesus kindly looked on her,
He knew her heart's intent:
The poor ye have always with you,
And when ye will, my kindness show.

But I am leaving you, this deed
Of love hath now been wrought,
Preparing for my burial day:
Where'er this Gospel's light
Throughout the world, there shall be Made known that she hath done to me.

WHAT IT IS TO LIVE FOR GOD.

BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

LET the credulous laugh to scorn at the power of faith and purity of religion, let the giddy and unthinking make a jest of its ordinances, let them suppose a life of righteousness, is a life of self-sacrifice,—they know nothing of the quiet, tranquil peace that pervades the bosom of the followers of Jesus. They have firm faith in the divine hand that is directing their way; they stand to the post of duty, no matter what may arise in this changeable life, fearless in time of danger, unmoved by the changing multitude; keeping themselves pure and non-conformed to the world. Faithful and loyal in their love to God amid all the turmoil and strife of this passing existence, they stand erect in innocency supported by truth, with hearts full of joy that they are counted worthy to suffer for the truth's sake. If earthly conflicts and storms of passion arise, they only gain new strength and beauty, and their faith becomes more firmly rooted, knowing the great and powerful Being that has given them strength to surmount past difficulties, is just as able to carry them through all that may arise in the future.

They can mingle with men in all the walks of life, and go on errands of mercy and love and keep themselves unspotted from this wicked world. They can always be at the post of duty, showing the faithless and unbelieving that there is something to trust and hope for: when every earthly tie is severed; when every earthly hope is blasted. The wicked may sneer at them when surrounded by affluence and good health, but the worst men will rejoice to see them coming in the dark hour of affliction, when the eye becomes dimmed with the near approach of death. The life of the righteous is full of joy and tranquil peace. They are drawn to every duty by love. They find in self-denial a pleasure. Even in this world of wickedness and sorrow, they find much to admire and love. They are surrounded by their Father's works. They delight in the beauties and glories of creation, knowing they were placed here for their pleasure, and feeling it would be ingratitude, not to accept all these gifts with true and thankful hearts. We imagine that there are many things necessary to make us happy here, but the things most needed, to make this earth a pleasant dwelling-place for man, is righteousness.

Let every one make it his great aim to gain the righteousness of Jesus Christ, and he need not be troubled about anything else. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and the rest will be added unto you." God has said, he will withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly. If we train our children to virtue and true piety, we need have no fear for their success in life. We should always keep before them, that the path of duty is the path of pleasure, and no true happiness can come from following the wicked. If these principles were strongly instilled into the minds of our children, parents would seldom be disappointed in their offspring, and instead of bringing sorrow and disgrace upon their parents in their old age, they would be a crown of glory in their declining years.

We should all bear constantly in mind, that to be wicked, is to be miserable and fearful. The wicked flee when no man pursues, but to be righteous, is to be strong and happy, fearless and confiding, loving and tender, compassionate and sympathizing. The righteous has nothing to fear so long as he is loyal and faithful, he knows whom he serves. He knows his promises are sure and steadfast, and that he has all power in heaven and on earth, and though the earth may totter in its orbit, the hills and valleys may all come together, the sun may be darkened, the moon refuse to shine, all nature may become a mixture of confusion,—yet will the all-powerful Lord of glory preserve his own. The Creator of the universe has sufficient wisdom and power to arrange everything to suit his purpose, and his true servants are the especial objects of his care and he will never forget or forsake them.

What a sacrifice the man makes, who lives for this world alone. He loses all of the true joys of life here, and all prospect of life beyond the tomb. Why will they neglect a matter of so much importance for a few fleeting pleasures? All promises of reward are to the faithful, and dreadful punishment are threatened to the wicked and disobedient. When we look at ourselves standing constantly on the very brink of eternity, can it be that we will still hold back and live for this world alone? While righteousness is offered on such easy terms, let us at once determine, if we have never tried to live righteously, to begin now, this very moment; for to-morrow is not ours. Ere another day comes we may be lying inanimate, all chance of accepting this glorious gift is gone. Yes, I say let us begin now, and though it be the eleventh hour, we will be accepted and receive our reward. And if some of us have made the start, and are not as faithful in every duty as we should be, let us determine now, that we will hereafter come right up to every duty, neglecting none, no matter how small it is: the small duties are the duties that require the most attention. There are few of us that aim at a righteous life, that would be guilty of a sin of any magnitude at first; but if we begin to neglect some matters that we think are small in themselves, we will soon forget that they are sins at all, and bigger ones will seem small.

Now let us begin to improve our time and do all we can; for our time cannot be long at best, and it may be shorter than any of us think, and would it not be terrible at the last day, though we come pleading our works of righteousness, Can you imagine how you would feel at hearing the words, "Depart from me, I never knew you." Let us be more faithful. Let us live for God, and the world can pass along as it always has, it is moved by the mighty power of God. He created us and placed us here to serve him, and to enslave ourselves with worldly follies, but serve and obey him, and if we do not fill the purpose we were created for, life will be a failure, and eternity lost.

ARE WE SAVED BY FAITH, BAPTISM, WORKS, OR GRACE?

BY EDMA WATSON.

"For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." Eph. 2: 8, 9.
"Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." James 2: 17, 20, 26.

PETER, referring to Noah and the ark, in which eight souls were saved, says, "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." 1: Peter 3: 21. In the above quotations, Paul says, "That we are saved by grace through faith, not by works," James says, "That we are saved by works, and not by faith;" and Peter declares, "That we are saved by baptism." Here we have an apparent contradiction existing between the apostles, yet we shall soon see upon a clear investigation, that they are in complete harmony, one with the other. It takes a union of the three viz. faith, repentance and baptism, to save us. If any of the three are wanting we are lost, and the requirements of the plan of salvation have not been complied with.

1. Faith must precede either of the other two essentials of salvation; without we can do nothing, it underlies the very groundwork of God's kingdom, and the entire plan of salvation; being the strong pillar upon which Christian character is built. Paul says, in Rom. 1: 17, "For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith; as it is written, the just shall live by faith." Again Jesus says, in Mark 16: 16, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned;" herein we plainly see, that we must first have faith to believe, and then will our works follow with baptism, harmonizing with Paul, James, and Peter; moreover can any one have true faith unless works accompany it? Most assuredly not; to be more emphatic and apparently contradictory, faith without works is no faith, for works "lead unto repentance," follow and go with faith as surely as night follows day, and light goes with the sun. The faith that Paul means is inseparably linked with good works.

Abraham showed his faith by his works, and his works were the natural outgrowth of his faith; when he was commanded, "To go out into a place which he should afterwards receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out knowing whither he went." Had Abraham said, "Lord, I have faith," and yet refuse to obey, would he have received an inheritance? "Without faith it is impossible to please God, for he that cometh to God, must believe that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. 11: 6. But mere faith is not sufficient. Hear James 2: 19, "Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well; the devils believe and tremble." Yes, whosoever possesses genuine faith, will also follow the example of Him, in whom he has faith, and by whom life eternal is given to them that truly believe. Paul was commanded by the Lord Jesus "to arise and go into the city and it should be told him what he must do, whereupon he showed his faith by his works in obeying his Lord's commands and was baptized, washing away his sins." Acts

22: 16, the remission of whose sins only took place after he acted upon his faith, i. e., showed forth works. Christ says, "I am the door; by me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." John 10: 9. He is our example by which we must come into the church, and being the door all must go through that door, and enter in by that door; for he saith, "I am the way, the truth and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." John 14: 6. Again, Paul says, in Rom. 2: 13, "For not the hearers of the word are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified." Ephesians 2: 10, he further declares the following: "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them;" and touching on baptism he gives expression to the following: "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." Col. 2: 12.

How perfectly Paul here agrees with Peter, who says, "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth now save us." And again, how they accord with James, who declares in his epistle 2: 24, "Ye then know how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." Noah, to whom Peter refers in regard to baptism, exhibits his works in the building of the ark, and was saved by his works, without which he would have utterly perished. In the very act of baptism, we vitalize faith and show forth our works.

Then in conclusion to sum up, we are saved by grace through faith; (that is a living and working faith) and that not of ourselves; it is the gift of God; "Not of works, but any man should boast"—Paul. "You see then that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." James. And finally Peter, "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us," Faith, repentance and baptism, bring us into the church and of course works also after which works must continue and do in all, who have a living and true faith. "A tree is known by its fruits." But after we have observed all the above conditions of salvation, faith, repentance, baptism and even works, then are we only saved by the grace of God, for in us dwelleth no good thing, and do not merit by our own works, his gracious favor.

A SCENE FROM LIFE.

A YOUNG man entered the bar-room of a village tavern, and called for a drink. "No," said the landlord; "you have had delicious tremens once, and I cannot sell you any more." He stepped aside to make room for a couple of young men who had just entered, and the landlord waited upon them very politely. The other had stood by silently and sullen, and when they finished, he walked up to the landlord, and thus addressed him: "Six years ago, at this age, I stood where those young men are now—I was a man with fair prospects. Now, at the age of twenty-eight, I am a wretch, body and mind. You led me to drink. In this room I formed the habit that has been my ruin. Now sell me a few glasses more, and your work will be done. I shall soon be out of the way; there is no hope for me. But they can be saved. Do not sell it to them. Sell it to me and let me die, and the world will be rid of me; but for heaven's sake sell no more to them!" The landlord listened, pale and trembling. Setting down his decanter, he exclaimed, "God help me, this is the last drop I will ever sell to any one!" And he kept his word.

Can we ever cease to remember Jesus, who gave himself for us? Surely not, when he died to save us if we be the chief of sinners.—E. R. Stebbins.

HOME AND FRIENDS.

Altho' there's a power to make each hour
As sweet as heaven designed it,
Nor need we roam to bring it home,
Though few there be that find it,
We seek too high for things close by,
And lo!—what nature found us;
For life hath here no friends so dear
As home and friends around us.

We oft destroy the present joy—
For future hopes, and praise them,
While flowers as sweet, bloom at our feet,
If we'd but stop, to raise them;
For things afar, still sweeter are,
When youth's bright spell hath bound us,
But soon we're taught the earth hath naught
Like home and friends around us.

The friends that speed in time of need,
When hope's last need is shaken,
Sustain us still that, let come what will,
We are not quite forsaken.
Though all were bright, if but the light
From friendship's altar crowned us;
'T would prove the bliss of earth was this;
Our home and friends around us.

CONFESSION OF THE MURDER
OF WILLIAM MORGAN.

HE requested that one of us would write a letter to his wife, making her acquainted with the facts concerning his death, in order that her mind might be relieved from the horrors of uncertainty. As we saw no harm in making this promise, which, of course, we had no idea of keeping, we pledged ourselves to comply with his request, and assured him that his family should not be permitted to suffer from poverty. We then told him that we would leave him alone for half an hour, at the end of which time we should expect to find him prepared to meet his inevitable fate. He merely bowed by way of reply.

Retiring from the room, we stationed ourselves near the door, and endeavored to prevent reflection by conversation carried on in a low tone. But it was in vain, every effort was a failure; and at last, a gloomy silence fell over us, which none ventured to disturb. How Morgan passed his time, I cannot say. Every thing was quiet as the tomb within. As he was chained and handcuffed, he could not move without our hearing him, and not the faintest sound fell upon our ears, which were so painfully open to every thing, that I verily believe the falling of a leaf in our midst would have caused us to start with terror. Most probably he indulged in that rapid reflection which is always caused by the certainty of the fast approach of death; and his whole life, with its mingled pictures of good and ill, passed before his fervid vision. Perhaps he prayed, not only for himself, but for his murderers. But I cannot dwell upon the subject, which, even at this distance of time, appalls the memory.

The time having expired, we entered the magazine, and found Morgan ready to receive us. He made no remonstrance, nor offered any resistance, his demeanor and acts being in all respects those of a man who has nerved himself boldly to meet a certain doom. We bound his hands behind him, and placed a gag in his mouth. One of our number marched a few yards in advance, and was followed by myself and the other associate, between whom walked Morgan. We each had hold of one of his arms, above the elbow. A short time brought us to where the boat had been placed, and we all entered it, Morgan being placed in the bow, with myself alongside of him. My comrades took the oars, and the boat was rapidly forced out into the river. The night was pitch dark, and we could scarcely see a yard before us, and therefore was the time admirably adapted to our hellish purpose. Having arrived at a place sufficiently removed from the land, the rowers ceased from their labors, and my particular duty now commenced. In the bottom of the boat lay a number of heavy weights, all tied together by a strong cord, that had been carried through the ring of each weight, so that they formed one mass. From the center of the cord by which they were united, proceeded another cord, of equal strength, and several yards in length. This cord I took in my hand, and fastened it around the body of Morgan, just above his hips, using all my skill to make it fast, so that it would hold. Then, in a whisper, I bade the unhappy man to stand up, and after a momentary hesitation, he complied with my order. He stood close to the head of the boat, and there was just length enough of rope from his person to the weights to prevent any strain, while he was standing. I then requested one of my associates to assist me in lifting the weights from the bottom to the side of the boat, while the other stood by from the stern. This was done, and, as Morgan was standing with his back toward me, and apparently looking into the water, I approached him, and gave him a strong push with both my hands, which were placed in the middle of his back. He fell forward, carrying the weights with him, and the waters closed over the mass. We remained quiet for the space of two or three minutes, when my companions, without saying a word, resumed their places, and rowed the boat to the place from which they had taken it. We then jumped ashore, and exchanging pressures of the hand, separated without a word.

I made my way home with all dispatch, trembling at every sound, and dreading at each moment that I should meet some one who might recognize me, notwithstanding the blackness of darkness in which the earth was enshrouded. So great were my fears for my personal safety, that I did not reflect on the villainy in which I had been engaged, by which a fellow-creature had been deprived of life, and a family bereft of its protector. It was not until I had managed to reach my bedroom without falling in with any one, that reflection came; and from that hour must I date the commencement of those torments which have never since left me. I threw myself on my bed, but sleep would not visit me. I was in a state of nervous excitement, and began to experience the gnawings of the worm that never dies, and to feel the intensity of the fire that is never quenched. At the earliest dawn I arose, and went out, and wandered forth among the forests, tortured by remorse, and cursing the folly that had led me to imbrue my hands in Morgan's blood. For some days I continued in the vicinity, but at last I determined to go into the States, for the purpose of getting away from the scene of my crime. I proceeded to that part of New York in which the antimasonic excitement originated, and was an apparently calm spectator of the evils that grew out of the intense and just indignation of a people stirred to their inmost souls by the occurrence of a mysterious crime, that had baffled the law, and whose perpetrators seemed to be as much above the reach of ordinary human power as were the members of the once terrible Secret Tribunal of Germany. I remained there for a considerable length of time, as if fascinated; and I not only attended antimasonic meetings, but likewise many of the trials that grew out of the Morgan outrage.

The excited state of the public mind was in unison with my own feelings, which could not settle down into a condition of calmness. No man in that part of the world was acquainted with the part I had played in the murder of Morgan, for it may be easily believed that I would not take any one into my confidence; and of those who had been concerned in the affair with me, either in consultation or action, none resided near to my then place of abode. Of my fellow-executioners, both had absented themselves from their homes within a very short space of time after that fatal night; nor have I any reason for supposing that either of them ever communicated the fact of my having been united with them in the deed of murder, to third parties. If it should be asked why I did not unburthen my mind to brother masons, my reply is, that, in the first place, I thought I had no right to render them accessories to my crime, as by such confidence they would in a certain sense become; and when I saw masons, who for a long time had breast the storm, leaving and undermining the order, either from conscientious or interested motives, it occurred to me that I should endanger my life by taking any one into my confidence. Thus being compelled to retain the dread secret in my bosom, my existence became to the last degree miserable, and my health so declined that I began to fear I should soon be called upon to render an account to a greater power than that of any earthly tribunal, and from whose scrutiny no secret could be concealed. Though my life was a burden, I did not the less dread death, for I could not bring my mind to the belief that with the grave there comes annihilation and ceases accountability. I shunned society and passed all the hours that were at my command in solitude, change having come over my thoughts; and as at first I sought all public places, and crowds were my delight, now the forest was better to me than the street, and the presence of men my abhorrence. It seemed to me as if my secret were known to all men, and that for the reasons to them good, they allowed of the postponement of my certain punishment. I could not walk erect, nor obtain rest, nor find pleasure in any of those pursuits in which the innocent pass their hours of leisure; and I might have been addressed in the words of the greatest of poets,— —what is't that takes from thee

Thy comfort, pleasure, and thy golden sleep?
Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth
And start so often when thou sit'st alone?
Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheek?
O! what portents are these?"

After remaining in Western New York between two and three years, it occurred to me that change of scene might tend to relieve my mind from the weight that oppressed it, I proceeded to one of the new territories, where I resided for a considerable length of time, seeking refuge from thought and reflection in the hazards and discomforts of a frontier life. But it was all of no avail. Go where I would, or do what I would, it was impossible for me to throw off the consciousness of crime. If the mark of Cain was not upon me, the curse of the first murderer was on my soul. The blood stain was on my hands, and could not be washed out. The avenger of blood seemed ever on my track. The remonstrances of my victim fell upon my ear, at all times and in every place. I heard them in the calm and amid the storm—they whispered to me among the grass of the prairies and through the leaves of the forest. Neither change of place nor pursuit brought me consolation or rest. It mattered not whether I was among crowds of men, or in the silence of some wood that never before had been penetrated by civilized man; the voice of the avenger was ever sounding in my ear, and giving me to know the truth of the declaration, that mischief shall hunt the violent man!

I wandered about the North-west for many years. Had fortune been my object, I should have succeeded in obtaining it, more than one opportunity for great worldly advancement having been placed within my reach, as if to tantalize me with the sight of things that afford to other men so much pleasure, but which could not be otherwise than worthless in my jaundiced vision. I could not abide long in one place, but felt condemned to wander up and down on the face of the earth, a restless spirit, to whom is denied the enjoyment of all that men hold dear. There have been periods when I have thought of suicide, as the best means of escaping from myself; but from self-murder I have been impelled by that fear of something after death which "doth make cowards of us all." But it is impossible for any human power forever to continue the suffering that it has fallen to my lot to experience; and now many years after the perpetration of the crime that destroyed my peace, far from the land of my birth among strangers, and at the very outpost of civilization, I find death enveloping me in his cold embrace. Though I cannot otherwise than shiver at his touch, and dread what must follow from his triumph over me, my end will be to myself a release.

I have made this confession in the hope that good may flow from it, and to relieve my mind from a burden under which it has long been depressed. I have endeavored to be plain and simple in my narrative, and have not sought to harrow up the imagination of the reader. If I have not introduced the names of others into my account of an event that once was of consequence enough to excite a nation, it is because I have not wished to create prejudice against those who were connected with my associates, but who were not associated with their criminal proceedings. Whether my story will have any effect on the public mind, I know not; nor do I care. Now that years have elapsed since the abduction and murder of Morgan, people are capable of forming a righteous judgment respecting that great crime, and they no longer blindly involve the innocent in the condemnation with the guilty.

I have done. Reader, have charity on me, and remember that you have not been tempted as I was. Criminal as I am, I am also a heart-stricken penitent, and have been made to exist, as it were, on a gibbet of our own erection.

SYMPATHY OF JESUS.

BY S. T. BOSSEMAN.

"Jesus wept." John 11: 35.

THE human heart solicits sympathy. When troubles arise and the trials are great, 'tis then we are more solicitous for aid from others. When poverty-stricken or in other adverse circumstances, when sickness or perchance death enters the threshold and seizes its victim and lays its visage low, it is then that true sympathy is an aliment to the heart and soul, cheering and strengthening as food is to the body. We cannot, there-foes, live to ourselves; we need mutual aid and if we do not get the proper aid and sympathy, we droop and die. To have a proper sympathy, and to exhibit it, therefore, in its proper sphere towards one another, this feeling must be mutual. The affections must agree in adversity as well as in prosperity. In the prosperity of our neighbors or friends, we rejoice with them, and by this, they are prompted to greater achievements, and in adversity, each should feel his brother's care, and by this union of feeling and willingness to share his sorrow, the burden is made lighter. The sunshine of joy will shine in their sorrowful hearts and penetrate their dark vision and lighten their countenance with beams of love.

When friends are removed by death, what sorrow in the hearts of the survivors. When a fond father, a kind mother, a dear brother or a loving sister is removed from our tender embrace, how the heart yearns for sympathy. The friends are called in, the minister comes with a heart full of affection, we meet him at the door and as we enter the threshold together, how we recline upon his arm as he passes from one to the other of the household to mingle his sorrow with our sorrow. The neighbors arrive and we pass to the church to hear tender and consoling words from our beloved minister as he talks to us of heaven, and the blest abode of the deceased, and cites us to our duty to prepare to follow. How our hearts swell with gratitude, with the cheering thought that they are moved with feelings of sympathy to appease our sorrow and calm our troubled brows. Sympathy from our dear friends affords us joy and comfort. But how will this compare with the sympathy of Jesus? What joy to have such a friend. How beautiful the lines of Elder H. Bonnar:

"What a friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear."

How the hearts of the two sisters must have died within them when their brother took sick and medical skill was baffled and they saw that he must die. They loved him with such tenderness and affection as sisters only can have, and knowing the all-healing power there was in their blessed Master, they sent for him saying, "Lord behold, he whom thou lovest is sick." Our brother is sick and medical aid has failed, oh come and speak the word, and our brother shall live! But the Master lingered a few days until the dear brother died. Oh! what sorrow in Mary's heart. Dear Martha is grief-stricken, they stand arm in arm, their hearts beating in unison with each other. How shall we support ourselves, our brother is gone and our delicate natures forbid hard labor, what shall we do? How they enlisted sympathy from others. Many of the Jews came to comfort them concerning their brother. They told them perhaps that he would rise again in the resurrection at the last day, and that, in their minds, was the first view they would have of him. But their Lord appears, he approaches the scene with a heart full of sympathy, he comforts them. Mary appears almost heart-broken, and says, "Lord if thou hadst been here my brother had not died." Jesus groans in the spirit, "where have ye laid him." Weeping as they pass to the grave, the sisters point out the last resting-place of their brother. The mouth of the cave was closed with a stone. Doubting, they looked at Jesus as he commanded them to take the stone away. But in order to see the "glory of God" they removed the stone, and their Master so willing to do good, cries with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth." He appears, and Jesus full of sympathy towards him, commands, "loose him and let him go." What joy to those sisters to see their brother that was dead, alive and at liberty again. The sympathy and power of Jesus in the raising of Lazarus and setting him at liberty again, is but exemplifying his sympathy and power towards the sinners, who are dead in trespasses and sins. And now with all the power of his Divinity and feelings of humanity, his heart yearns with tenderness towards fallen humanity. And unlike the law which always said, "go" he with a voice of angelic sweetness, whispers, "come," "come to me, all that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

Then why not come. If he who was upon earth exhibiting such sympathy, and tenderness, ascended up to heaven, carrying with him his feelings of humanity to his intercessory seat and there advocating before the Father in our behalf; will you sinner not listen to his voice?

Let me appeal to those laboring in the cause of my Master, will you show that earnestness in the salvation of the sinner, as did those two sisters? Will you roll the stone away from the sinner's heart? Will you roll the stone of rebellion; the stone of the pride of life and the lust of the eye; the stone of self-will and self-righteousness from the sinner's heart? Will you as did they, position the Lord in their behalf that they might be called forth unto righteousness? May heaven assist you so to do. God is desirous of saving the whole human family. Jesus my Master has died for them and calls for them. The angels in heaven are interested in their salvation and are watching our movements, and they are sympathetic with us; their feelings are our feelings, they bear a union of hearts with us in the common cause of humanity. They weep with us in our disappointments and rejoice in our success, and when we are instrumental in turning sinners to God, they shout with joy the glorious news to their Father upon the throne, that sinners are coming home to heaven. Let us all awake to greater energy in the cause of Christ.

LOVE.

BY JOHN BOBSEY.

"Greater love hath no man this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." John 15: 13.
NO man can make a greater sacrifice for his best and dearest friend, and I think there are but very few in the world, but what would shrink from duty, if called upon to lay down their life to redeem even the best friend, much less for an enemy. If this be the case, we clearly see the contrast between a man's love, who would lay down his life for his friends, but can do no more. But Christ laid down his life not only for his friends, but for his enemies also. No wonder John said, "Behold what manner of love the Father bestows upon us, that we shall be called the sons of God." 1 John 3: 1.

God's love is a peculiar love from ours, a greater love than any man can exhibit. I ask you kind reader, where is a father or mother who had an only son, if they were called upon to give him for a sacrifice to redeem a man that committed a crime, and made himself guilty of death? Could any of us consent that our son should die, to save the guilty one from his crime, if he was our best friend, and we would be sure that the death of our son would save him, I ask you again, would you do it? I say not, but every one would say, let the sinner die for his crime, I will keep my innocent, only beloved son with me in my bosom. O what a contrast between the love of our heavenly Father and an earthly father. While we see the earthly father's love fail him to give up his son to save his friends, our heavenly father withheld not his only Son, but gave him to die for the sinner, to have the sinner reconciled unto himself, by the death of his Son, and that while we were enemies. Rom. 5: 10.

I have now contrasted the love of the Father; I will next ask, where is a son of an earthly father to be found, among all the sons on earth, who would consent to die to save the criminal from death, if his father would be willing and say, I give my son to die for you, to have you redeemed, yea, have you go free. Would the son say to the father, "Father, thy will be done?" I am willing to drink the bitter cup of death. I am willing to become a curse and offer up my life in the most painful and shameful way the wickedness of men can heap upon me. I hear it all, I die that the sinner may live." Ask yourselves ye sons, what would your answer be? Ah, you would all say, "Father I am not willing to suffer so much, to be so abused, and to be mocked, smitten and spit upon, and have gall put in my mouth, and in my great thirst and pain, nothing but vinegar to drink, when I am about to die. Father, I will not do it; I do not want you to give my life to save a sinner, and much less will I die for an enemy, to have him reconciled unto you." But Christ the Son of our heavenly Father, was willing to do all the above, for the sinner that he might live, you that he may be reconciled to the Father, and all this Christ did by his death for us, while we were enemies.

Now let every one that reads this epistle, picture before his own mind, what manner of love it was that both the Father and Son bestowed upon us. When we look at the contrast I have drawn, and set before the reader, we can all grasp and appreciate, at least some of the greatness and the peculiarities of the love of God, above that of man. Oh the heights and depths of that love, who can fathom it?

Sinner, did you ever stop and think what God has done for you, how he loved you, and with what price he redeemed you. Do you know and realize that you are not your own, but that you are bought with a price, and have you ever thought that it was the sin of the world that brought all this bondage of corruption about? If not, O pause for a moment and look at the picture of the love of God set before you, in this article, and stop sinning. For it was sin that cursed all these sufferings and death in Christ your Redeemer, and its your sins and your iniquities that separate between you and your God.

But to my brethren and sisters I say, thank God that he has reconciled us unto himself by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. Let all live the life of Jesus, is my prayer.

FRIENDSHIP.

BY M. HADY.

ALTHOUGH it may be one of our chief desires here in this world, and we may work for it with all our zeal, yet true friendship is hardly ever realized here in this treacherous world. From experience it can be said, that true friendship is the sweetest tie which entwines human beings. In troubles it is like the calming breeze on the ocean waves, it is that which gives the troubled soul a taste of heavenly bliss.

The friend who consoles us in trouble, is never forgotten. He is the physician who allays the pain of sickness. But then how few of these friends we will find in this world, when all is well, will be so in reality. Bitter experience of the past tells us a very small number. Some have seen times, when a hundred foes would have been laughed at, could they only have had the friendship of a few, in whom to have full confidence, but oh, the bitter thought realized. Those few left, and they were given over entirely to the power of enemies. Often they experienced, that the very man or woman, brother or sister, in whom the deepest confidence was placed, would be the first traitor, so that the bitter expression would force itself: "Deceived again." Members professing Christianity should be free from all deception, who should work together for the common good; who in prosperity seem to be friends, let Satan enter the camp, and they will show their treacherous dispositions, where there should be love and union; prejudice and hatred will show itself in every form. Instead of working for the good of others, we will work for their destruction.

Paul would say, "If a man say, he loves God, and hates his brother he is a liar," yet this does not concern us. We claim to love our brethren, yet we can work against them as their bitterest enemies, and all under the cover and name of friendship. No shame is there and can there be no end of deception? The members of the church, who cannot do justice to others, whose prejudice and jealousy will not allow to treat others as they deserve, who perhaps would rather see go to destruction the peace and prosperity of a whole church, than lay aside all malice, would rather be where there is nothing known of Christianity. Some have had lesson after lesson of what were the results of prejudice and jealousy, and they always are bad. And the Christian who is guided by these, and then must reap the bitter results, is certainly a lamentable object; for we are taught to be guided by a better light.

Cases have been seen where members of a church would do things, where it was evident, that nothing but prejudice against their fellow-members could have prompted them to do so, and then had to reap a bitter harvest, but of course it was all their own doing. Being admonished by friends, they would not listen. Yet after there is trouble where is the true child of God who will sit easy and unconcerned? Although our friends may turn traitors, although they are not what they ought to be, yet in return our friendship, our love as Christians should in return cover all their wrongs towards us, with the mantle of charity. I have seen, where anything was done out of spite, jealousy, or malice, the punishment would soon follow, even in this world, and that is enough. God will allow us to do wrong, but he will also not withhold the proper condemnation. The brother or sister who will have to experience this woeful deception in what we expected to be friends, will and does feel the pain it causes.—day and night we may weep. God may pity us, and those who claim to be his children, do at the same time slander us, "O consistency thou art a jewel."

LANARK, ILL.

AUGUST 8, 1878.

BROTHER J. S. Mohler says: "The Railroad Sermon tracts are here. Have examined them, and am highly pleased with the manner in which they are printed."

THOSE who cannot procure paper money in small change can send stamps; we can make use of all you feel disposed to send, though we prefer the money.

BROTHER Stein wishes a complete set of the BROTHERS AT WORK containing his series of articles on Baptism. Who will donate them to him? They should be sent to this office.

BROTHER D. B. Mentzer says: "Many thanks to you for a copy of the new edition of the Perfect Plan of Salvation. I regard it as a capital tract—just the tract to circulate. Send me one dozen."

BROTHER D. B. Gibson, of Perrin, Mo., expects to be in Fulton Co., Ill., to commence preaching early in September, at which time his address will be Farmington, Ill., in care of Eld. David Negley.

WILL not those of our subscribers who have not yet paid their subscriptions give it their early attention? We will soon need some money, and this will come quite in place at this time. Hope this may be attended to at once.

IN answer to an inquiry regarding the Portugal Enigma, which was published in No. 25 of the present volume, we will say, try the whole on it, and see if that will not fit the case. When the whole swallowed the living Jonah it of course had a soul in it, and when the soul was taken away, it was the same as when first made.

DR. Peabody, of Harvard University, hit the nail on the head when he wrote, "In these days Christianity is set aside and the being of a God ignored in the name and in the best of theories, which, if destined to live, are on trial for their lives, and are not unlikely to follow the long line of their predecessors into an unhonored obliquity."

THE article giving an account of the abduction and murder of William Morgan is copied from a pamphlet published by the United Brethren Publishing House, Dayton, Ohio. It is read with intense interest, and no doubt will deter some from entering the Masonic order. Hope the article, as published by us, will do good, though it is heart-rending.

BROTHER Lemuel Hillery called on us last week. He has been preaching in Iowa for several weeks, and has returned to make arrangements to move to Jewell Co., Kan. From this point he intends to prospect with a view of locating a colony of Brethren somewhere in the Solomon Valley, Kansas. Brethren wishing to correspond with him, will address him, for the present, at Shannon, Ill. Do not forget the customary stamp for reply.

ON the account of serving on several committees, Bro. Enoch Ely cannot, at present, spare the time to do any missionary work in Central Illinois, and therefore Bro. Joseph C. Lehman takes his place in the field, expecting to commence meeting at New Bedford, Bureau Co., August 10th. Is there not some brother ready to spend a few weeks there as soon as Bro. Lehman closes his labors? The field ought not to be neglected, for the work has been too well done to let perish.

THE wants of infant churches in isolated places should be carefully looked after by older and well-to-do congregations. Small congregations sometimes have a hard struggle of it, and unless assisted, frequently perish, or become too weak to face the well-disciplined forces of the enemy. Weak congregations, like small children, need much care. Older churches can do more towards helping themselves. It does not hurt the ninety and nine to be left alone occasionally while you go in search of the lost sheep, neither will it injure an oft-preached-to congregation to do without preaching now and then in order that the small congregations may be supplied with the bread of life.

ON another page will be found an article from Bro. J. S. Mohler, wherein he differs from us regarding our view of Matt. 9: 15-17. It is expected that our readers will give his article a careful reading. When answering queries we give the best we have, and if our readers have anything better we want it, and if suitable, will give it a place in our columns, but will not admit of controversy. Brethren can express different views on the same subject without running into contention, and thus give our readers much light on the meaning of Scripture. If you have a view of a Scripture different from ours, do not reply to what we have written, but simply give your views in a plain and short manner. Something of this kind will be both profitable and edifying.

BROTHER S. Z. Sharp, of whom mention was made last week, has been holding meetings for the Brethren at Datchtown, ten miles South of here. The congregations were good and the interest excellent. He preached one sermon in Lanark, to a crowded house. A synopsis of his sermon will be found on another page. He is traveling and soliciting for the school at Ashland, and we are glad to learn, in meeting with good success. It is proposed to place the institution on a good financial basis and then conduct it in harmony with the faith and practice of the brotherhood, and thereby adapt it to the wants of our people. We have made arrangements with Bro. Sharp to keep us posted on the progress of the work. This will be interesting to our readers.

ANTIQUITY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

WE are in receipt of a spicy little pamphlet, entitled Infidel Back-Down, written and published by H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass., in reply to some infidel false assertions against the New Testament, published some time ago in the Boston Investigator, one of the rankest infidel papers of America. The little pamphlet, the price of which is ten cents, is worth reading, and contains a few good points, though very wittingly put.

From the last pages of the pamphlet we quote the following, which our readers will do well to clip out and paste in their scrap-book to be used against infidels, who claim that the New Testament did not authoritatively exist prior to the Council of Nice, A. D. 325:

"The early Christians read, and believed, and quoted the same books that we read, and believe, and quote, and in the same way that we believe and quote them; and they did this hundreds of years before councils ever meddled with the subject. Polycarp who was martyred A. D. 155 or 156, after having served Christ eighty-six years, and who was thus during some thirty of his long Christian life contemporary with the apostle John, quotes in his epistles nearly forty passages from our New Testament. Justin Martyr who wrote about A. D. 140, some forty years after John's decease, quotes again and again, the very same words which we now read in the New Testament. And in the writings of Irenaeus, A. D. 178, Clement, A. D. 194, Tertullian, A. D. 200, and Origen, A. D. 230, there are to be found thousands on thousands of quotations from the New Testament Scriptures, including every book we now receive. Dr. A. Keith in the sixth chapter of his 'Demonstration of the Truth of the Christian Religion,' records the number of quotations from the New Testament in the works of these writers which are yet extant. He reports 767 passages quoted by Irenaeus, from every book except the third epistle of Jude; by Clement, 389 passages, from every book except James, second and third John, and Jude; from Tertullian, 1802 quotations, or, if repetitions are included, more than 3,000, from every book in the New Testament except James, the third of John, the second of Peter, and Jude; while the works of Origen furnish a still greater number, and include some from every book in the New Testament. And it is a demonstrable fact that if, at the time of the Council of Nice, every book contained in our New Testament had been blotted out of existence, not only every fact and statement contained in them, but also nearly every sentence now found there could have been recovered from the now extant writings of men who had lived and written and quoted them as authentic and authoritative, long before the Council of Nice was ever heard of. And if their numerous other writings, which are lost, could be discovered, the number of quotations would doubtless be largely increased."

SUPPOSING THE CASE.

(No one should read this article till after having read the account of the abduction and murder of Wm. Morgan, as published in this and last issues.)

SUPPOSING, the Savior had come into the world claiming himself to be some great one.

Supposing, he had remained at Nazareth till thirty years of age, and then went down into the wilderness unto John.

Supposing, John had taken him into a room with covered windows and closed doors.

Supposing, he had come out, went up to Jerusalem and rented a large upper room, well furnished.

Supposing, he had given out, that he came not to do his own will, but to establish on earth a secret society, against which the powers of earth should not prevail.

Supposing, he had locked up the room and went to Nazareth, and there preached up the superior claims of his secret order, and many had believed on him.

Supposing, he had gone up to Capernaum, and there proclaimed that the time for organizing his secret society was near at hand.

Supposing, he had gone out from the city, and while walking by the Sea of Galilee had seen Simon, called Peter, and Andrew, his brother, and told them to "come and go with me, and I will give you a high degree in the secret order that I am about to organize."

Supposing, he had gone on a little farther and found two other men and said, "follow me."

Supposing, he had traveled throughout all Galilee, teaching in the synagogues and talking up the benefits of his secret order.

Supposing, he had secured a hall in Capernaum.

Supposing he had covered all the windows and bolted the doors securely.

Supposing, he had waited till dark and then called his disciples unto him and told them he was now ready to initiate them.

Supposing, he had taken them into an ante-room and told them they must first take an oath, pledging themselves never to reveal the secrets he was about to make known unto them.

Supposing, he had told them that it would cost them ten dollars each to take the first degree.

Supposing, his kind mother had come to the door asking permission to enter and see the initiatory ceremonies performed.

Supposing, he had said, "Mother, what have I to do with thee? This is no place for women," and then closed the door, leaving her out in the dark and cold.

Supposing, one of the poor disciples would not have had ten dollars to his name.

Supposing, the Savior had said, "Except ye have ten dollars, ye can in no wise enter into this secret order."

Supposing, he had said, "Except a man be initiated into this secret order he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Supposing, he had said, "Without ten dollars it is impossible to please God."

Supposing, that poor disciple, weighed down in grief, had departed, saying, "How hard it is for a poor man to enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Supposing, he had taken the rest of the disciples into the room with closed windows and barred doors.

Supposing, he had initiated them, giving them the grip and pass-word, pledged by the strongest oath possible for the infinite mind to conceive.

Supposing, the next day he had gone up into a mountain and called his disciples unto him, and said:

"Blessed are the rich, for theirs is the kingdom."

"Blessed are they that have plenty of money, for they shall be called to higher degrees in the lodge."

"Blessed are the members of this secret order, for they shall one day rule the country."

"Blessed are ye when men shall not find out your signs, grips and pass-words."

"It is easier for a camel to enter through the eye of a needle than for a poor man to get into this lodge, for it takes money to buy degrees."

Supposing, Martha and Mary had sent for him to come to Bethany for Lazarus, their brother, was dead.

Supposing, they had told him that, "both our father and brother are now dead, and we have no one to support us, but as father belonged to your benevolent society, we will now have to look to you for support."

Supposing, he had told them, "We cannot help you. Your father did not pay up his dues during the last year, and therefore his name was dropped."

Supposing, they had said, "Our father was too poor to pay his dues. It took all the money he could raise to pay for the three degrees he took. If we had that money back, it would be a great help to us."

But, supposing, he had turned a cold shoulder to their entreaties for help, and started off with his disciples to the "Rich man's" funeral, at whose gate lay Lazarus, the beggar.

Supposing, he and his disciples had marched at the head of the grand procession—one of them carrying the Bible in front of him, while some others played upon the fife and drum, and thus marched out by poor Lazarus who was begging for the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table.

Supposing, they had thus marched through the business part of Jerusalem, went into the synagogue with all their display.

Supposing, the Savior had gone up into the pulpit, and there spoke about the death of the good brother, whose body should be decently buried, while the spirit, by angels, had been carried to the "Grand Lodge above."

Supposing, they would all have gone out to the grave-yard, and marched around the grave a few times, and each one had thrown one of his white gloves into the grave.

Supposing, he had sent a couple of his disciples into the city, telling them where to find the large upper room with closed windows and barred doors, and there to make ready for the evening lodge.

Supposing, he had come late in the evening, with his disciples, and went into the upper room.

Supposing, he had proposed to give them the highest degree that could be taken in that country.

Supposing, that Judas, the treasurer, had got up and went out, and it was reported that he had gone to tell all the secrets to the chief priests and others.

And, supposing, some of the disciples had followed and caught him in some dark place—hand-cuffed him, put a gag into his mouth, took him down to the Dead Sea, got him into a canoe, tied a rope around his body then to some heavy stones, ran the canoe out into the sea and pushed him off into the water with the heavy stones hanging to him.

Supposing, the people of the city would have become enraged at such cruelties, and arose as one man, compelling Christ and his disciples to flee into the mountains and hide themselves from the eye of justice.

And, supposing, that James, one of the most honest men of the whole band, would have left the lodge, (like Bernard left the Masons), and published to the world, that the whole thing was a deception, and there was no genuine religion in it.

And then, supposing, the whole proceedings, regarding the formation of this secret order had been collected and written in a book called the New Testament.

Supposing, no one would have been allowed to read that book unless he would pay ten dollars, and take an oath, binding himself never to reveal any of the secrets in it.

Supposing, the disciples had went every-where preaching in defense of this secret order.

And, supposing, this order would have continued till the present century.

And then on top of the whole thing, supposing, its advocates would claim it was a work of inspiration and sanctioned by God, what would the intelligent reader think of it? What kind of an idea would he have of Jesus Christ? What kind of an opinion would he have of such an institution?

Well, the Masonic order is not one particle better in principle, and yet there are men who have the audacity to claim that both John the Baptist and Jesus Christ belonged to just such an order.

FRUITS, MEET FOR REPENTANCE.

I desire an explanation on Matt. 3: the latter part of the 7th verse. The 8th verse reads as follows: "Bring forth, therefore, fruits, meet for repentance." This ought to be well explained. What kind of fruits is meant?

L. J. COVEN.

THE 7th verse reads as follows: "But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O, generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee the wrath to come?"

These Pharisees and Sadducees were compared to a generation of vipers, because, in their false teaching and cunningness, they resembled the viper, the most poisonous serpent known. They taught a false doctrine calculated to inflict moral death upon every soul into whose parts the poisonous teaching was inserted. John expressed his astonishment at their coming to his baptism and hence said, "Who has warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" What has induced you, who are noted for your false teaching and cunningness, to forsake the error of your way and accept the simple doctrine that I am preaching?

"Bring forth, therefore, fruits, meet for repentance," or as Luke (3: 8) has it, "fruits worthy of repentance." They were to show the proper fruits of a reformation by ceasing to do evil and learning to do well. Manifest by their daily walk and conversation that they had repented—had changed their lives and would henceforth be better men. John did not want them to bring their cunningness and hypocrisy into their professed repentance, but prove to all around you, that you have repented, by forsaking sin and thus give evidence that your coming to Jordan to be baptized, is not an act of hypocrisy, nor an underhanded way of working yourselves into the favor of those whom you wish to poison with your false doctrine. Give up your old theory about being the children of Abraham, and therefore flee from the bondage of sin and corruption.

A careful reading of Luke 3: 8-14 will show some things of which they were to repent—some of the fruits of repentance. He that had two coats, and plenty to eat, was to show a little charity by dividing with him that had none. The publicans, while gathering taxes, were to exact no more than that which was appointed to them. To the soldier he could say, serve out the time for which you have enlisted, be content with your wages, but in all your acts do violence to no man, for thou shalt not kill, but love your enemies, &c. In all their dealings they were to show by their fruits—their conduct—that they had changed their purposes and were willing to walk in all the statutes and commandments of the Lord blameless.

BROTHERLY LOVE.

LOVE is a heavenly theme. Who does not love to be loved? Who does not feel happy when loved? Did love ever make any one miserable? Did love ever make a man cross, snarlish, spiteful? Who ever heard of love putting malice in a man's heart? Who ever heard of love for one another making strife, creating war, destroying the country, shedding men's blood? Can you say that through love you spoke ill of your neighbor? Can you say, that by love you refused to "Let brotherly love continue?" No, never! Did love ever surmise evil? Did brotherly love ever go from house to house seeking whereof to accuse some one? Tell us when brotherly love got envious and acted unseemly. Point out when and where brotherly (and sisterly) love ever thought evil—ever was rash. Did you ever hear love tattle? Never! Did you ever hear of love seeing dark clouds, and all manner of ugly things when all was sunshine? Who ever heard of love seeing a mountain shooting up, just over the hill yonder, when there was not a single grain there to start a mountain to growing?

Brotherly love is kind. Ah! it don't treat roughly. It never assumes things: it never speaks rudely and haughtily. Brotherly love is not puffed up—does not act as if it were general of every man's soul and body. Will love despise the poor, the unfortunate? No, it pities. Will brotherly love seek its own welfare and not another's? Not at all! It does good to all. It is meek. It is lovely in its effects. It looks bright, acts bright, and is bright.

Should any one come to you, and seem forward to tell you what he heard, what he thinks about this or that person, magnifying their faults, speaking evil of others, watch that man and have no fellowship with him. Nothing is so hurtful to a man's soul as to spread false reports. For a time he seems to be master of the field, but ah! when the truth comes plodding along after the heels of falsehood, then he who scatters the untruth, suffers. I have known people to circulate falsehoods and seem to rejoice in spreading them, and in less than two months they returned upon the circulator with terrible effect. Brethren never do this; for a brother can't. The Spirit constrains him; but if he loses the Spirit of Christ, then he is no more a brother, and being no brother in the sight of God, he is capable of doing great mischief. You see, therefore, the necessity of brotherly love. This once lost, the heavenly tie severed and the stride down hill is sure and rapid.

The man who throws away his self-respect—his wisdom from above and puts on tattling and back-biting, has exchanged whiteness for blackness—gold for dross—purity for impurity—peace for trouble. Why should men do this? Is there any pay in it? It may be a little pleasing to the flesh, but it certainly is not profitable to the spirit. Persons who have been purchased with the blood of Christ, and been made partakers of the divine nature, should, with joy, bear each other's burdens—should, in all kindness, help each other, respect each other, labor for the one common cause, be edified by the same Word, live together in the same spirit.

"Let brotherly love continue," is the voice from heaven. This implies that brotherly love has begun, is now, and positively demands that it should continue. Brotherly love, then, is; for a thing cannot continue until it first is. Can any one tell why it should not continue? May peace flow like a gentle river among the children of God; and though great mountains of trials may arise, they will only brighten the Christian's character, if patiently endured. Thank God for patience! The Lord be praised for the love of our elder Brother. May it ever continue.

THE WORD OF GOD.

[Synopsis of a sermon delivered by Elder S. Z. Sharp, in Lonsark, Ill., July 29th, 1878. Reported by M. M. E.]

"For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."—Heb. 4: 12.

WE shall first notice the properties of God's word. The Bible is the word of God. It is all that we have of the revealed will of God. I do not mean the Bible, independent of the Spirit, I do not mean this book, the leaves, the marks on the paper, but the Word that is quick and powerful. The Book before me is only a representation of God's word; it is only a picture, a photograph of the real subject, the real Word. I may show you a picture of my father, but then it is not my father. In one sense it is my father and in another sense it is not. It is true so far as it represents my father, but it is not my real father. So of the Bible. This Book before me is the representation of the real word of God. The real Word is "quick and powerful." It is living. God is the God of the living but not of the dead.

"The word was made flesh," says John, "and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth." That Word that was made flesh, is the Son of God. In Him was life and the life was the light of men. You see the Word was quick; we mean living. The Bible before us is not living, but that Word is living; there is life in it and it teaches us the way, the life and the truth. It is the Word which gives us new hearts—the Logos, or living Word of God.

We are told that it is powerful. All things were created by it, and without the Word "was not anything made that was made." By the Word, God spoke all things into existence. He said, "Let there be light, and there was light." A certain heathen philosopher says, "This is the most sublime saying ever spoken." Light was made by the Word of God; not only light, but the heavens, earth, the dry land and the separation of the waters into their proper places—all were spoken into existence and given place by the eternal word of God. The sea was made to roll back by the word of God, not by the hand of God.

All that bears life was ushered into existence by the word of God, the beasts, birds, herbs, fishes, mankind. All these were made by it; Christ was that Word, and is our life, and our Mediator.

The creative power of that Word is not lost. Christ created while here, as we notice in the feeding of the five thousand. He says to His disciples, "How many loaves have ye?" They said, "Five, and two fishes." The disciples wondered what this would amount to among five thousand, but Christ commanded the people to sit down by fifties and by hundreds, then He took the bread and fishes and blessed them, and gave to the multitude. Here He had only a certain amount of matter in these five loaves and two fishes, yet He created enough to feed five thousand. And that He created food, is evident from the fact that the fragments remaining, were more than that which He had at first. This shows that the word of God is powerful to create.

When Peter cut off the ear of Malchus, Christ restored it; or as some of those who have given the subject careful thought, assert, He made a new ear. It at least implies that a new ear was created. So much for the creative power of the Word—it is never lost. New objects are being constantly created. The growing of the stalk of corn, the wheat, the tree, is by the word of God. This creating is going on all the time; we cannot see the hand of God doing the work, but it is being done by the Word. It makes no difference whether God speaks them into existence or whether He brings them forth from something else—it is done by the word of God. It is done by the Word, whether primarily or secondarily.

It is powerful to convert. Christ came to show the plan; He declared those who would believe on Him and follow Him should do even greater works than He. Christ gave the plan to others, and these went forth and worked by the word of God. So with us. When we send out missionaries we do not send them with carnal weapons, the sword of this world, but we send them armed with the word of God. They preach the Word. They lay it before the people and if it will have no effect upon them we can do no more. There never was a soul converted to Christ except by the Word. It is the converting power of that Word that does the work. On the day of Pentecost, Peter preached the Word. Though the people had heard Christ Himself, had seen His miracles and the power of the Word, yet it did not affect them so much as when Peter preached the Word. Then they cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" They sought for salvation. They felt that they were the murderers of Christ, were condemned for their past work, and must now come to Christ. It was the converting power of the Word that moved them, that brought about this change. It was the converting power of the Word that arrested Saul in his mad career. He was going with authority to arrest men and women who believed through this word of God, when suddenly he was stopped. He at once acknowledged Christ, the living Word. There was a sudden change in the man, and he allowed himself to be conducted to Damascus to learn more about the way of the Lord.

There is power in the Word to make kings tremble. When Paul stood before Felix, and told him the things concerning God, it made Felix tremble. It made Herod tremble when he learned of the birth of Jesus. The Word was given in weakness—even in the form of a babe in a manger, but it grew and grew until it became mighty throughout the earth. It was conceived in weakness, but terminated in strength.

What is more helpless than an infant? But coming as an infant, it has grown until all power in heaven and in earth is given unto that living Word. This was the stone which Daniel saw "cut out of the mountain without hands," and it rolled and rolled on until it "filled the whole earth." It is said that Napoleon remarked, that Caesar, Charlemagne and himself had each established great empires, but that all had tumbled into ruin, not a vestige being left, while the meek and humble Nazarene, Christ, had set up a kingdom that would never crumble. Of Christ it is said, there shall be no end to His kingdom. His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Prince of peace, the everlasting Father. Peace shall increase until there shall be no end. The sword of Christ shall beat every other sword into ploughshares; as Moses' serpent ate up the magician's serpents, so the living word of God shall swallow up every other word. This is the power of God's word.

Wherever the Word is preached, there souls may be converted. We mean the living Word.—Some hear, yet do not hear. Some see, and yet do not. The Jews had the living Word before their eyes, yet saw not. They heard, still they were deaf. Christ says this of them. They did not hear the living part of it. They heard the sound, but not the living Word. Those to whom God speaks and who hear Him, hear the living Word; those to whom I speak simply hear my word. Those who hear the human voice uttering the words of God, only hear the representative of the living Word, but when they obey the Lord, they hear that living Word, for it is quick, eternal, powerful.

We now proceed to consider the restoring power of God's word. Christ restored sight to the blind, health to the sick, made the lepers clean, and the lame to walk—all by the power of the Word. It is the same now. It was so when Christ raised the daughter of Jairus. He did that by the restoring power of the Word. And there was Lazarus, who had already lain four days in the grave,—who had already undergone the change in nature, his flesh having begun to decay, he, too, was restored to life by the power of God's word. To Lazarus, who was sleeping, He could say, "Come forth," and the body obeyed and came out of the grave. We shall all be raised in like manner by the same Word, some to everlasting shame, and some to everlasting glory. If it is true that some shall come forth to everlasting glory, it is also true that some will come forth to everlasting shame. If it is true in one sense, it is true in another. Every one shall be called out of the grave. When anyone is laid away in the grave, we say, he sleeps. When Christ went to the little daughter, He said, "she sleepeth." Sleep is an unconscious state of being. When Lazarus died, Christ said, "he sleepeth." When we lie down to rest at night, we hope to awake again and enjoy friends and the comforts of life; so when our bodies are placed in the grave we hope to come forth again to enjoy the glory of heaven.

Christ says He "came not to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might believe." For this reason the word of God is the discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart, hence in the day of judgment we shall all be judged by it. It is a knower—a discernor of the thoughts, and in the great day it will reveal every evil thought, though it may have been hidden from mankind. O, what manner of men ought we to be, knowing that we have a true and a just God to meet! The earth shall pass away, but the word of the Lord shall never pass away. If we stand upon that Word, nothing can move us. Let us make that our creed, for the disciplines of men shall pass away. Let us cling to the commandments of God—let us cling to all His promises.

In the day of Judgment the books shall be opened and out of these shall we be judged. Then can we all say, we have obeyed the Lord? "In this Word I told you to love your enemies, have you loved them?" O, how well you will feel then, if you have obeyed this command. "Do good to them that despitefully use you; have you obeyed this command?" How good you will then feel if you can say, "Yes, I have obeyed this." Again the great Judge of the quick and the dead will turn to you and say, "Down there on earth, My Word said, Swear not at all, have you obeyed this too?" Ah, how happy you will feel, if you can say, "Yes, Father, I have obeyed the command." "Have you washed your brother's feet, as I commanded you in my Word?" If you have, how glad you will feel then. Peter felt glad after he obeyed the Savior in feet-washing, and you will feel glad after you obey the command. But on the other hand, how will you feel if you have not obeyed the Word? How sad you will feel when He tells you, "How came you in here not having on the wedding garment?" O turn to Jesus, and obey Him! The Word is full of life. Before you are lite and death, which will you choose? It discerns your thoughts, knows all things and is powerful to heal, to restore, to convert, to discern. May it be our friend through life, and through eternity.

Its waters were pure, and strong was its tide,
As it swept in its course to the sea.

WHY AM I NOT A CHRISTIAN?

BY P. A. ROSS.

THE reason you are not a Christian, is because you will not renounce the world, and all of its vanities, and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, who is able to save unto the uttermost, all who come unto Him.

Praise God, religion was never designed to make our pleasures less. The Christian sees the only true pleasure, not confined to this world alone, but, also in that which is to come.

You do not have to pay the debt for your sins, for Jesus who died upon the cross, that whosoever believeth on Him, should not perish, but have eternal life, has paid it all; all to Him you owe; sin has left a crimson stain, but, praise God, His blood can make you white as snow.

Unbeliever, Jesus who bore His cross up the rugged path of Mount Calvary, as He groined and prayed in the garden of Gethsemane, as the great burden of the world's sins was resting upon Him, and as the sweat and blood oozed from His forehead and trickled down His face, He, in anguish of spirit exclaimed, "Father, if it be thy will, let this cup pass from me; not my will, but thine be done!"

Sinner, you ought to obey God, through gratitude for the great work He has done for you; rather than from fear of the eternal punishment that awaits all those who forget Him.

Unconverted man, today is the day of salvation. Jesus says, "To-day, if ye hear my voice, harden not your hearts." God help you today to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as the man of your counsel.

"To-morrow, Lord, is thine,
Lodged in Thy sovereign hand,
And if its sun arise and shine,
It shines by Thy command.

One thing demands our care;
O! be it still pursued,
Lest slighted once, the season fair
Should never be renewed.

To Jesus may we fly,
Swift as the morning light,
Lest life's young golden beam should die
In sudden, endless night.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

BY J. E. D. SHORT.

AS we were intending to go to meeting to-day, a distance of fourteen miles, but owing to the heavy rains and high waters, and bridges being swept away, we are prohibited of that privilege, so I thought I would improve part of the day in meditating upon Scripture and writing therefrom.

Seeing a question in No. 20 of the BROTHERS AT WORK: "Did Christ die a God-forsaken man, according to the following Scripture, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?'" Mark 15: 34.

May we so live, that when it is ours to die we can say, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit," and meekly go to sleep in Jesus, and in the morn of the first resurrection be numbered with the redeemed.

WINE AND BOTTLES.

BY J. S. MOFFET.

Dear Brethren:-

NOTICED in the BROTHERS AT WORK, current Vol. No. 26, a request for an explanation of Matt. 9: 17, referring to the heading of this article.

This, I must confess, is a new interpretation of that subject to me. I was always impressed with the idea that the wine, and bottles, referred to us as individuals; and not to a collective body, or religious compact.

What drew this comparison from the Savior, was a question of the Pharisees, and John's disciples, relative to fasting.

The term fasting, from Avestan, means, to abstain from food, including the idea of, and mourning. It would have been folly for the disciples to grieve, and mourn for Christ while He was with them.

In the great commission, Christ first enjoins a teaching before any thing else; a preparation of mind and heart, - new bottles, for the reception of new wine, i. e., the Holy Spirit.

swiftly and safely to its destination. When the mind and heart are prepared by teaching the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, the new bottle is provided, the new wine (Holy Spirit) is poured in, acts favorably upon our intellectual and moral nature; developing all the enabling qualities of our being to the honor and glory of God, and the safety, i. e., salvation of our souls.

But if the new wine, or Holy Spirit was poured into an old bottle, an unprepared mind and heart, the vessel would not receive it. There would be no fitness, no affinity; the new cloth would tear loose from the old garment, (old, unprepared mind and heart), and the rent would be made worse.

LIKE AS A FATHER PITIETH HIS CHILDREN.

BY B. W. NEFF.

"So the Lord pitieth those that fear him." - Psalm 103: 13.

KIND reader, the language that the Psalmist makes use of, upon this occasion, certainly, methinks, is a beautiful expression; one that should bring comfort and great consolation to every Christian man and woman.

For as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear Him. That is, His mercy is ever extended to those that remember His commandments and do them, like as a "father pitieth his children."

Again, he pities them when he looks forward and sees the path they must travel upon. How thickly it is beset on all sides by a sinful and an enticing world; yes, how often he may look upon the pure and innocent one by his side, or upon his knee, when thoughts of joy and gladness may be turned in that of pity, and the answer is, because he loves them.

Secondly: We have said, it is love that prompts the parent to love his children. O yes! how dearly we love them; we would do all in our feeble power to please and comfort them. Just so it is with God. We are all His children by creation and by redemption.

"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall see God."

CORRESPONDENCE.

From McDonald, Va.

WEDDINGS.—To chronicle the glad news intelligence of the enlistment of six more converts...

The new disciples are more youths, just entering upon the arena of life, just budding into manhood and womanhood.

I see brethren that your correspondents persist in sending you their crap and weather reports. Some even report the condition of the public roads.

It occurs to me that your correspondents could without much reflection, see that it is a matter of no interest whatever to the general readers of our paper whether it is "very wet" or "very dry."

If I were to write to you that "we had a fine rain yesterday, and that the weather has been oppressively warm here for several weeks, and that the crops only medium, and that the markets are dull etc."

As a general thing, trouble never comes single handed. It always takes two to make a quarrel. One sheep will not fight alone, nor will his barn without fuel.

Sectarianism in Translations.

THE true partisan always inclines to correct the diction of the spirit by that of the party. This is the language of Dr. George Campbell, President of Marischal College, Scotland, in his Notes on the Gospels. He refers to our English version (Matt 3) "Baptized with water and with the Holy Ghost," when the Greek preposition is en and should be rendered in water, etc.

Dr. Barnes writes that tables, beds, etc., must be sprinkled, not immersed; but Malton, the Jewish doctor, refers us to Leviticus, the washing of the flesh or clothes, it must be by dipping, put into water, so also beds. "Sprinkle many nations," Isaiah 52: 15. The spirit of the partisan was never more clearly discovered than in this verse: the Hebrew is maza and the Greek is thaurazo, to cause to wander, admire, to astonish, to marvel.

It is contended that as Christ was to sprinkle all nations, and as children compose a part thereof, therefore they must be. But thieves, robbers, assassins and murderers are a part of all nations, hence they ought to be baptized.

We could name over two hundred Pedobaptist scholars who acknowledge the real meaning of baptizo to be immerse, and that baptizo has no such meaning. Notwithstanding the concessions made by learned Pedobaptists on the meaning of baptizo, the partisan spirit is so strong, that some still deny that it means to immerse, and that sprinkling is the more liberal meaning.

Households have been brought up to prove the infantile rite, but some of their own men have denied the arguments produced—Stuart, Pool, Annotations and others.

If we should read all the places named in connection with the ordinance in the New Testament, and then our partisan brother should translate only one case by sprinkling, what should we call it, or how distinguish it from the real truth? We might signalize it as one would that should translate stultus wisdom, or call Mormonism or Mohammedanism, Christianity.—Christian Index.

Assembling Together

BY JOHN H. PECK.

And let us consider one another to provoke to love and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Heb. 10: 24, 25.

THE Apostle Paul, who is supposed to have written the epistle to the Hebrews, could look down the stream of time and with a prophetic eye see, that in the last days the love of many would wax cold, and they would neglect to assemble together; and this he knew would be productive of a coldness and indifference to one another's welfare, and the cause which he so dearly loved, and for which he was willing to suffer all things. And in order that we might be able to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace, he says, "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works," and suggests as an excellent way to accomplish this, that we should assemble together. I don't believe that the Apostle here alludes to public worship only, but has in view an assembling that will enable us to become more intimately acquainted with each other, and become mutually interested in each other's welfare; living together as it were one family, assisting one another in the affairs of this life; rejoicing with those that do rejoice, and weeping with those that weep; ever ready to lend a helping hand, returning, if need be, good for evil, and thus provoke one another to love and good works and increased holiness.

Wherefore beloved, seeing that we look for such things, let us be diligent that we may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless.

Oh, how many hearts could be made to rejoice and what a heaven it would be on earth if we could all live together in love, harmony as we expect to live when we get to the happy land of Canaan. In Rom. 12: 12, 13, we read that we shall be patient in tribulation, assist in prayer, distributing to the necessity of the saints, given to hospitality. But while we go to meeting regularly and breathe loud amens in the sanctuary, many of us have forgotten these little things that contribute so largely to the spiritual welfare of God's people.

While some are riding in affluence and wealth, others are pinched with the most heart-rending poverty; scarcely able to provide clothes suitable for themselves and their children, to go to meeting and sit beside the dear, rich ones.—Oh what a pity it would be, if any of our dear brethren should be refused admittance to the beautiful mansions above, because they fared sumptuously every day and lived in cold indifference and unconcern about the poor beggars that lay at their gates, thinking all this time that they are getting along well enough.—Dear brethren and sisters if we would provoke one another to love and good works we must visit each other oftener; manifest an interest in each other's welfare; the rich must not visit only the rich, and the poor, the poor, but the rich visit the poor, and make them know that they don't feel above them, and the poor must visit the rich, and be content with their lot, and not envy those that have more than they have; for whether rich or poor godliness with contentment is great gain.

May God help us to love each other dearly, and Him supremely is the prayer of one of his weakest.

Pride and the Cause of it.

THE use of jewelry and gay and costly attire may be attributed to three causes.

- 1. A natural taste for them.
2. A desire to gratify others.
3. The supposed necessity of compliance with the imperious dictates of fashion.

When we wish to gratify other people we mistake ourselves and gratify the adversary of our souls. We may add that we have never seen the habit of indorsement, which was not associated with pride usually in the ratio of its own extent. A lady once asked a clergyman whether he considered such a practice, as a person decorating themselves with jewelry and ribbons and such costly attire as an evidence of pride. The good brother replied with as much philosophy as point, "Madam when you see the fox's tail peeping out of the hole, you may be sure the animal is within." Such adornments do not agree with Paul's writing to Timothy, 1 Tim. 2: 8, 9, 10. "I will that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting; in like manner also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with braided hair or pearls or costly array." Our prayer is, may God open the eyes of the blind and may they be led into the truth and in the knowledge of God.

While I am writing, my mind is carried back a few days, when the last United Brethren quarterly meeting was held at this place, March the 30th and 31st, when those that should have been examples to the flock, came forward to partake of the sacrament of the Lord's supper, the minister in all the gaudy show of the world and their wives with all the grandeur that the world affords, to my observation they had to make the third trial before they could get the veil from before their mouth so that they could partake of the emblem of the blood of Christ. I wondered whether God had given one person one law and another, another law. I read that we are to take those emblems in remembrance of his sufferings and death. We learn in the Holy Scriptures that Christ was a meek and lowly Lamb and that we are to follow him if we wish to dwell with him in glory. There are express and positive statements of Scripture upon the point. In 1 Peter 3: 3, 4, we have these words, "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair." This is to show that there is no possibility of evading the force of these commandments and that they are binding upon all who profess the religion of Christ. Every dollar expended for mere ornament or to procure costlier apparel, than is actually needed, the bitter condemnation is, it was squandered, squandered though pity wept, squandered though benevolence remonstrated, squandered though religion frowned, squandered though sympathy chilled within, squandered because pride and fashion bade. O cursed pride, O cursed fashion, gay enchantments willing to the pit, ye handmaids of perdition,—God save his children from your snares! Vice is a monster of so frightful mien; as to be hated, needs not to be seen. Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face; we first endure, then pity, then endurance. This is the philosophy of the habit of indulgence created by the practice of adornments; when first entered upon, it is with flattering accents and trembling steps, but soon the voice is firmer and the tones more full; at last with reckless haste and wild impassionate notes, the course is rushed over, till it ends in ruin and death.

Notes of Travel.

SINCE our last report we visited the churches around South Bend, Ind., and found the members wide awake, and sustaining good Sabbath schools. Two members returned to the fold at a church meeting held while I was there. These members had been misled by Cripe.— We are under obligations to Elder James Miller who offered us the opportunity to explain the manner, the Brethren are getting up the school located at Ashland, Ohio. We are under special obligations to Elder H. B. Sturgis, Elder P. R. Wrightsman and Bro. Martin Wenger for taking us around and assisting in canvassing for said school. Elders Sturgis and Wrightsman are our authorized agents for the churches around South Bend. Elder Sturgis is fully able to give all necessary information in regard to the school, having been in correspondence for some time.

At this place is located the Catholic University of Notre Dame and St. Mary's Female College where Protestant children are converted into Catholics. The institution is worth half a million, and has seven hundred acres of land attached.

We aim to give South Bend further notice.— Next we came to Chicago to investigate the process of heating and lighting buildings by decomposing water and burning hydrogen gas. We found the process wonderful and believe it will be made a success. We enjoyed the hospitality of Dr. and sister Fahrney and the assistance of their son Ezra. Visited the most important places of interest, such as Palmer hotel worth $3,000,000, the Board of Trade, Lincoln Park etc., also found a young Brother in the heart of this city. Next we came to Lanark where we enjoyed the hospitality of the editors of the BROTHERS AT WORK, and then went to Dutchtown where we are enjoying such care and kindness for which our western Brethren are justly noted. The plan of the Ashland school is receiving universal favor wherever we have been. S. Z. SHARP.

Prayer of the Faithful.

THERE lived in the year 1871, near Ashland, Ohio, a little family consisting of father, mother and four little girls, Annie, Ida, Lizzie and Mary, aged respectively 9, 7, 5 and 3 years. It so happened in December '71, little Mary was taken very sick. The old family physician was summoned immediately to the bedside, and everything done for her seemingly that mortal men could do, but all did not seem to stay the ravages of the disease (congestion of the brain), spasms of the most alarming character set in, and at the end of four weeks, her little hands and arms were all drawn out of shape, and her feet and ankles stiff, eyes sunk and turned upward, no action of the bowels for seventeen days, no signs of life except intermitting pulsations and difficult breathing. So the old Dr. left her late in the evening and said he would not come back as she was beyond human skill. So about midnight, Lizzie went to sleep. Annie and Ida were got into their bedroom by hard persuasion, as they were almost worn out, by promising them to call if there was any change in little Mary. In the morning they came out and said Mary is not dead. O father and mother we could not sleep, we have been asking the good man all night to spare little Mary. And I believe that father and mother had been asking about the same favor of the mighty and merciful God. In the forenoon of that day, the old Dr. heard through one of the neighbors that the child was not dead. So he hastened to the place and said he saw symptoms for better, and also said he never saw the like before and commenced treating her again, with external applications as she had swallowed nothing for some time, and in a short time Mary was really perceptibly better; her little limbs began to come straight, pulsation was regular, the eyes moved and she could swallow a little nourishment. And today she is a bright eyed healthy little girl, and going to school every day.

Now dear reader don't look upon the above as an idle or fictitious story, for we were an eye and ear witness to the whole of it, and more than a score of witnesses can be brought to verify the truth of it.

And who will say that the prayers of children might not avail also?

What a great responsibility is resting upon parents, how they bring up their children in reverential fear of God, and how can we bring them up right, if we don't revere him ourselves by obedience?

One year ago Annie and Ida were baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and Holy Ghost, and are consistent members of the church. And I know they have enjoyment, that the world knows not of.

Oh fathers and mothers are you doing your duty? Are you doing the commandments, or are you theorizing, and philosophizing around them? Making them non-essential, and teaching them, for doctrine, the commandments of men. O have pity on yourselves, and on your children, for if we will not obey while here as probationers, the day is coming when the sentence will be, depart! then we must obey. Let me say to you once more, how can you bring up your children right if you don't obey the Lord yourself?

How can you consider yourself in time of affliction? How can you with hope and confidence, pray to God for mercy, when you are in great distress, when you don't do the little things he has asked of you?

Now we pray thee, mighty God of heaven and earth, that this family herein spoken of, with those that have been given them since, to care for, with your dear brethren and sisters, may all meet in heaven, where neither death, nor sickness, nor sorrow, nor parting shall be no more. R. ARNOLD.

GLEANINGS.

From D. C. Monmaw. — In my article, entitled, "Among the Baptists," published in No. 29, current volume, I am made to say, "His observance is an evidence of a non-converted heart," when it should be, "His observance is an evidence of a converted heart, but its non-observance is not an evidence of a non-converted heart." It is important that this correction should be made. Among all their numerous incongruities this is the chief. It would take an immense amount of "twistification" for Baptist logicians to classify their theology of baptism.

From N. C. Workman.—Brethren Editors:—You advised the brethren here, that are preparing to go West to take homesteads, to settle as near together as they could. Yes, that is the idea, they are organizing a colony now and one of the rules they have adopted binds them to locate their claims as near together as possible. There will be probably fifty members of the church go in the colony, besides many friends that are not members. We will here say to all brethren and sisters that contemplate going West and prefer going in a colony, send us your address and tell what you want, also enclose a stamp or two and we will give you the terms or what is required in order to become a member of the colony.

Sciota, Iowa.

From Cornelia, Mo. — We lately baptized two who formerly were in fellowship with the Missionary Baptists. Their convictions of Christian duty and the character of Christian life seemed clear. S. S. MOHLER.

From C. Hope.—We had four meetings yesterday at different points. Expect to have meeting here next Sunday when we expect to baptize two persons. The zeal and piety of the members seem to be increasing. Many love our Sunday-school. My wife has improved some in health, but I am not yet well. Prospects for a good harvest are so far promising. May the Lord grant better times for the poor. Pray for us all, dear brethren. Yours in Christ evermore.

From S. J. Harrison.—On 7th inst., three united with the church—all young. Brother Bashor will be with us from the first of August, a week or more.

Western College, Ia.

From J. S. Flovy.—The eclipse is going to be a grand "success," as the day is beautiful. Considerable excitement, I understand, in some of our towns, the Advents claiming the world ends to-day. I will send you a report of the eclipse in a day or two. If the world ends to-day, of course you will know our address is changed!

From Beaver Dam, Ind. — We are still making a little progress in our Master's cause, in preparing for the great harvest at the end of the world. At our Love-feast, the 6th of June, Bro. R. H. Miller was with us, and several other brethren, and we continued our meeting three days. Six were gathered into the fold at that time, and one since. May the Lord enable them to prove faithful to the cause of Christ until death. A sad accident occurred in our vicinity a few days ago: A young girl, by the name of Bowers, was in the act of loading a fire in the stove, and took the oil can to pour oil on the wood; there being fire in the stove, the oil caught fire and burst the can, and she was so badly burned that she died in a few hours. Age about 14 years. L. BECHTELHEIMER.

Twenty-three cases of yellow fever in New Orleans, are reported. Of these, thirteen have died and ten are convalescent.

At the present time, the whole number of Jews in Jerusalem, amounts 13,000 souls. They form more than one third of the entire population there, and exceed almost double the Christian portion.

The New Testament Revision Company met at New Haven a few days since and completed the first eleven chapters of Revelations. They expect to finish the entire work in a few more sessions. The Old Testament company may require two years longer.

Following the severe heated term the yellow fever has broken out in several quarters. A few cases have appeared in New York and St. Louis, and the plague has broken out with such severity in New Orleans that a quarantine has been established at nearly all the river and gulf ports. On Sunday 59 cases, 25 of them fatal had been reported.

The eclipse of the sun on Monday, July 29th which was visible with a clear sky over a large portion of the United States, was well improved by scientists. Several large parties, with instruments for scientific investigation, observed the phenomenon from the vicinity of Denver, Col. where the eclipse was total. Their investigations, if favorable are expected to establish interesting theories respecting the gaseous envelope of the sun, and a new planet revolving within the orbit of Mars.

A certificate lately published by citizens of Sterling, runs thus: "We, the undersigned citizens of the city of Sterling, Ill., do hereby certify that during the last four years, our city administration has been run upon the no-license system; that during these four years drunkenness has decreased about seventy-five per cent, as shown by the records of our magistrates; that our population displays more thrift; that it is more industrious and more moral than ever before." How is this for those who maintain, that liquor traffic is a benefit to city trade and general prosperity. Banish the liquor traffic from our land and the way to prosperity will be open.

OUTSIDE THE GATE.

I stand alone outside the gate;
The eye is dark and desolate;
I pause, but cannot enter in,
Between us, rises up my sin.

Time has been, in the long ago,
When we have wandered to and fro
Together, 'mid the roses' bloom,
The night an Eden with perfume.

But all is changed, the roses had
I'pon the wall—like drops of blood
The petals fall, here at my feet;
I shiver at their breath so sweet.

We loved—she plighted me her faith;
When, from the past, like some grim wraith
One tolly of my youth came up
To drink its bitter harvest cup.

And then she turned away in scorn;
"Men were not made," she said, "but born."
And youthful fides of passion-flame
Could not excuse my sin and shame.

Could I but have my life to live
Again; one left its joys I'd give
To have its record free from blight,
And hold her to my heart to-night.

She counted me as a grain of sand,
She would not even touch my hand,
Wealth, time, are mine, yet desolate
I stand outside the gate to-night.

THE HOME OF THE SOUL

BY C. H. KALSBKAUGH.

To the Bell Ringer, of Sacramento, Cal.:

EVERY essay must have a title, but it is not necessary that the latter be a condensation of the former. It may give a general idea of the essay, or only a hint, which appears here and there. My present title is one that may stand by itself, as suggestive of every thing sweet and glorious and elevating that the soul finds in Jesus, "both in this world and in that which is to come."

I am to-day putting a novel parenthesis in my literary history—writing a letter for the press to a little girl of eight years old. You will perhaps be obliged to lay down the paper frequently and ask Webster what I mean. I will study simplicity, but it is not easy for me to write without getting into deep waters, and laying hold of some heavy planks to help me ashore. Some people have a great horror of Webster, and it would seem even of the spelling-book. I despise no one on account of ignorance, God has His fairest jewels among the unlearned. But when people glory in their ignorance, and make a boast of their stupidity, I cannot help looking for Luke 18: 11, 12 on their phylactery.

Heaven is not all beyond the stars. The soul's true home is in the body. It is sin that divorces this wedlock. God Himself was made flesh so as to refill our corporeal constitution to be the soul's eternal tabernacle. Not only was "God manifest in the flesh," but was "made flesh." 1 Tim. 3: 16; John 1: 14. Paul says, "without controversy" this is a "great mystery." But there is something about it which is clear as the noonday; it shows us what God thinks of our body, and the high uses for which He has designed it, and where He will meet us in Christ Jesus, or meet us never, save as a "consuming fire." At this lesson of the incarnation were well learned, we would have no members to defile themselves with tobacco, or poison the air which others breathe with the fumes of the burning weed, or preach righteousness and purity and humility to others, while they are themselves "worshippers of mammon," competitors for popularity, and not unfrequently horrible compounds of lust and selfishness, corruption and brutishness. Christ "consecrated for us a new and living way through the veil that is His flesh," Heb. 10: 20. Our treatment of our bodies is the criterion of our holiness, and the condition of our salvation. There is no home for the soul where Je-sus is not. Under the dominion of sin, the body becomes a prison, and Heaven itself a place of torment. "This house of our earthly tabernacle" is a fit residence for Deity, and just so soon as we offer it to the occupancy of the Holy Ghost, John 1: 31, and Rev. 21: 2, 3, will find glorious fulfillment. "Ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." 2 Cor. 6: 16. "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye see." 1 Cor. 3: 17. We are to be the "living stones" of which the spiritual edifice is built, the blood-washed, blood-cemented masonry of the Eternal Fame of Grace, "and there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither what-soever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie." Rev. 21: 27.

The Body of Jesus Christ as the Home of God, is the Central Truth of the Bible, the great mystery of the Divine Economy, the Enigma of Eternity for angels and saints, the hope of all sinners, the type of all believers. Emmanuel is the great Name that embodies all we know or ever can know, of the nature and wonders of God and man. To "live after the flesh" is to despise God, and rate the incarnation of the Devil above the wondrous wedlock of Deity with humanity. Although you have seen but eight summers, and have still the dew of innocence on your child-soul, yet this august principle is involved in what you say in your letter about the use of money, namely, that you prefer to cast it into the Lord's Treasury, or in some way assist His cause, rather than spend it for candies and gewgaws and flesh-pleasing personal adornments. If Rev. 3: 20 pours its glories and raptures into the inner sanctuary of our being, the soul finds the body the exact vehicle for the most ecstatic enjoyment, and the most ravishing expression of the Triune Jehovah. O the honor, O the glory, O the bliss, of contemplating and manifesting the All-Good and All-Holy. A true apprehension of this will upset the traffic-tables, drive the oxen and doves out of the Holy Place, and lay the corded scourge of righteousness vigorously on the bare back of that selfishness which turns the "house of prayer into a den of thieves." "He consecrated a new and living way." "To me to live is Christ." "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but CHRIST LIVETH IN ME." Another incarnation; another manifestation of God in the flesh. This is Christianity, all else is counterfeit. This makes the body the soul's eternal home, and not its endless torment.

I know brethren who are daily groaning under the penalties of excess. They must have their stimulating dishes to goad their appetites far beyond the normal standard, "making a God of their bellies," spanning the cubwebs of carnality across the window of the soul, nourishing their lusts and passions, till the temple of God is vacated for the debauchery of devils. To "eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink His blood," will kill the taste for tobacco, and the dainties and commixtures which tend to establish habits that make the body an unfit abode for the Holy Ghost. "Behold the Lamb of God." There is no tobacco in His pasture. Behold the Dove of the Baptismal Consecration;

the immaculate Emblem of purity. She never sets a foot, or dips a wing, or thrusts her bill into the slough of carnality. Commit your young life to this High Ideal. It holds the highest possibilities of God in your own nature. You need not wait for death to know what Heaven is. The River of Life clear as crystal will flow through your soul, and the Tree of Life, fragrant with bloom, and laden with twelve manner of fruits, will make a miniature Paradise of your inner life. Do not doubt it. Where God presides over our entire being, the flesh itself will tingle and quiver with the beatitudes of the Upper World.

HOW TO LEARN CHRIST.

BY J. S. MOHLER.

"But ye have not so learned Christ." Eph. 4: 20. THE doctrine is taught that we must obey the Scriptures as we understand them. With this doctrine we take issue. We take the position that we must obey the Scriptures as they teach. But one will say, "Must we not exercise our understanding to obtain a knowledge of the Scriptures?" We answer yes, most assuredly. But we must not make our understanding the sole arbiter in determining the truth of the Bible. Our understanding may be in error. "He that trusteth in his own heart, is a fool; but whose walketh wisely, shall be delivered." Prov. 28: 26.

When we hear people say, that they are willing to obey the Scriptures as they understand them, it is pretty clear that they are setting up their own understanding as an infallible guide.

Not long since, in conversation with a lady on the subject of Foot-washing, she remarked, that she would be willing to obey that ordinance, if she understood the Scriptures that way. Here it was clear, that she made her understanding discard the ordinance. The Scriptures in the main, are so plain, that the understanding has nothing to do, but to accept the truths of the Bible as they are taught. But so many people undertake to teach the Bible, instead of being taught by it.

To make this matter still more clear, we might refer to teaching in the ordinary branches of education. Suppose a number of pupils undertake to solve a problem in mathematics, making their understanding the sole judge as to the correctness of the solution, and the problem being a difficult one. In all probability they will have as many different solutions as there were pupils, from the simple fact, that they had no higher standard to appeal to than their understanding. Having thus solved the problem, they cease to inquire as to the correctness of their work.

But suppose the author, whose work they are studying, has also connected his own answer to his problem, and the pupils in comparing their work with the author's, discover that they are all wrong, now what will they do? If they are honest scholars they will investigate their work over, and over, till at last they bring out the true result, which harmonizes with the author's, the result of all the pupils being the same. In doing this, they all exercised their understanding; but their understanding was subordinate to their teacher's, or author's. While this is the correct way of learning mathematical truth; it is also the correct way to learn spiritual truth. Christ says, "Learn of me." Whenever we learn anything, our understanding must be exercised in a subordinate sense to the Author or Teacher from whom we learn. All believers are learners—scholars in the school of Christ.

The Bible was never intended to be interpreted according to every man's fancy, or perverted understanding. The Gospel speaks clearly and plain. It gives no uncertain sound. "The wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein." It is designed to be understood a certain way. To understand it in that way, is no difficult matter. About all that is required, is good, honest, honorable, obedient hearts that are willing to take God at His word, in its simple meaning. Obeyed in this way, it will result in unity, and harmonize with itself. Just as mathematical truth when properly understood result in unity.

If there were a great deal more investigating done, in reference to spiritual truth, than there is, we believe there would be much more unity among believers than there is. The Gospel is a tenet; but people are not.

May God enable us all to learn the truths of the Gospel, and obey them that its precious promises may be ours.

A FEW THOUGHTS.

BY LIZZIE HILLARY.

I WAS well pleased with sister Bond's article in last week's paper; she kindly admonished our sisters to their duty. It does seem to me if our dear sisters would examine the Word of God more closely, they would be compelled to lay aside the many unnecessary things which they wear. I wonder sometimes how they can do so, when they know the church is strictly opposed to it. I for one don't see how they can face the dear Lord in prayer with their bodies arrayed in such style as many of them now dress in. And much less can I see how they can seat themselves around the Lord's table, and there reach forth their hands with rings on their fingers to partake of the broken body of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. O sisters do you do this with a clear conscience, do you never feel condemned?

I remember upon one occasion I asked a young person how she could commune with rings on her fingers. She made this reply, "I was baptized with them on, and if I was fit to be baptized with them, I am fit to commune with them on." Now don't you see how the devil creeps in, what a wonderful worker he is!

But it is not only the young that dress so, but look at some married sisters, if they do not put it on themselves, they put it on their children. Sisters, who dress so very plain, do you not sometimes dress your children in the heights of fashion? I cannot see the difference in them wearing it themselves, or putting it on their children. Indeed I have been made to shudder many times when sisters would come in meeting with their children dressed so gay. I have heard them make excuses and say, "Well if we do not make these things for them, when they get large enough they will make them themselves." But remember dear sisters, God will not excuse you in this way. He has taught you to bring them up in the way they should go. Then, if this be the way that they should go, don't you want to go where your children go? or in other words, don't you want them to go with you? I surely think you do, then why do you dress plain and them so gay?

O dear sisters, if we are striving for that happy land, let us take our children along with us, and in order to do this, we must bring them up in the way that they should go, and when they grow old they will not depart from it.

These few lines I have written in love. May God help us all to be faithful, is my prayer.

It is possible for men to live in every day life according to the Higher Law, although a great many sneeringly deny it. Every one can follow Christ's teaching in the sermon on the Mount. Our Lord and Savior would never have given us commandments that we should not keep; and yet there is a general impression, especially in the business world, that men are obliged to follow the rule, to do unto others as they do unto them.

The merciful man doeth good to his own soul.

A SINGULAR DOCTRINE.

THERE'S come a sing'lar doctrine. See,
 Into the church to-day:
 It looks as if, from what the new
 Young preacher had to say,
 A new revision of the book
 We've thought the Word of God
 Had been devised by hook or crook,
 By creatures of the sod.
 He said, "Twas all a sad mistake
 That mortals here should be
 In constant fear of brimstone lake,
 Or 'ternal misery."
 For men who unrepentant die,
 Can have, if they desire,
 In future land another try,
 To 'scape eternal fire.
 Now this fine talk is very well
 If 'twas in Bible found,
 But since that Book declares a hell,
 And gives for hope no ground
 To sinners lost, beyond the grave,
 'Twere well for people here
 To give sure heed to chance they have
 For getting, "title clear."
 Again he said, "The churches all
 Have been too strict, by far
 In keeping members from the ball,
 Or 'tending theatre,
 "No harm," he said "could come from these
 To those whose hearts were pure;
 If young folks, we should seek to please,
 And make an overture,
 That they might dance or play at will,
 And 'tend the circus too,
 Then these young folks would 'gin to feel Like joining with us too,
 That God ne'er meant that Christians here
 Should give up all the fun
 To sinners, and in constant fear,
 Their heav'nly race should run.
 'Tis true that Christians ne'er should go Through world with heads bowed down
 As if their mission here below
 Was not to smile, but frown;
 Nor do they; for there's given to each
 That trusts in Jesus' blood,
 A joy which naught of earth can reach,
 And nothing give but God.
 If young folks could but once enjoy
 This holy joy within,
 The happiness without alloy,
 That comes when cleansed from sin,
 They'd see at once that there's no need
 Of theater or dance,
 To one who can his title read
 Full clear to heav'nly manse.
 For, as "by light of opening day
 The stars are all concealed,
 So earthly pleasures fade away
 When Jesus is revealed."
 He also said, "No harm could come
 From playing cards or dice,
 Or other games at one's own home;
 And he would give advice,
 If Christians want to save their boys
 From drinking whisky, rum,
 Let them at once their hearts rejoice
 By playing cards at home."
 But plain it is, to my old mind,
 If boys would ne'er begin
 To play these games, we'd never find
 That they have gamblers been.
 There's little Benny—Fanny's boy—
 We thought, "There's none so pure."
 His father brought the called it toy
 From town—the preacher's cure
 For drunkenness—a pack of cards,
 And taught poor Ben to play.
 He next bro't home what's called billiards,
 And trained, in worldly way,
 His boy. What was the sad result?
 The other day, in game
 For gold—ere yet he's called adult—
 He gained a murder's name,
 If once they start upon the road
 That leads to endless woe—
 That's by so many sinners trod—
 None knows how far they'll go,
 The safest way for each, by far,
 Is ne'er to make a move
 In paths that lead—or near or far,
 From path to heaven above,
 This path is filled with joy supreme,
 Delighting soul of man;
 And not injurious comes to him
 Who follows close, God's plan.

LIFE OF PETER, THE APOSTLE.

BY W. B. BOURGEE.

SIMON, surnamed Cephas or Peter (which appellation signifies a stone or rock), was the son of James, or Jonah, and was born in Bethsaida, on the coast of the Sea of Galilee, following the occupation of fisherman on that lake until called by Jesus to be his apostle.

In the evangelical history of this apostle, the distinguishing features or traits in his character are prominently portrayed. He was uneducated and in his writings used words sparingly, but full of sense and majesty, which made him a fine writer, even without education. As to his traits of character, we find that he was bold and rash, yet he was timid and sometimes cowardly; was revengeful, yet tender-hearted, easily entreated and always sorry for his rashness, and ready to forgive. Some of these traits often involved him in trouble and difficulty, which you will notice as we pass along. He was very affectionate, and therefore very strongly attached to his blessed Master, and became his constant companion, and of him learned the way of righteousness and the plan of salvation.

In Matt. 8: 14, we find that he had a family, for Christ healed his mother-in-law of a fever. In the tenth chapter, we learn that he, with the other apostles, received his commission. In the fourteenth chapter, we have an account of his boldness, and also his cowardice, for we find that the disciples were all afraid. Christ seeing this said, "It is I, be not afraid;" then Peter began to gather courage and said, "If it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water," and he said, "come." Then Peter, no doubt with great boldness, stepped down into the water and got along very well until the wind began to blow, then his courage turned to fear, his faith failed him, he began to sink and cry for help, and the Lord helped him. Here we may learn a good lesson; so long as the sea runs smoothly, everything is pleasant, it is easy to be a Christian; but when persecution begins to howl around, faith begins to fail and we begin to sink.—then what shall we do? Do just as poor sinking Peter did, call to the Lord for help, for he has promised to help us in every time of need. Christ asks the disciples, "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter answers, thou art the Christ the Son of the living God. Jesus answers, Thou art Simon Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven; and I say also, unto thee, that thou art Peter and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven.

Then Christ began to foretell his sufferings. Peter boldly rebukes his Master and says, "Be it far from thee, Lord, these things shall never be unto thee." But Christ said to Peter, "Get thee behind me Satan; thou art an offense unto me, for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men."

It is evident that Peter did not fully realize what he was doing, when he made the rash rebuke or he did not fully understand the mission of Christ. However his attachment to his Master was so strong that he was always ready to defend him when harm came upon him, no matter how strong the opposition, which upon several occasions brought him into trouble. We next find him on the Mount of Transfiguration, where he exhibits his generosity by offering to build tabernacles, after which fear came upon him, and he was released by his Master. They then proceeded to Capernaum, where he again got into trouble and was helped out by his Master. Matt. 19: 27. Peter says, Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee, what shall we have therefore? Jesus answers, When the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye (that is his twelve apostles), shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

We next find Peter with Christ and the apostles at the last supper, where Feet-washing was instituted. When Christ came to him, he said, "Lord, dost thou wash my feet?" Jesus answered, "What I do now, thou knowest not, but thou shalt know hereafter." Then he made a very hasty reply, saying, "Thou shalt never wash my feet." O how many professors of Christianity there are to-day, who are just as hasty in this matter as Peter, and what is worse, are still more obstinate. But notice the answer Peter received. "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." We would ask those, professing to be Christians, yet not observing this command, "What does this language mean. 'Thou shalt have no part with me?'" We understand it to mean simply this, that if we obey not this command, we cannot be made heirs with Christ, and consequently must lose heaven if we persist in willful disobedience, and Peter understood it so. He well knew that he could not sit upon his throne to judge one of the twelve tribes of Israel, if he obeyed not his Master, and therefore submitted without reserve, saying, "Lord not my feet only, but my hands and my head." Then this command has a spiritual import, and is not an ancient custom neither is it for a literal cleansing, as there was one who was yet unclean, though he had been washed as the rest. He was literally clean, but spiritually unclean, because of his iniquity in the intent to betray his Master.

Some objectors to this command, argue that it is not now in force, but if they will read the New Testament carefully they will find that even extreme age did not excuse widows, neither were they eligible to the charity of the church, unless they have washed the saint's feet. Then again, it is proven, that it is not an ancient custom as it was the saint's feet and not strangers' feet, for strangers were not all saints then, neither are they now, that they were to have washed, as this occurred years after the church was established, and the command is in force to-day.

After these things were established, Jesus spoke to the apostles, saying, "All ye shall be offended because of me this night; for it is written, I will smite the shepherd; and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad." Peter answered, "Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended." Then Jesus said, "This night before the cock crows, thou shalt deny me thrice." Peter said, "Though I die with thee, yet will I not deny thee." Then he took Peter and the two sons of Zebedee with him to watch and pray, but as it was late in the night they were overcome by sleep, for which they were twice rebuked, and then told to sleep on, as the spirit was willing, but the flesh would not. But he soon awoke them, bidding them to arise for he that would betray was at hand, and while he was speaking, they came and laid hold on him. Meanwhile Peter had procured a sword, seeing his Master about to be taken, was instantly filled with wrath and boldly commenced dealing out vengeance upon them that were about to take his Master, he struck one, cutting off his ear. His Master stayed him in his wild career and made the man's ear whole. Then they led him away to the High-priest's house, and Peter followed afar off. When Peter came to the fire, a certain maid saw him and said, "This man was also with him." He denied it and said, "I know him not." After awhile another saw him and said, "Thou art also of them." Peter said, "Man I am not." About the space of an half hour after, another confidently affirmed saying, "of a truth this fellow also was with him, for he is a Galilean." Peter said, "Man, I know not what thou sayest," and while he was speaking, the cock crew and the Lord looked upon him, and he remembered the word of the Lord, and went out and wept bitterly. He had learned that it is easier to give, than to receive offense.

After Christ was crucified, buried, arisen and seen by some of the women, who reported it to the disciples, it seemed to them as an idle tale, and did not believe it, however Peter's suspicion was touched and finally grew into such pressing curiosity that he could not bear its weight, but ran to the sepulchre himself and examining it, found it, as it was told, and departing wondering in himself at that which was come to pass. Then Peter and Cleophas went to a neighboring village. On the way Jesus appeared to them and interrogated them in regard to what they had been talking about. But their eyes were holden, and they did not know him. However they told him all about what had happened. Then he said, "O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken. Ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into his glory?" However they insisted that he should stay with them as it was getting late in the day. Then as they sat at meat, he took bread and blessed and brake and gave to them, and their eyes were opened and they knew him, and he vanished out of their sight. Then they went back to Jerusalem, and while they were telling what they saw, Christ appeared unto them, and they were terrified, thinking that they had seen a spirit; but he conversed with them, and they all finally recognized him. Then he opened their understanding.

In course of time Christ began to interrogate Peter, saying, "Lovest thou me more than these?" He said, "Lord, thou knowest, I love thee." "Feed my lambs," was the reply. He was asked the second time, and replied in the affirmative. "Feed my sheep," said his Master. He was asked the third time and began to be grieved at the repetitions. He however held his peace and answered in the affirmative, and Jesus said, "feed my sheep," and then gave him to understand by what death he should glorify God, and rebuked him for his inquisitiveness in regard to John.

We next find him in an upper room, where the apostles abode. Here Peter was instrumental in the election of an apostle to supply the vacancy of Judas, and when the day of Pentecost had fully come, they were all with one accord in one place, and were all filled with the Holy Ghost. Then Peter arose and preached concerning the kingdom of Christ on earth, a powerful sermon, and when the people had heard him they were pricked to their hearts, and inquired, "What shall we do." Peter, said, "repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." They heard the word gladly and three thousand were added to their number.

Before we proceed further, I wish to call attention to a characteristic point in the life of this apostle. He, after receiving the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, never makes mistakes, but is entirely under the influence of the Holy Spirit; and what he says is as though it came directly from God, as he is now God's instrument to superintend his infant church,—he feeds his Master's lambs.

On his way into the temple, he healed a man who had been born lame. This caused a great excitement among the people. However Peter began preaching Christ to them, and five thousand more were added to their number. The rulers of the Jews about to see their organizations broken up by this man's preaching, took him and imprisoned him. Upon examination Peter boldly attributes the healing of the lame man to the name of Jesus, and that by the same Jesus only, we must be eternally saved. However, public sentiment had become so strong in favor of Peter, and against the rulers that they feared the multitude, and let him go. At that time the disciples had all things in common. But Ananias and his wife sold their possessions and kept back part of the price, and when Peter rebuked them, they fell dead, and great fear came upon the church, and more believers were added.

They brought forth many sick into the streets, that at least the shadow of Peter passing by, might overshadow some of them. Peter saw their great faith, and healed them. Again the rulers were filled with indignation and imprisoned the apostles. An angel delivered them and they again preached Christ to the people in the temple; then went the captain and brought them without violence before the priest's council, and he asked, "Did we not straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name, and behold you have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us." Then Peter and the other apostles answered, "We ought to obey God rather than men," and again preached Christ right in their presence. Here is a display of Peter's boldness unconnected with fear; for he now fears nothing, but God, takes great delight in feeding his Master's sheep, even when he and the flock are both in danger of ravenous beasts. These wicked rulers were pricked to the heart and took council to slay them, but were divided among themselves, and let them off with a beating, commanding that they should not speak in the name of Jesus, and they departed from the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. And daily in the temple and in every house they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ. Soon Saul made havoc of the church; they were scattered abroad, went everywhere preaching the Word; Philip was rewarded with great success. Peter and John was sent to his assistance and they laid their hands on them that were baptized and they received the Holy Ghost. Then Simon, the sorcerer, offered them money to give him power to do these things, and was severely rebuked. Then they went back to Jerusalem and preached in many places. Then Peter passed through Lydda and found Eneas who had kept his bed eight years with the palsy, and he healed him. Again many turned to the Lord. Then he was called to Joppa to restore Tabitha to life, which he did, and many believed, and he abode here many days with one Simon, a tanner.

He was next sent for by Cornelius, an officer of a hundred men, a devout man, a Gentile who had been taught to do so by a vision. The Gentiles were greatly despised by the Jews and the disciples of Christ, and consequently knew nothing about Christianity. Meanwhile Peter had been taught by a vision not to despise the Gentiles any longer. He was very cautious and took six witnesses with him to the house of Cornelius who had gathered all his kinsman and near friends, and as Peter came in, Cornelius fell down at his feet to worship him. Peter rebuked him, asking him, why he had called him here, telling him that it was unlawful for a Jew to keep company with one of another nation. But God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean. Then Cornelius made known his vision to Peter and he commenced to preach Christ, and while he was speaking, the Holy Ghost fell upon all them that heard, and they were baptized. The news was quickly sent abroad that the Gentiles had also received Christ. And when Peter came to Jerusalem, they of the circumcision contended with him because he had eaten with the uncircumcised. Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning. Then they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, "Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life, and that the kingdom of Christ on earth was now open to them, also was made manifest to them.

Soon after, king Herod persecuted the Christians, and slew James with the sword, and because it pleased the Jews, he also took Peter and imprisoned him; but was delivered through the prayers of the church by an angel. But he hardly realized what was transpiring, until the angel had left him outside the gate that led into the city. Then he fully realized that the angel of the Lord had delivered him out of the hands of Herod, and from the expectation of the Jews. Then he went to the house of Mary, the mother of John. Mark taking them on surprise, and told them how the angel of the Lord had delivered him out of the prison. Not knowing that James had been slain, he told them to tell James and the brethren, and went to another place.

Peter's escape created great excitement at the prison. Peter not being found, Herod ordered the keeper to be put to death. In his pride, this wicked king took to himself honor which belonged to God, was stricken by an angel and died a miserable death. After his death the Word of the Lord prospered; there was great strife in the church in regard to circumcision, and the apostles and elders came together to consider this matter. After much contention and strife, Peter arose and spoke on the question. Peter is the author of two of the general epistles. The design of the first epistle was to support the Christian under afflictions and trials, and to instruct them how to behave in the midst of the opposition and cruelty with which they were treated, that they should be submissive to civil authority, attentive to their duties, and lead blameless and exemplary lives. When Peter wrote his second epistle, he was evidently old and near his death, which appears from the apology he makes for writing this second epistle to the Hebrew Christians. The scope of the epistles is, to confirm the doctrine and instructions delivered in the former, to establish the Hebrew Christians in the faith of the Gospel; to con-tion them against false teachers. He warns them to prepare for the great event by a holy and unblamable conversation.

After zealously laboring many years in the cause of Christ, he was finally crucified at Rome A. D. 63, during the reign of the Emperor Nero, and thus passed away a faithful preacher whose labors on earth in the conversion of sinners, was a grand success. May we profit by his missteps and imitate his good examples and meet him beyond the shining river.

A SHORT DIALOGUE BETWEEN FATHER AND SON.

BY B. W. NEELE.

SON. Father what is the name of that large Volume I saw you so busily engaged in reading this morning.

Father. It was the Bible, my son, the written and revealed Will of God.

S. I would suppose it to be very interesting; for wills are mostly read with interest, especially by the parties concerned. But what makes the tears trickle down your face so often.

F. You are right, my son. It is of greater interest than other works; for in it is the only sure promise that men have left them of being happy or gaining a happy home after they leave this world. As to the tears upon my face, how can I do otherwise, when I take up this blessed Book and behold the goodness of God, then look at the walk and conversation of the children of men? Oh I cannot refrain from weeping.

S. I would understand by what you say father, that the Bible contains a way within itself, that will bring comfort and consolation to every one.

F. You have guessed rightly, for it contains a law that if men and women will only become subject thereto, it will lead them from earth to heaven. It will bring greater comfort and consolation to man, than all this present world can give him.

S. By what you say father, we are living in sin, and this world is not our dwelling-place.

F. Very true, my son, our first parents done wickedly in the garden of Eden, and since that time all mankind have occupied an unsafe position, they have all become sinners in the sight of God, and this world in which we are living, is not our everlasting home. It will pass away in the future, and all they that cleave to it, must accompany it to the regions of darkness.

S. Oh yes, I understand, that is why the Bible has been given unto us, in order that we may escape from sin, and enjoy a better world than this.

F. Your suggestions are right. After our first parents sinned, God still had mercy upon them. He would not suffer them to be lost forever, but gave them a faint promise, that after while One would arise who would redeem them, and that promise has been ratified, and now the Bible contains that promise. If we wish to be benefited by that promise, we must comply with the directions that accompany it. By so doing, we can overcome sin, and instead of occupying an unsafe position, we will be perfectly safe, and safe ground, is good to occupy.

S. Father, why is it that men are so much inclined to serve the world when they know it is not their everlasting home?

F. Well, my son, there could be several answers given. In the first place our nature and that of the world are closely connected. Secondly the things in this world are presented before our eyes like Eve in Paradise,—the more she looked at the forbidden fruit, the more she lusted it. But the kingdom that is promised to the Christian can only be seen by an eye of faith, one is present and the greater part of the other in the future. Other reasons could be given, but let this suffice.

S. Father, you have spoken of two future places. Be pleased to tell me the difference, or a part of it, for I am anxious to hear.

F. According to the Bible, my son, there is surely a vast difference. Hell, we are told shall be cast into the lake of fire which burneth forever and ever, where the beasts and false prophets are, and all the nations and they that do wickedly, shall be turned into hell, there to keep company with the devil and all his fallen angels, and there be in torment, suffering the vengeance of an offended God, where on the other hand, Heaven is a place of rest, enjoyment, happiness, comfort, joy and an endless place of glory—a place where all our troubles and trials will be over; where we can sit with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, where we can meet to part no more, and nothing can harm us or make us afraid. Then we can walk the streets of the New Jerusalem and speak face to face.

S. I am surprised, father, at the thoughtlessness of men, that they are so little concerned. It seems to me they are mostly concerned about this present life. I notice that many who profess to be the people of God, by their walk and conduct deny the power thereof. They too are drifting down the tide.

F. Yes, my son, this seems to be the deplorable state of mankind. They are only living for this world; they have forgotten the goodness of God, even those who should be a light to the world. Oh! where are they going? It is fearful to behold how far they have strayed in the enemy's kingdom. May God help them, and all others to flee the wrath to come. And you, my son, serve the Lord while he may be found, before the evil day come upon you.

TOO FAST.

MEN are living too fast. Idleness and indulgence have begotten pride and discontent. The age is thirsty for luxury. The very paupers of our cities scorn the patched and simple garments which once satisfied the well-to-do; the young clerk must live in a house about as luxuriously furnished as his employer's, though he steal to support his establishment, the servants rival their mistresses in the costliness and elaborateness of their attire, though to do it they waste the savings which they may need to keep them from want and ruin. The young couple who begin a home, must have it as richly decorated as that of those who have labored for years; and there is an utter unwillingness on the part of too many to be content with simple surroundings.

There should be a return to more simple, more honest ways of living. It should be deemed dishonorable to live beyond one's means; no man should be encouraged to spend a few feverish years in luxury at the risk of breaking down and making a dishonorable ending. "Let your moderation be made unto all men; the Lord is at hand."—87.

Poverty is the only burden which grows heavier by being shared by those we love.

WHAT ARE THE NECESSARY AND ADOPTED MEANS FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF MAN'S MORAL FACULTIES?

RATIONAL beings are distinguished from irrational beings by Faith, Conscience and Reason. These God reaches by adopted means.

Some of the ablest writers on theology and sacred hermeneutics maintain that the idea of God and of His character was implanted in man's nature—that the idea was revealed subjectively. Others maintain that His being was revealed to man through the conscience, but that His character was revealed objectively. That these two theories may be well weighed in the balances of Truth, let us turn to the word of God.

"God created man in his own image." In His own image: turn to man and behold the form of God. Being created, God commanded them thus: "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth and subdue it." "God said"—God spoke, and in speaking He used words. At this time Adam and Eve were yet free from sin. To them God had given dominion over "every living thing that moveth upon the earth." Being pure as God is pure, there was nothing to prevent them being in God's presence. After they had sinned, they "hid themselves from the presence of the Lord." There it is; the plain Word says, "from the presence of the Lord God." Now if they had never been in God's presence—had never seen Him, why would they hide from Him? The proof is that before they sinned, God was in their presence, and they knew Him, feared Him for He was their Father.

With these facts before us how shall we conclude? Shall we say that they received the idea of God's being without seeing Him? Does not God, by Inspiration, declare the "presence of the Lord?" The safe conclusion is, that God revealed Himself to man by His personal presence. Adam saw Him, conversed with Him, received His commandments, and before his transgression readily obeyed Him. Gen. 1: 28, 29, 30. Being made known to man as a God in existence, and man having become stained in character, it was God's work to next reveal His own character and bring man to obtain a holy character precisely like the Pattern, and then sin could no more have dominion over him. The inquiring of man's character by sin had a direful effect upon the body, of which God said, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." For some good reason, God chose not to suddenly restore man's character, but by a series of revelations gradually unfolded the means for its attainment.

It is evident that in the beginning God designed that man should talk, just as much as He designed that he should walk, breathe, sleep, eat, and drink. The only proper question is, whether we learned to talk "in the same manner as we began to breathe, as our blood began to circulate, by a process in which our own will had no part; or, as we move, eat, clothe and shelter ourselves, by the conscious exertion of our natural powers, by using our divinely-given faculties for the satisfaction of our divinely-implanted necessities." Which of these two theories is the most reasonable we leave to the reader to decide; not however without calling attention to Genesis 2: 19. "Out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air, and brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them, and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof." God's revelation declares that before Adam transgressed, he talked. This settles the question as to when he began to talk. In the second place it is quite evident that he learned to talk from God, for God gave him commands to obey as soon as he was created, and if he could not speak—could not understand words, why would God address him? The history of language dates with man's creation; and it is characteristic of man: man would not be man without it. To reach the human heart—to mold it after His own character, God made use of Written Language.

Through this medium man has brought himself up to the first step in civilization, and by the same means has made rapid progress in all the arts and sciences. Written language is the sign of one's thoughts. With these signs of thought human beings communicate with each other, even at great distances. It is the best, and really the only reliable method of preserving thought. Attempts have been made to preserve thought by Spoken Language; but the history of this method is remarkable for its failures. God, it seems, tried this for about 2,500 years, and finding it inadequate, wrote with His own finger on stones and gave them to Moses. Here begins the history of Written Language, which, from that time on, holds an important position in the history of man. Without it, man is ever led by imagination, by speculation, and fails to comprehend the character of God. On Written Language depends the development of man's moral faculties. It is the adopted means through Christ, for the training of the moral part of man—of giving man a holy, a just and true character.

We know God's character only by revelation; and the means used in revealing it to us was by sign-making, and by Written Language. Before the revelation of His character, no two men could arrive at the same conclusion concerning it; since it has been revealed, all men can agree. That God is, is not so much a question, but what is He, is the query with every man. To learn what He is, we need only go to His revelation.

The Mosaic dispensation was a dispensation of sign-making. Before Moses began making signs, the name Jehovah was associated only with that of being, divine being. Standing alone it conveyed no idea of character, but Moses, by sign-making, formed in the Jewish mind the idea of God's character. Let us stop here to note a single fact in the history of the Jewish nation. Arriving out of bondage, and beginning a life of service to God, there was not an object in the universe which could convey to them the idea of God's holiness. The idea, therefore, had to be originated and given to the Jews through their senses. Only by comparison could this idea be conveyed to their minds, hence the animals were divided into clean and unclean, and of the clean class some were denominated without blemish for religious purposes. Thus one class was declared purer than the other and were offered as sacrifice. These sacrifices were to be offered by a class of men, purified and set apart for that particular work. Thus the idea of purity, of holiness was conveyed to the children of Israel. Only by a series of comparisons could this principle of the Deity be implanted in their minds. Thus will be seen, the particular use of sign-language; and the dispensation of which Moses is the head is noted for its variety and plurality of signs. It was the sign age of the world. More anon.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

FOR the want of time we have said but little regarding the result of the Berlin Congress, and the effects it will likely have on the future of nations. To even the careless reader it is evident that the glory of Turkey has departed, though formerly a race of great power, yet never fully civilized. The empire at one time contained 900,000 square miles of territory, and 22,000,000 inhabitants. Though masters of the richest portions of the globe they despised agriculture and mining.

In fact the Turkish Empire is no more—it has been reduced to a mere skeleton, and is but a wreck of its former greatness. She lost about 65,000 square miles of territory in Europe, besides nearly 75,000 square miles virtually taken from her control. Out of 200,000 square miles the Sultan has about 60,000 left, and 6,000,000 of subjects. Religious liberties are secured in all the independent and semi-independent governments, thus rendering life in Turkey more secure.

The work of the Congress, in our estimation, was an important one, and has an important bearing on the future history of Europe and a portion of Asia. Cyprus, a fertile island in the N. E. portion of the Mediterranean Sea, has fallen into the hands of England, and if necessary, in case of war, will serve as an important key to the East. The island has been much neglected for several centuries, but under the wise and industrious regulations of England may regain all its former glory, and become one of the most important places in the East.

The question of war now seems to be settled for the present, and things may move along in the even tenor of their way. The Danube becomes a free river, on which no war vessels are allowed to sail, and all the fortifications along the river are to be pulled down. Thus the shedding of much blood has been avoided. Russia has gained considerable advantages, not sufficient, however, to render her particularly more dangerous than what she has been. She feels that she has gained her object in having civil and religious liberties guaranteed to millions who were galling under the bitter bondage of religious intolerance.

England seems to have gotten the lion's share, and will doubtless make the best of it. She has men, brains and money, and is now in a situation to accomplish wonders. Her commanding position from the Cyprus island will render her suspicious in the eyes of all Europe, and perhaps cause her to make extra efforts, though apparently for the good of Turkey. Lord Beaconsfield, Prime Minister of England, is a Jew of rare attainments as a statesman and diplomatist, and may be considered as the leading spirit of the Congress. Some have quoted Zach. 8: 23 in reference to his influence in the Congress: "In those days it shall come to pass that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you." Taking out Bismark, who was Moderator, we have ten fully empowered Gentiles to assent to the diplomatic skill of Beaconsfield, the Jew.

England will, no doubt, do much towards civilizing what remains of the Turkish Empire, for the country will be well supplied with missionaries whose work will go far towards civilizing the Turks, and opening up the country to far better influences. There are prospects of England building a railway from some point along the Mediterranean Sea, down the great Euphrates valley, so as to open up a direct overland route with her vast possessions in India. Should this road be built it will not miss the sights of Babylon and Ninevah very far.

Asia Minor, too,—that once fertile home of teeming populations, the scene of arduous apostolic labors and Gospel triumphs, abounding with all that was grand in ancient civilization—will again be open to better influences, and the long, desolating reign of Turkish power will give place to the more enlightened, humane and progressive policy that England will dictate. We may expect, also, to see the Holy Land reclaimed from the dark and cruel superstitions and selfish policy of the past, and highways opened that will let in the transforming power of Protestant Christendom in a succession of influences that may cause the hills and valleys of Palestine to ring with hosannas to the Son of David.

We have been steadily watching the movements in the East, and it now seems that the morning star of the coming Millennium is beginning to shed a glimpse of light on the pages of prophecy, and we may soon look for important events in the history of the world. Palestine once opened up to missionaries and travelers will become the most interesting historic place on the globe, and will be visited by travelers and pilgrims from every part of the civilized earth. With joy we hail the time when the land of promise shall have been reclaimed from under the sword and restored to the people to whom it was promised as an inheritance forever.

Everything considered, there is much to be thankful for in the decisions of the Berlin Congress. A mighty stride forward has been taken in behalf of Christian interests, and the foulest blot on the civilization of Europe has been well nigh erased. Providence is swinging wide open the gates of Europe and Asia for the preaching of the Gospel. A great and effectual door is opened, and there are many adversaries. There is a call on the Christian world for larger missionary effort. The lands long trodden down under the crushing heel of Islamism must be redeemed for Christ Jesus the Lord. This is the great lesson of the Berlin Congress and will prove a source of much interest to all students of prophecy.

WE have before us 105 pages of the manuscript of Bro. Bashor's book, which will be published as soon as possible. We will be through with Bro. Stein's Non-Conformity in a few days, and then will commence on Bro. Bashor's book. Our readers will likely find it an interesting work.

BROTHER AMOS S. CHAMBERLIN says: "The children are highly delighted with the Children at Work." The Sunday-school in his congregation has adopted the Sunday Lesson as it is now being published in that paper. Hope it will increase in interest, and prove beneficial to young Bible students.

THE Cincinnati authorities are trying to close the theatres of that city on Sunday. If those who profess to be Christians would stay away from such places, and not give their money in support of such institutions, theatres and such like things would soon pass away.

THE Brethren's Sunday-school, at the Panther Creek meeting-house, Woodford Co., Ill., is in a flourishing condition, having 122 scholars on the roll. The old as well as the young take part in the exercises. One hour is devoted to reading from the Testament and asking and answering questions.

GOSPEL BANNER is the title of an interesting little monthly published at Goshen, Ind. It is edited by Eld. David Brennenman, and conducted in the interests of the United Mennonites. The first two numbers are on our table.

THROUGH the kindness of some one, E. F. Barrow, of Clifton Hill, Randolph Co., Mo., has been receiving the BRETHERN AT WORK, and extends hearty thanks to those who ordered the paper. He is anxious that the Brethren preach in that locality, thinking some good may be accomplished. This notice is given to call the attention of the Brethren to that portion of the country.

THE school at Huntingdon, Pa., seems to be prospering. Bro. J. M. Zuck writes as follows: "Our school is prospering finely at present. Fifty students are in attendance, nearly all of whom are young teachers. This is our six weeks' term, intended especially for teachers. Prospects for the future are flattering. Fall term will open September 10th."

BROTHER Jesse Heckler, a minister in good standing and highly respected by the members, is desirous of going West, and settling in some small congregation where his labor will be needed, if he can sell his well improved little place of several acres near the Hickory Grove meeting-house, Carroll Co., Ill. We give him this notice, hoping thereby to help one of the needy churches in the West to secure his services. He prefers going to Nebraska. His address is Mt. Carroll, Ill.

A SISTER, who feels much interested in the spreading of the Truth, orders the BRETHERN AT WORK sent to a certain post office and kept on the counter to be read by the people, who, she says, take great delight in reading the paper. Hope it may accomplish much good, and that others will imitate the example by sending the paper to other localities where it may be needed and read. There are many other public places where the paper should be kept.

ORDERS for Bro. Mohler's Railroad Sermon are coming in pretty freely, showing that the neatly put-up, and well arranged tract is going to be extensively circulated. A gentleman wished to know of us if the tract said anything about the "smoking car?" We told him, he would find that at the other end of the broad gauge road.

PUTTING YOU IN MIND.

YOU know it; but it went to sleep perhaps, and needs waking up. You know to do good, but have got a little careless—a little tired and downcast, so you do not feel like doing much. Yes, you have worked hard all through life. You were not idle, you loved to work, and worked. God blessed you. He made your crops to yield well. He gave you health. He threw around you, dear friends. He protected you, led you, made you what you are. O, praise the Lord forever! I want to put you in mind how good the Lord has been. Yes, you often think about this. You often feel grateful to God for the many favors you receive. You do not say like the infidel, the unbeliever, the ungodly, "I did all this, therefore I have what I have." O no, you do not think that way, Christian brother! You think you did your part and God did His, and now you are happy. This is the way you think and act. Every good and perfect gift cometh down from the Father of light. You know this, do you not? Knowing it, a feeling of gratefulness seizes your heart and you will give thanks and rejoice. To be put in mind of the Lord's goodness and greatness is to have the knowledge of God thrust into our heads. Only see that the knowledge is not choked out with avarice, greed and unbelief. These are very noxious weeds. Forget not that you are subject to death and decay—that God is over you and you far beneath Him—that the greatest labor is to give the increase which belongs to God. Think of these things if you would live in the fullness of God's love.

NEW CLOTH AND OLD GARMENTS.

"No man putteth a piece of new cloth into an old garment; for that which is put in to fill it up, taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worse." Matt. 9:16. Please give us a little light on the above Scripture. Every question has in it a sticking point, but for the life of me I can't see how a garment can be made worse by filling the worn out places with new cloth. D. A. NORTON.

THE lesson the Savior intends teaching in Matt. 9:16, 17, cannot well be understood without some acquaintance with oriental customs. Instead of "new cloth," it would better be rendered "undressed cloth," or "cloth un-furled." Such cloth sewed over the rent in an old garment would shrink, tearing the stitches, and make the rent greater. Just so it would have been if the old Pharisaic doctrine had been sewed onto the Christian doctrine taught by Christ.

The best explanation of Matt. 9:16, 17, we think of at present, is the following from Barnes' Commentary:

"Christ, in reply to them, used three illustrations, all of them going to establish the same thing—that we should observe a fitness and propriety in things. The first is taken from a marriage. The children of the bride-chamber—that is, the bride-men, or men who had the special care of the bridal chamber, and who were therefore his special friends—do not think of fasting while he is with them. With them it is a time of festivity and rejoicing, and mourning would not be appropriate. When he is removed or taken away, then their festivity will be ended, and then will be the proper time for sorrow. So, says he, John, your friend and teacher is in captivity. With you it is a time of deep grief, and it is fit that you should fast. I am with my disciples. It is with them a time of joy. It is not fit that they should use the tokens of grief, and fast now. When I am taken away, it will then be proper that they should fast.

"No man putteth a piece of new cloth," etc. A second illustration was drawn from a well-known fact, showing also that there was a propriety or fitness of things. None of you, says he, in mending an old garment, would take a piece of entire new cloth. There would be a waste in it. An old piece, or a piece like the garment, would be better. The word here translated new, in the original means rude, undressed, not furled by the cloth-dresser. In this state, if applied to an old garment, and if wet, it would contract and draw off a part of the garment to which it was attached, and thus make the rent worse than it was. So, says he, my new doctrines do not match with the old rites of the Pharisees. There is a fitness of things. Their doctrines required much fasting.

In my system it would be incongruous; and if my new doctrines were to be attached to their old ones, it would only make the matter worse.

"Neither do men put new wine," etc. The third illustration was taken from wine put into bottles. Bottles, in Eastern nations, were made, and are still made, of skins of beasts. Generally the skin was taken entire from a sheen or a goat, and, properly prepared, was filled with wine or water. Such bottles are still used, because, in crossing deserts of sand, they have no other conveyances but camels, or other beasts of burden. It would be difficult for them to carry glass bottles or kegs on them. They therefore fill two skins, and fasten them together and lay them across the back of a camel, and thus carry wine or water to a great distance. These bottles were, of course, of different sizes, as the skins of kids, goats, or oxen, might be used. Bruce describes particularly a bottle which he saw in Arabia, made in this manner of an ox skin, which would hold sixty gallons, and two of which were a load for a camel. By long usage, however, bottles of skins became tender and would be easily ruptured. New wine put into them would ferment, and swell and burst them open. New skins or bottles would yield to the fermenting wine, and be strong enough to hold it from bursting. So, says Christ, there is fitness or propriety of things. It is not fit that my doctrine should be attached to or connected with the old and corrupt doctrines of the Pharisees. New things should be put together, and made to match."

THE FREQUENTATIVE VERB.

I saw in your report of the Stein-Ray debate, where Stein had proved by five or six Greek lexicons, that the word "baptizo" is a frequentative verb. Is this true? If so, who are the authors of these works? If those lexicons teach the above to be true, and Elder Ray did not make any reply to his argument, (as I understand), it appears to be a plain case. I have not embraced any religious faith in practice, but I am searching after the truth. Perhaps an answer through the paper would be beneficial. AARON MILLER.

BAPTIZO belongs to a class of Greek verbs known as frequentatives. Bullion, in his Greek grammar, says, "Frequentative verbs express repeated action;" also, "Frequentatives are those which signify repeated action."

Liddell and Scott, in their Greek lexicon, define baptizo, "To dip repeatedly."

Donegan, when defining baptizo, says, "To immerse repeatedly into a liquid."

Passaw says, "To immerse often and repeatedly."

Bretschneider, another fine Greek scholar says, "Properly often to dip, often to wash."

Richardson, in his large English Dictionary, published in England many years ago, defines baptize in the same way Greek writers define baptizo. Of baptize he says, "To dip or merge frequently; sometimes, to sink, to plunge, to immerse."

Thus it will be seen that Liddell and Scott, Donegan, Passaw, and Bretschneider all define baptizo to dip repeatedly, and therefore class it among frequentative verbs. Against this view I know of no Greek dictionary in the world. Several of them are silent, but not one to the reverse. Four, as quoted above, say, it means repeated action, while all the rest are silent, therefore the weight of evidence falls on the side of those who speak, while those who are silent are not regarded as witnesses on either side. You will therefore perceive that it is a one-sided case, even among modern writers, saying nothing about the general practice of antiquity.

If Christ had intended to teach but one action in baptism it seems strange that he should have selected a frequentative verb with which to convey the idea, for the language was rich in words, with meanings adapted to every case and purpose. And then it seems strange that all the ancient Greeks, in whose mother tongue the New Testament was written should have understood the language to teach true immersion if Christ had intended it to teach single immersion. It would seem strange that not one of them could understand the language, especially when they were so familiar with it.

We hope our friend will be successful in his search after the truth, and when once found, embrace it with a willing heart. J. H. M.

CALIFORNIA MISSION FUND.

BELOW we give a list of money received at this office for the California mission. It is coming very slow, and unless the churches be pretty prompt, there will not be a sufficient amount in by Sept. 1st. Each congregation should send one or two dollars. Do not delay, but act immediately:

THE STEIN AND RAY DEBATE.

ALL the arrangements are now completed for the written debate between Bro. J. W. Stein and Mr. D. B. Ray. The discussion will last over one year, and will likely prove the most important thing of the kind in which our people ever took part. It is to be published in the Baptist Battle Flag, a Baptist paper which has a large circulation among the Baptists, and will thus enable Bro. Stein to set before them a complete defense of our faith and practice. Both sides will also be published in the BROTHERS AT WORK, thus giving our people a chance of reading, not only what Bro. Stein can say in our defense, but all that Mr. Ray is able to say against us and our practice.

One reason why this debate will be important is because it will be so extensively read, both papers having a very large circulation, and in consequence of the debate will be read by thousands who otherwise would not take the papers. It will create a still greater interest in the search after truth, and may be instrumental in bringing to light many things that will prove valuable to both parties.

The discussion, as now agreed upon, will commence Oct. 1st, this being as soon as both parties can get ready, and will give our agents time to send in the names of those wishing to commence with the debate. We were in hopes of having it commence sooner, but the first of October is as soon as Mr. Ray could be prepared for it.

We now expect all our readers to work and greatly increase the circulation of the BROTHERS AT WORK, for there are thousands not now taking the paper who would like to read the debate. Besides, it costs us considerable, we defraying our part of the expenses, all of which we cheerfully do for the cause of truth.

The paper will be sent from October 1st to the end of next year (1879) for $1.75 which will be an inducement sufficient to prompt many to subscribe if they are shown the paper and told of the Written Discussion. Show the paper to all your neighbors and see what can be done. Go to work immediately, procure all the subscribers you can and send them in at once that we may have time to enter them all in our books before Oct. 1st. In this way we will have all the names in before the discussion commences, and will therefore know just how many copies to print.

As a little compensation for trouble, we make the following offer:

1. If any one, who is now taking the paper, will send us one new name, and $1.75, we will send him one copy of Bro. Stein's pamphlet on Non-Conformity to the World. When sending in the name and money be sure and mention that you want the pamphlet.

2. If any one, who is now taking the paper, will send us six new names, and $10.50, we will mark his paper paid for, to the end of 1879. Parties availing themselves of this offer will mention it when they send in the money and names.

3. If any one, who is not taking the paper, will send six new names, and $10.50, he will receive an extra copy, free of charge, from the commencement of the debate to the end of 1879. Those availing themselves of this offer will please not fail to state that they are new subscribers, and hence entitled to a free copy.

4. Our regular agents, who have been working for our paper, will send in the names and money as fast as they can collect them, deducting ten per cent. from the money before sending it to us. This offer is to agents only.

5. Sample copies and prospectus will be sent free to all who wish to act as agents and collect subscribers.

6. It is not safe to send over $1.75 in a letter without registering. The better way is to send Post Office Order, or have the letter registered. Parties wishing to send $1.75 and cannot make the change, can send a one dollar bill and 75 cents in postage stamps.

Address all communications to MOORE & ESHELMAN, LaMar, Carroll Co., Ill.

ELDER J. A. Murray, of Waterloo, Iowa, has been badly hurt by falling in front of a harvester. He is improving slowly. Full particulars next week.

A LETTER from sister Hannah Kride fails to give her full address, hence we cannot fill her order till she forwards her address, as the State is omitted in her letter.

THOSE who have seen Bro. Mohler's Railroad Sermon express themselves highly pleased with it. They will be sent post paid, 3 copies, 10 cents; 12 copies, 30 cents; 100 copies, $2.00.

We do not keep the pamphlet entitled the Infidel Back-Duen for sale. Parties wishing it should address the publishers, H. L. Hastings, 342 Washington Street, Boston, Mass. Price, ten cents.

Two more have been baptized in Denmark, thus showing that the good work is going on, and the prospects for the little church are brightening up. Their meetings are largely attended, and becoming still more interesting.

OUR readers will please not send in any more orders for Family Rules and Regulations till further notice, as we are so crowded with pamphlet and job work that we must defer publishing them for the time being. Those who have sent in orders will bear with us a while longer.

We learn that one of the Sunday-schools in New Jersey has adopted the Sunday Lessons as published in the Children at Work. They are well adapted to Sunday-school purposes, and when the paper is published weekly will be just the thing to supply a long-felt want.

BROTHER John Shepherd, Elroy, Ill., of whom mention was made in a former number, expects to go West in October next. This is the way to spread the Truth. Move West, or some place where there are no preachers and go to work. There is plenty more good material of which to make good preachers. The harvest is great and more laborers are needed.

ORDERS for brother J. W. Stein's work on Non-Conformity to the World may be sent in now. It is a neatly printed, and well put up pamphlet, ably defending the faith and practice of the Brethren on that subject, and should be in the hands of all our readers. Price, 10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00. Sent post paid.

WHEN writing for publication the utmost caution should be used so as not to write that which is personal, purely local in its character and of no interest to the generality of our readers. Do not send us, for publication, an article that is driving at the faults of some brother or sister in your neighborhood. The better way would be to go and talk to them, and not spread their faults abroad. In all things we should exercise becoming prudence and charity.

THERE are seventeen cities in Nebraska which charge $1,000 each for licenses. Of course the saloon keeper loses nothing in the operation, as he charges the more for the whisky he sells. It all comes off of the poor, distressed men who drink. Supposing a town of 2,000 inhabitants has two saloons, each paying $1,000 license. It is evident that these saloons must sell at least $6,000 worth of liquor in order to be self-supporting. The greater part of this is paid by poor, hard-working men who need every cent they can earn to support their families, and the plea is, that the town needs this license money to keep up the town expenses, hence the granting of license. They take some $3,000 away from poor, needy children and wives in order to get $2,000 to keep up the sidewalks &c. Why not banish the saloons and whisky selling, let the poor children and distressed wives have the benefit of hard earned money, and tax the income of the rich for keeping up town expenses?

A MASONIC FUNERAL.

I stood beside an open grave,
Reminded with grief and pain;
It seemed to me, in that dark hour,
I ne'er should feel again.

Friends closely stood about me
On that sad, dreary day;
A voice fell on the silent air,
Clear spoken: "Let us pray."

The man who spoke had never bent
To heaven his worldly pride;
A scoffer and a scorner he
Of Christ, the crucified.

A man of God stood silent by,
With grave and reverent air,
And listened, without word or sign,
Into the seer's prayer.

He prayed that he, my precious dead,
The object of my love,
Might meet his brethren all once more
In the Grand Lodge above.

I wondered, as I thought of him,
In that strange place of rest,
If I should ever see his face,
Or lean upon his breast.

It seemed that our good works alone
They dared to base their claim,
For they sought not heaven's favor
In the Redeemer's name.

And I wondered, as I listened
To that strange, unchristian prayer,
What would light that distant lodge of theirs,
If the Savior was not there.

Would it not be utter darkness?
Would it not be burning pain?
Where those gathered who had never Called upon the Savior's name?

The brethren listened reverently
To what was sin to me,
And answered to the master's words,
"Amen; so mote it be."

A holy order, verily!
In bitterness, I said,
To choose a wicked man like that
To pray beside their dead.

And now I often feel the pang
That hour of trial gave,
When a reckless unbeliever prayed
Beside my father's grave.

A MEMORIAL.

On the Lamented Death of a Mother in Israel—Sister Prudence Price.

BY D. B. MENTZER.

DEATH has again entered the fold of the Chief Shepherd and claimed one of our members. This again brings to vivid remembrance the solemn fact that his relentless power is still manifest, and that each one of us are approaching the same dread foe, who shall sooner or later bear us to the "narrow cell." O how solemn it is to die, and leave all the pleasant and endearing associations of earth! But it is just as solemn a thing to live when we reflect, each day is one less of life to live, and one nearer the cold, dark river of death. The days that are past will come back to us no more forever, but their records of our deeds for good or evil will come up for or against us when "the dead that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and come forth."

"How careful then ought we to live,
With what religious fear!"

Such are the thoughts that should engage our minds under the solemn and signal providences of our Lord.

OUR SISTER.

The subject of this brief sketch was born April 22, 1813—died July 1, 1878. Her virgin name was Prudence Funk; was first married to brother Daniel Stever, deceased, and last to the late brother Jacob Price, a deacon for many years in our Antietam congregation. Our sister resided at the "Home Place," where, we remember, the yearly meeting was held in 1866. It was in the attendant cares of this meeting by over-exertion that she evidently contracted the cause of shortening her days and ending her years, with great sufferings. We mention this as a warning to others. Her love for the church was unbounded, and many were her labors of love. All strangers found her pleasant and hospitable, and kind to the poor. Members of the church found her self-sacrificing and untiring in her exceeding kindness to all. Her good works were many, and proved her love for her Lord and Master.

Though much afflicted during the last year, she was enabled by the grace of God to endure with patience, and calmly await the decisive hour. Her and the Scriptures was her refuge and comforter. In the triumphs of a living, clinging faith she crossed the chilly waters of death. Free from the cares and anxieties of this life, and free from the suffering of death, she rests on the shores of the pure River of blissful life, and enjoys the light that never dims. She sleeps in Jesus.

FAITH IN CHRIST

She saw the footsteps that He trod,
His zeal inspired her breast,
And following her fortunate Lord,
Gains now the promised rest.

The funeral service was held in Price's meeting-house, and the interment in the commodious burying ground adjoining.

The sermon was drawn from these words: "Return unto thy rest, O my soul!" Psalm 116: 7. May the bereaved find "the consolation of Christ." May the call unto repentance not remain unheeded, but devoutly accepted by the unbelieving. How solemn the warning! How dangerous the delays when the soul is in danger.

THE LOST SPECTACLES.

GRANDPA, one night, lost his spectacles, and two or three of us undertook to find them; after looking for some time to no purpose, we gave up the search, and grandpa at last found them on top of his head. We all had a hearty laugh, in which he as heartily joined, and he then began to talk to us on the advantage, when anything was lost, of looking in the proper place; and he thus proceeded: "Almost all young people indulge in dreams that are in themselves useless. When they hear of the wile world, they think of what great things they would do, if they were here, or there, or yonder; or, if they had this or that, or the other. But depend upon it, almost all that is worth having, or at least, all that would be good for us to possess, may be obtained wherever we are, if we seek for it by diligently and uprightly using the faculties God has given us, and look to Him for His blessing. We may look for a thousand things, in a thousand ways, but it will be in vain, if we neglect to look for them in the right place.

This is a warning that I ought to manifest much forbearance, for it would not be right in me to be severe on others for doing that which I have so frequently done myself. Many years was I looking for peace, and found it not; and the only reason I did not find it, was, I did not look for it in the right place; if I had, I doubt not that I should have found it.

First, I thought that money would assuredly give it me, and I set to work, determined that whoever might be poor, I would not; and if working hard and spending little is the way to obtain riches, I verily believe I should have been rich, had it not occurred that one day, opening the Bible, I read about the rich man in the parable. This account, and the verse that told me that it was 'easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven,' so startled me that I was afraid to be rich, lest when I died, my riches might bear testimony against me, that I had not relieved the wants of the distressed, and made a good use of my riches. One Sunday afternoon I heard a sermon from the text, 'There is no peace to the wicked.' Thus I was instructed, that where wickedness was, peace could never dwell. This brought me back again to my Bible, where I read of that peace which passeth all understanding. So seeing that I had all along sought for peace everywhere but in the right place, I sought it where it is to be found, and that is in the Gospel of our Redeemer, which tells us that Jesus Christ came into the world to receive sinners. I had before been instructed that I was a sinner, but now I was taught to feel it, and the promises of the Gospel brought home to my heart, by the influence of the Holy Ghost, gave me that peace which the world giveth not, and cannot take away.

Be assured, if with sincerity you seek in the same place, you will also find it, for he that seeketh shall find, and to him that knocketh, to him it shall be opened. The Bible asks, "Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles?" And truly we may as reasonably expect them to do this, as to hope that we shall find many things that we want in the places we seek to obtain them. No, no; we shall never obtain till we look in the right place for them.

What a long story I am making about seeking things in the right place, and all because I happened to lose, for a few minutes, my spectacles. Well, what I am saying will not be in vain, if it will teach you to be a little more careful in seeking things aright. If you want money, seek it by diligence in your calling, and habits of frugality; if you want reputation, seek it by punctuality and integrity, and by the determination to excel in all you undertake; if you want friends, seek them by endeavoring to deserve them; but, if you want peace, you may look for it every way, and in every place, in vain, unless you seek from the Lord Jesus Christ, who died for our sins and rose for our justification.

You must remember that I did not look for my spectacles, before I found I had lost them. And so in like manner no one will look for anything heartily until he feels the want of it. My dear children, you will not seek peace till you have known sorrow; you will not seek a Savior until you know yourselves to be sinners; for, until then, you will feel no want of the one or the other.

The wide world is before you; many are its pleasures and many are its pains; both are necessary because both of them are through the grace of God, when sanctified to our souls are made instruments in doing us good, the former by making our hearts grateful, the latter by showing us our own weakness. But when the pleasures and pains of this world are passed, we shall enter on the pleasures or pain of a world that is eternal. What an overwhelming subject is this for reflection, and how is it that it does not frequently, as we are reminded of it, occupy more of our attention? Surely if it did, we should be diligent in our inquiries after the best information upon it, and be anxious to seek in the right place for that peace and assurance which can alone be obtained through the blood of the Cross, which God alone can give, and which He never will withhold from those who seek it in sincerity and truth. Seek it then in your earliest days and as sure as your grandpa is talking to you, so surely you shall find it.

HOME.

WHAT a hallowed name! How full of enchantment, and how dear to the heart! Home is the magic circle within which the weary spirit finds refuge; it is the sacred asylum to which the care-worn heart retreats to find rest from the toils and inquietudes of life.

Ask the lone wanderer, as he plods his tedious way, bent with the weight of age, and white with the tresses of years, ask him what is home? He will tell you, it is a green spot in memory; an oasis in a desert; a centre about which the fondest recollections of his grief-oppressed heart cling with all the tenacity of youth's first love. It was once a glorious, a happy reality, but now it rests only as an image of the mind.

Ask the little child, what is home? You will find that to him it is the world—he knows no other. The father's love, the mother's smile, the sister's embrace, the brother's welcome, throw about his home a heavenly halo, and make it as attractive to him as the home of the angels. Home is the spot where the child pours out its complaints, and it is the grave of all its sorrows. Childhood has its sorrows and its grievances, but home is the place where these are soothed and banished by the sweet lullaby of a fond mother's voice.

Home is the place of confidence. If home be indeed a home, treachery and deceit exist not there. The heart need not fear to unfold its grief, or unburden its sorrows, for here it will find sympathy, comfort, and cheering hope.

Home is a place of refuge. Tossed day by day upon the rough and stormy ocean of life—harassed by worldly cares, perplexed by worldly inquietudes, the weary spirit yearns after repose. It seeks and finds it in the refuge which home supplies. There the mind is at rest, the heart's turmoil becomes quiet, and the spirit basks in the peaceful delights of domestic love.

Yes, home is a place of rest—we feel it when we seek and enter it after the busy cares and trials of the day are over. We may find joy elsewhere, but it is not the joy—the satisfaction of home. Of the former the heart may soon tire; of the latter, never. In the former there is much formality; much heartlessness under the garb of friendship of the purest, truest character.

How often we hear persons speak of the home of their childhood. Their minds seem to delight in dwelling upon the recollections of joyous days, spent beneath the parental roof, when their young and happy hearts were as light and free as the birds. What a blessing it is, when weary with care, and burdened with sorrow, to have a home to which we can go, and there, in the midst of friends we love, forget our troubles, and dwell in peace and quietness. Home is the place where our hopes and happiness—our tears and sighs, have ever blended, and over it may the twin angels of purity and love ever hover, to guide it from unholy intrusion.

BORROWING TROUBLE.

BORROWING is a bad thing at the best; but "borrowing trouble" is perhaps the most foolish investment of "foreign capital" that a man or woman can make. An amusing instance of this species of "operation" is set forth in a "Down-East" newspaper, wherein a man thus related his experience, in a financial way, on the occasion of the failure of a local bank:

"As soon as I heard of it, my heart jumped right up into my mouth. 'Now,' thinks I, 'spose I got my bills on that bank? I'm gone if I hey—that's a fact.' So I put on my coat, and I 'put' for home just as fast as my legs would carry me; fact is, I run all the way. And when I got there, I looked keener, and found that I hadn't got no bills on that bank nor any other. Then I felt easier."

There have been a thousand instances of "borrowing trouble" when it was not a whit better "secured" than in this example.

FAMILY intimacy should never make brothers and sisters forget to be polite and sympathizing to each other. Those who contract thoughtless and rude habits towards the members of their own family, will be rude and thoughtless to all the world. But let the family intercourse be true, tender, and affectionate, and the manners of all uniformly gentle and considerate, and the members of the family thus trained, will carry into the world and society the habits of their childhood. They will require in their associates similar qualities; they will not be satisfied without mutual esteem, and the cultivation of the best affections, and their own character will be sustained by that faith in goodness which belongs to a mind exercised in pure and high thoughts.

"Don't write there," said one to a lad who was writing with a diamond pin on a pane of glass in a window. "Why not?" said he. "Because you can't rub it out." There are other things men should not do, because they cannot rub them out. A heart is aching for sympathy, and a cold, heartless word is spoken. The impression may be more durable than that of a diamond upon a glass. The glass may be broken, but the impression upon the heart lasts forever.

Come to Jesus.

BY M. MEYERS.

"Why sit we here until we die?" 2 Kings 7:13.
 At the gate of an Eastern city, once sat four leprous men, afflicted with that loathsome disease which is perhaps more typical of sin than any other known to the human family. These men, like the alarmed sinner, had come to a point in life, precarious in the extreme; not only were they afflicted with leprosy but starvation was staring them full in the face. Then said they one to another, "Why sit we here until we shall die? If we say, we will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there; and if we sit still here, we die also. Now therefore come, and let us fall unto the host of the Syrians. If they save us alive, we shall live; and if they kill us, we shall but die."

Just so, with the sinner when he as the prodigal son comes to himself, and sees his own filthiness, and inability to extricate himself, from the gulf of deep despair into which sin has plunged him, and not only plunged him, but like the wind carried him away from his father's house, away from Jesus his Saviour and elder brother and away from his eternal interest, the inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away. Then he cries in the anguish of his soul, What must I do? If I say, I will go into the city of the world, I shall die there; for there is no comfort, consolation nor peace in the world, but all is strife, wrangling, and confusion to the weary soul. And if I sit still here, I die also. Friendly sinner, come to God's host. Heb. 12: 22, 23, 24. He never forsakes the camp, but stands firm on the borders of Zion, for Jesus the Mediator of the New Covenant is there, through whom the fountain for sin and uncleanness was opened, Zech. 13: 1, and of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named. Yes, he is interceding for you and me. And his ambassadors are standing on the walls of Zion entreating you to come to this great deliverer, that is able to save to the uttermost, all that come unto God by him. If you remain away and die in your sins, where Christ and God are, you cannot come. — Can you for one moment bear the thought of being banished from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power, all on account of your own neglect and disobedience. — Accept now of life and salvation while it is called to-day, and be faithful unto the end, and you shall receive a crown of life that fadeth not away.

Harvest.

"For since the fathers fell asleep, all things come to pass as they were."

OFFERS have dared to say where is it? But it approaches—it ripens apace. Man's seed-times and harvests make their annual round. He ploughs, sows, reaps, consumes and sows again. God's harvest time seems long to the sower, but as sure as words of eternal truth, the same power that caused the walls to crumble in years gone by, at the blast blown by priests of the Lord, will cause dead men to rise up and stand ripe for the sickle, when the last trumpet shall sound and the angelic host shall come forth as reapers, in the presence of the Lord. When I contemplate the scene and the many, who instead of improving the talent given them of God, empty it in the service of darkness, scolding and discarding the teachings of him who spake as never man spake, I feel like exclaiming with one of old: "O that my head were waters and mine eyes were a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." Reader if you are trampling the word of God beneath your feet, or substituting your own creed for heaven's ordained one, stop and consider, turn your steps, for the harvest will come. Death is daily hurrying souls to eternity, and soon the boatman will bid us cross the stream. Though the bloom of health be on our cheeks, yet we are not exempt from the poisoned dart of the dark-winged angel. But a few weeks ago a young man, in the little village of Hudson, left home in the morning in the vigor of health, in the glory of manhood; but ere the sun had sunk to rest, the tidings came to his parents: "Your son is no more." His body lay in the dark waters of the Mackinaw, his spirit had gone to God who gave it, to receive the reward for the deeds done in the body, whether good or evil. He had on the previous night dreamed that he had lost his life in the Mackinaw. The dream had been repeated three times, and he told his mother ere he left home, that he had so dreamed, but he made merriment and instead of obeying his mother, who plead with him to stay, he lost his life; and so with many to-day who are scoffing at God's word.

DIED.

Obituaries should be brief, written on but one side of the paper, and separate from all other business.

LINDEMANN.—Near Waynesboro, Pa., after several weeks' illness, July 16th, 1878, friend Catherine Elizabeth Lindeman, aged 64 years, 3 months and 24 days.

The deceased was the wife of friend Adam Lindeman, our sexton at Price's church. This is a German family, having emigrated to this country a number of years ago. They had a warm feeling for the church of the Brethren, being almost regular attendants at our services at the meeting-house near by; though they understood but little of our preaching as it is now all English. As far as they had learned the doctrine, they were in great sympathy with us. — About ten years ago, they had about concluded to unite with us, but a zealous member of the church of Luther persuaded them, that it would be a great sin to renounce their faith. How many people there are who suffer themselves to be persuaded to the desire of men and contrary to the will of God with whom we have to do. — May she rest in the mercies of God.

Funeral services conducted by Bro. J. F. Oller and others.

BAKER.—Also in the Antietam Congregation July 20th, 1878, in hope of a blessed immortality, our venerable sister Nancy Baker in the 95th year of her age.

Sister Baker was born April 12th, 1784. — She was a sister to Elder Jacob Holsinger, deceased, who at one time presided over this congregation. She was an aunt to Elder Daniel Holsinger of Marion, Iowa, and brother Jacob Holsinger, a deacon in this congregation. She is said to have been truly a mother in Israel. — Funeral services by brother Jacob F. Oller. — Text: Rev. 14: 12, 13.

PRICE.—Near Waynesboro, Pa., July 1st, 1878, departed in peace, our beloved sister Prudence Price, aged 65 years, 2 months and 9 days. Sermon preached by Bro. J. F. Oller from Psalm 116: 7. (See Memorial.)

The Great Eclipse.

ACCORDING to your request, I will try and give your readers an account of the eclipse of the sun, that took place here the 29th of July. I was as particular in my observations as I could be; had the great privilege of being almost on the exact line of its greatest shadow. Large numbers of scientific persons had come to Colorado with the express purpose of taking observations of the eclipse; one, a party of ladies of Vassar College, and also a party from London, England came over to observe this great event of the times. Great fears were entertained for some days previous, that the sun would be obscured by clouds, as such had been the case every afternoon for a week or ten days, but the day was the brightest we had for a long time. Some attribute this to the efficacy of the special prayers that were offered in the Denver pulpits, Sunday before, that the day might be clear. There were but a few scattering fleeting clouds to be seen, and the viewing of the eclipse was a "grand success."

A description as we saw it: At two o'clock and twenty minutes, there was a small notch noticed, on the right side of the sun's surface, made by the encroachment of the moon. This first appearance was a little below the right side center. This notch gradually grew larger and larger, as the sun's surface was apparently absorbed by the moon, slowly passing over towards the left side of the sun; when half over, the sun was a crescent shape, like a half moon. Seventy minutes elapsed while the moon was passing over, until totality took place. The dusky shadow continued to grow darker and darker; something like evening twilight until the last ray of the sun was observed, when a sudden darkness over-spread the earth; the darkness came so sudden that it was similar to dropping a curtain before a light. The moment totality took place, a flash of light seemed to spread over the face of the moon, which before this, was of a dark color. Around the edge of the moon was a small, livid, shining circle, and from this or immediately back of it, there shone forth the most magnificent halo of a glorious light I ever saw, called the Corona. The light seemed to spring out in spiral flashes or bright burning rays. While totality lasted, which was nearly three minutes, the stars shone out like on a moonlight night; the darkness was so great that we could not see plainly objects a few rods distant; it was difficult to see the hands of a watch. The appearance around us was like it might be midnight, with a dim moonshine. — The next change of interest was the sudden bursting of the rays of the sun, from behind the right edge of the moon. The sudden light looked like the flashing of a meteor; it was something grand to behold, and in a few seconds, daylight came as sudden as it disappeared. — Nothing was more grand or interesting than the luminous light, that seemed to spring up all around the horizon, something similar to the Aurora borealis, which arose upward, and the darkness of the heavens seemed to roll away "like a scroll." Never had we seen anything to compare to this, it was the most interesting and imposing sight we ever beheld. Surely those things declare the wonders of God's workmanship and the magnificence of all his handiwork. It was a little diverting to see the pigeons flocking to their cote, and the chickens to their roost, and then hear them come forth crowing like in the morning. We continued to observe the receding moon, as it passed off the left limb or side of the sun—a little above the centre of the left side, and then the sun shone in all his wonted fullness, and all seemed to go on in the even tenor of its way. The eclipse lasted until 4 o'clock and 35 minutes less a fraction. It is said we shall not have another similar one until 1900. It is claimed by the professor from England, that at the time of the totality of the eclipse, they discovered a new planet in close proximity to the sun. His report will be looked for with great interest, by the scientific world. The government will furnish an interesting report from the party that took observations from the top of Pike's Peak. There was also a party on Long's Peak—or at least intended to go up. Edison, the inventor of the telephone, with his party, were to be at Rawlins, on the U. P. R. R. He expected to test a new invention of his—something to test the heat of the corona that surrounds the sun or moon at the time of the eclipse.

The world is seeking after wisdom that is no special profit to the salvation of the soul, yet if used properly may all be right, provided with the wisdom thus gained, we neglect not that wisdom that comes from above.

GLEANINGS.

From J. S. Flory.—Our regular quarterly church meeting was held on last Saturday; four additions by letter of members living in the Southern part of the State; members here in union and love. It was proposed and agreed at our meeting that we make a quarterly contribution, as each member feels freely to do, for the brethren's work of evangelism. We think we are safe in saying, our congregation will contribute on an average of one dollar each, during the year for that purpose. Also raised our quota for the committee to California.

Longmont, Colorado.

From Ashland, Ohio.—I have just returned from a successful trip in the East, in behalf of Ashland College. I found on my return that the College building was progressing finely, notwithstanding the wet weather they are having here. The basement is done and nearly half of the next story, and progressing at the rate of 15,000 bricks per day. Hope all the friends of Ashland College, (and we know no reason why all should not be friends) will come forward with their contributions so that the trustees may be enabled to complete the College building as well as the Boarding-halls as soon as possible, as there are many ready to come to school as soon as the school is opened. Do not wait to be solicited but send in your address to H. K. Meyers, secretary, and he will furnish you with the necessary blank for your subscription. E. C. PARKER.

From Buffalo, Mo.—In reading the BRETHREN AT WORK I have noticed, that the Brethren are visiting and preaching in all parts, excepting this place. We would be glad to see Brethren come here, and preach and visit with us. Those that wish to look for homes would do well to come here and look, before buying elsewhere. Our little church is improving slowly. J. S. BEMIS-DORNER.

From Milford, Ind.—The Turkey Creek district is still moving along slowly, and many of its members are rejoicing in the good things of the Lord. Drones are never very profitable in a good working bee. The honey bee will not allow a drone to idle away the time in the hive; so the church had better see that none of its members become lukewarm, neither cold or hot, says the voice of Inspiration. The honey bee teaches us a beautiful lesson, never to idle away our precious moments.

Of late two souls were made willing to unite with the people of the Lord; one who was baptized, had to be carried into the water, being very weak of consumption. Some of the neighbors said, we would kill her, and so great was the dread on their mind, that they went to the sick sister and tried to discourage her, telling her the water would take her breath, as we knew a strong breeze of wind she could not stand. So I was called in a few hours before baptism by the applicant, and I saw her faith had become weak; and had to encourage her strongly, before she would consent to be baptized. Many went to the water to witness. The sad scene. When we carried her into the water, some had to go away, saying, they could not behold the sight. This person that opposed came to the baptismal scene, and with a scornful laugh, tried to oppose the work in which the minister was so zealously engaged. While we carried her to a house near by, she felt as if the couch of old, to go on her way rejoicing. This sister is getting stronger in the faith, and now calls the church to come and hold a little communion with her, before she falls asleep in Jesus. J. H. MILLER.

Something About Giants.

PLINY relates that in the time of Claudius Caesar, there was a man named Gobburns, brought by the Emperor from Arabia before, who was nine feet four inches high. The tallest man that has been seen in our times.

In the reign of Augustus Caesar, the tall forms of Rasis and Secundilla might have been seen, whose bodies were preserved in a museum, in the Sallustian Gardens, and each of whom measured ten feet, three inches in height.

The Emperor Maximus was nine feet high, and was in the habit of using his wife's bracelet as a thumb-ring. His shoe was a foot longer than that of any other man, and he could draw a carriage which two oxen could not move. He ate usually four pounds' weight of flesh, and drank six gallons of wine daily.

Josephus tells of Elezer, a Jew, a giant over ten feet high, who was one of the hostages whom the King of Persia sent to Rome after peace.

Plot in his "Oxfordshire," 1676, says that a skeleton seventeen feet high was then to be seen in the town hall in Lucerne. It had been found under an oak in Willison, near the village of Reyden.

To this list we might add the name of Col. Goshen, an Arab who was born in Jerusalem. We met him a few years ago, and conversed pleasantly with him. He was a fine looking man and well built. He stood about eight feet in height and weighed over five hundred pounds. There are other persons who may properly be called giants.

Lost on the plains, the man had killed the horse, cut him open and crawled inside, thinking to escape, perishing of cold; but the animal's flesh froze solid, confining the man in a tomb, from which there was no escape.

MALTA—Among the British Indian troops now quartered at Malta, there are some black Jews, members of the community of the Bani Israel, existing on the coast of Malabar. They claim to be descendants of the Jews sent by King Solomon to India to collect ivory and precious stones. BEYOND THE HILLS.

Beyond the hills where suns go down,
And brightly beam on as they go,
I see the land of fair renown,
The land which I so soon shall know.

Above the dissonance of time,
And discords of its angry words,
I hear the everlasting chime,
The music of inspiring chords.

I bid it welcome; and my haste
To join it cannot break delay,
O song of morning, come at last,
And ye who sing it come away!

O song of light and dawn of bliss,
Sound over earth and fill these skies!
No ever, ever, ever cease
Thy soul-entrancing melodies!

Glad song of this disordered earth,
Which loudly voices their shall sing;
Praise for creation's second birth,
And glory to creation's King.

"ESAU HAVE I HATED."

ONE of the first assertions which we are liable to meet in controversy with the skeptics of to-day is, that the Bible teaches that God hated Esau before he was born, and they do not believe in any such God as that. And a good many ministers and church members, will admit the assertion, but say that it is "a great mystery," something which we do not understand. A large proportion of these great mysteries are mysteries only to those persons who are too lazy to read their Bibles or to careless to seek to understand them. The quizzical king who puzzled the heads of his wise men by inquiring why, when a fish was put into a vessel of water, the vessel would weigh no more than it did before, found at last his match in the man who asked him if the fact was really so? It is best before drawing inference to be sure of our facts.

Now the fact is, that this statement about God's hating Esau before he was born, is a barefaced misrepresentation or a most stupid blunder. There is not a passage in the whole Bible that says God hated Esau or anybody else before he was born, and if people instead of jumbling Scripture into one indistinguishable mass, would consider what they read and where they read it, it would save them from such absurd mistakes.

The facts are as follows:—when Rebekah, the wife of Isaac, inquired of the Lord, he said to her: "Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels; and the one people shall be stronger than the other people; and the elder shall serve the younger." Gen. 25. Esau was born first and, according to the eastern law of primogeniture, the firstborn became the head of the family, the other members of the family yielding him allegiance. In this case, by divine ordination, this order was reversed, and the birthright was to pass to Jacob instead of Esau. The brothers being twins, and the difference in their ages perhaps not being an hour, it would seem wise that the question of primacy should be settled in some authoritative manner, to avoid all dispute between the children thus born. Accordingly, without the slightest injustice, in the wisdom of God, according to his purpose, for which, no doubt, there were good reasons, though he was not under the slightest obligation to give them, he said, that the elder should serve the younger, and that the second born of the twins should be the head of the patriarchal family instead of Esau, whose subsequent conduct showed him to be probably less fit for the position than his brother Jacob. A man who would sell his birthright for one morsel of meat, certainly did not prize it as he did who was glad to be a purchaser of that which was so lightly esteemed. And the fact of Jacob's purchasing the birthright when it had been already promised that Esau should serve him, showed his desire to extinguish all other titles, and avoid all occasion for controversy.

Jacob's conduct towards Esau is not in all respects to be defended or imitated, though their differences were finally peaceably adjusted,—but the loss of the birthright, combined with his heathenish marriage alliance, caused Esau to remove to Edom, where, after varied fortunes, the nation which sprang from his loins, combined with other people who doubtless rallied around his standard, grew exceedingly wicked, and in after years was sorely chastised and made desolate. In view of this fact the prophet Malachi, when threatening Israel for their sins, says, "I have loved you, saith the Lord; yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us? Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord; yet I loved Jacob, and I hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waste for the dragons of the wilderness." Mal. 1: 2, 3.

When was this spoken? Before the children were born? By no means, but thirteen hundred years after Esau was dead and in his grave, the prophet relating the calamities which fell upon the sinful nation of the Edomites, says: "I hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waste." The nation of Israel had been preserved through their obedience to the law of God, and in fulfillment of the covenant made with Abraham; and the descendants of Esau had been hated and punished in consequence of their iniquity, hence the prophet continues: "Whereas Edom saith, We are unpunished, but we will return and build the desolate places; thus saith the Lord of hosts, They shall build, but I will throw down; and they shall call them, the border of wickedness, and, The people against whom the Lord hath indignation forever." Mal. 1: 4. Edom is desolate to-day on account of the wickedness of its inhabitants; the land of Israel is also desolate, but not so utterly, nor is it without promise and hope.

When the apostle Paul, in writing to the Romans, spoke of the distinction between the children of Abraham according to the flesh and those according to the promise, as it is illustrated in the case of Ishmael and Isaac, he also declared that the similar principle of choice was exhibited in the case of the children of Isaac. "For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of Him that calleth; it was said unto her, the elder shall serve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." Rom. 9: 11-13. Persons who have read this carelessly conclude that before these children were born, it was written, "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated," which conclusion is entirely contrary to the facts in the case. It was before the children were born that it was said, the elder shall serve the younger; it was thirteen hundred years after the children were dead that it was written, "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated," and Paul clearly makes a distinction between what was said to the mother of the children, and what was written by the prophets long years afterwards, which simply confirmed the prediction uttered before the children's birth. Thus vanishes another of the bugbears of skeptical criticism.—The Christian.

ECHOES FROM THE EAST.

A Harvest-meeting. — An Occasion of Thanksgiving. — Ministerial Aid. — The Sabbath Well Improved. — The Church Edified. — A Special Love-feast. — An Interesting Sabbath Service. — One of the Lord's Afflicted.

[From Our Special Correspondent.]

WAYNESBORO, PA., AUGUST 5.

IT gives me pleasure to state that our brethren and sisters in this section of the Brotherhood have held a meeting of thanksgiving to God as a signal return of gratitude for our abundant wheat harvest. Probably, no such crop has crowned the tillers of the ground for some years. Surely the giver of all good gifts is worthy of many cordial thanks for these temporal blessings.

According to appointment, this meeting was held in the Welly meeting-house on the 27th ult., at 2 P. M. All were made glad to have the presence of ministering brethren Ephraim W. Stoner, of Union Bridge and Amos C. Kaylor, of New Windsor, Md. Brother Stoner spoke on the text: "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, cold and heat, and Summer and Winter, and day and night shall not cease." Gen. 8: 22. Such copious temporal blessings should call forth abundant spiritual offerings from the altars of our hearts. O that we could understand how very much we are indebted to our Heavenly Father, then we should be enabled to give to the necessities of the church. How ready and liberal we ought to be whenever the church calls for money to pay its current expenses. The Lord gives to us, let us give to the Lord again.

Next day was Sabbath. At an early hour a large assembly had gathered into the meeting-house. After the usual manner of opening the services, the fourteenth chapter of John's Gospel was read by one of the deacons. Brother Kaylor then discoursed upon the words of Jesus: "If ye love Me, Keep My commandments." We learned that

1. Jesus has the right to command.
2. His commands are right.
3. We are right only when we keep His commands.

Brother S. followed in a hearty application of the subject to saint and sinner. Come brethren, let us have more such preaching, for we "stand in the way, and ask for the old paths." We believe indeed that the old paths are the surest and safest. I would love to note some excellent remarks and illustrations, but do not desire to make our letter too prolix. In this connection would say, we had a very pleasant after-noon meeting, and then in the evening, these brethren preached for us in our meeting-house here in town. May our beautiful Father abundantly reward our dear brethren for their labors of love.

When we use the expression "special Love-feast" we mean one appointed between the time of our regular feasts, and at the special request of members whose age or infirmities do not permit them to unite with the congregation at the time of the regular "feast of charity." Our regular Love-feast was held on the 3th of June last, and was a very interesting occasion; but the Love-feast which we will note in this communication, was appointed at the request of our venerable sister Susan Shockey. Her virgin name was Bonedrake, and is a widow. For several years past she has been blind. She is in her seventy-eighth year. Notwithstanding her age and affliction, she enjoys the service of Christ. Though aged, the Lord renews her strength in her profession of faith. Though blind, she sees Him who is the Light of the world, and the brightness of the glory of God. The fire of God's love kindles her heart's best affection—the love of the Church. She evidently enjoyed this little Love-feast, and it is hoped it was a refreshing season to her soul, as she approaches the final conflict.

We shall long remember this occasion. It was on the evening of the 3rd instant. The quiet, balmy evening contributed to make it a solemn communion with Christ and His disciples. About a score of members participated, and more than that number of neighbors had gathered there, seemingly enjoying the occasion with marked solemnity. The members seemed to enter into the spirit of the service, and we trust that the Lord's benediction will rest upon all for great good.

On the next day one of our regular appointments, was at the Amsterdam meeting-house. Good attention, for which this place is noted. The 194th hymn of our collection introduced the service with an excellent sentiment. How much there is in that precious hymn. The 152nd was lined and sung to the praise of God. After an exhortation, we knelt at a throne of grace.

The 14th chapter of John's Gospel was read by a deacon brother, as usual. One of the two ministering brethren present there discoursed upon the 17th verse, bringing forth many good words and making many practical suggestions. After testimony was borne by the other minister, he lined the 437th hymn and exhorted to prayer, after which that beautiful and loved chorus was sung, commencing

"Pass me not O gentle Savior Hear my humble cry." &c.

We love to think of such good meetings. They are seasons when we get very near the cross—the best and sweetest hours of the life we now live, but after awhile we will only have to regret that we did not more appreciate them and use them as means of grace to rise in the higher life—the life of Jesus.

We spent the afternoon in a dear brother's family where is one of the Lord's afflicted. May our Lord abundantly bless and sanctify sister Annie. A better day is coming. A life free from all affliction can be attained to through the merits of our sufficient Savior. May He make us all ready for His glorious appearing.

THIS BODY.

BY SUSAN BOUNDREE.

THE body is a poor residence for the soul. At first it was a noble structure, but it has lost much of its nobleness through sin. It now lets in many annoyances, and is the seat of much pain. It is subject to trials and temptations, and groans with its burdens. Nor will the groans cease until our breathings are no more.

Believers in Christ sometimes fancy themselves alone in their troubles and feel so lonely. Christian friends, neglect not to call upon them and comfort them; if you fail, the poor and lonely believer will feel grieved and you may lose a blessing.

Refreshing as the presence and spiritual communications of a fellow Christian may be, you will find the presence of the Master far more so. God has said, that He will be with His people in every trial. How sweet is rest to the weary, yet how little rest do the Lord's people enjoy here. But they shall rest in the presence of the Lord, and the poor, weary and diseased body shall lose all its pains and troubles in the grave. Weariness stops with the grave, but rest belongs to the Christian's eternity. There no aching heads, no weary limbs, no broken hearts, no troubled souls will be found. Here the rest of the body is often disturbed, but over there all will be rest and peace.

Ever live (misfortune excepted) within your income.

When you retire to bed think over what you have done during the day.

JUDGMENT.

BY GEORGE D. ZOLLERS.

IT WAS a long time ago,
 When the angels were sent,
 To pronounce the dread doom,
 On Gomorah and Sodom;
 And deliver the just,
 Who in God had their trust,
 From the cities devoted,
 To pleasure and lust;
 O horrible night,
 When the righteous man plead
 With his kindred to flee,
 While vengeance delayed,
 The dread morning appeared,
 And destruction was near,
 While the angels were urging,
 The flight of their charges,
 What a moment of awe!
 When the righteous withdraw,
 And God executes,
 His most terrible law!
 No pen can describe
 The grim moment of gloom,
 When the wicked must meet,
 Their terrible doom.
 So will come the great day,
 Of vengeance and wrath,
 When Justice shall wield,
 The grim sword of destruction;
 And Jehovah's dread ire,
 Will open in fire.
 O the judgments of God,—
 Both certain and dire;
 In anguish most burning,
 The sinner must wail,
 When cries for relief,
 Can no more avail.
 O sinner repent
 While mercy still pleads,
 That your soul may be spared,
 In the day of God's vengeance:
 Entreat of the Lord,
 His grace to afford,
 That you may be reconciled—
 Now by His Word;
 And when the deep wailings—
 Of woe shall arise,
 Your soul may repose,
 With God in the skies.

SMALL THINGS.

BY A. D. GNAGBY.

"For who hath despised the day of small things?" Zech. 4:10.

IT seems that the hand of Zerubbabel became discouraged in laying the foundation of the house spoken of in this chapter. This was probably because they could not perform the amount of work they desired. They despised small things.

Small things, in our days, are not appreciated as they should be. It is not uncommon to find people, who if they cannot reach the goal with one grand leap, turn back and give up in despair. This is not common in one branch of business only, but in every pursuit of life, church as well as any other. There are preachers who become discouraged if they can do but little at a time. There are people who would rather do nothing than work for fifty cents per day. Such people should learn that all large things are made up of small ones. There is nothing so small that cannot become large; nothing so weak that cannot become strong, and nothing so ignorant that cannot become wiser.

Take for example, the small grain of wheat, plant it and you will reap a mere handful, plant again, and you will perhaps reap a bushel, keep on and you will next have a bin full—next your granary will be filled, lastly you will have the ships upon the sea filled, or enough to feed the entire world. All from that small, simple grain.

The large oak in the forest sprung from a small, tiny acorn. Little by little the acorn absorbs from the mother earth nourishment, until finally there stands a large tree, stretching its limbs far above our heads, serving as a house for birds, squirrels &c. Again, observe the little stream that flows from the side of a hill, so small that it could be made dry by merely satisfying your thirst. As it flows along, it receives a stream of similar size, until it becomes a stream of roaring waters, flowing through the valleys, rolling over rocks, seeking its way into the mighty ocean,—the ocean, almost without bottom, reaching from the shores of America to the shore of far-distant Europe and Asia, from the North pole to the South pole, bearing vessels of many thousand tons, all made up of drops of water.

So you will find it in life. The smallest things often determines your future destiny. I am told that on the top of the Alleghany mountain stands a house whose roof divides the water that falls from above. Falling on the East side, it finds its way first into the rolling Mississippi, thence into the Gulf, and finally into the ocean. The least puff of wind will cause a drop of water to fall on the West side of the roof, and amazing what a change in its course! What a great change a small thing can produce! That little puff of wind has caused many drops of water to find their way into the ocean by way of the Mississippi, instead of directly East into the ocean. The change is not in the amount of water, but in the direction of its course. Just as small things as that little puff of wind often change the entire direction of persons. I once heard a man say, that he was about to unite with the church and follow a life that would be acceptable in the sight of God. But, he says, when he had made up his mind to join the church, there occurred a small thing in the church which was not so pleasing to him, but in my estimation it was only a trifle, and he at once abandoned his movement.

Dear reader, stop right here and reflect for a moment over the past. Can you form any perception of the great change there would have been, had this small thing not occurred in the church? O that we could once learn to know small things; sometimes we should appreciate them, and at others despise them, it depends entirely upon the nature of the small act; but let us learn the effect,—the wrong and the good of small things; then we are able to judge whether to despise or appreciate them. Take care of the minutes and the hours are cared for. Keep small troubles and trifles out of the church, and a great disturbance will never occur.

The little Dutch vessel that brought a few negroes to Jamestown, Va., in 1620, and sold them as slaves, was a small circumstance at the time, and may be yet to you, but from it the most momentous consequences ensued,—consequences that long after created an internal disturbance, rent the republic with strife, and moistened it with blood and tears. Cromwell, when he was taken on board the ship to depart for an unknown land, was about to commit suicide, when a few words from the lips of his friend saved him, nothing great in these words, but the result must come. Cromwell afterwards revolutionized the entire map of Europe.

Washington, in his youth had decided to be a sailor and make his home on the rolling deep. When about on the verge of departure, his mother would not restrain from weeping. Thank God that he had a kind and tender-hearted mother,—a mother who had feeling for her son. Small as was the weeping of his mother, it stopped him from going to sea.

Washington, afterwards led the American army, fighting for liberty and independence. He won that glorious victory which fixed the fate of two nations. Finally he became the first President of this glorious and enlightened republic, the foundation of which he himself laid. The little blaze, with which the burning of Chicago commenced, could have been extinguished by a mere breath, yet, the entire business part of that beautiful city was laid waste by it. What a destruction resulted from a small thing. The small point of the pen has performed wonders of wonders. It has caused Christian people to neglect their duty, it has brought some nations to destruction, and others to fame and renown.

The heavy cannon ball can be sent through the air with amazing speed by the movement of your finger. The little ball that came whizzing from the pistol, killed the ruler of our country,—A. Lincoln, a great result from a small thing again. By it, our nation was thrown back five years, and passed sorrow and mourning over the whole country. Lastly, we will consider the little infant babe in the cradle. Does it not seem as though nothing could be accomplished by the little creature. Time, the little babe has grown to manhood and become the solver of all problems. We cannot more than begin to enumerate his works. He has iron horses running through valleys, mountains and hills and over the plains. He has ballons ascending the in the air, ships crossing the unknown waters, words flying through the air at lightning speed, not only through the air, but through the water, from America to Europe, so that distant nations can keep up a conversation at any time. I will enumerate no more. The above is sufficient to show what results from small things, in fact all large things whether good or bad.

Let us then learn to know small things, that we may make a proper application of them. Like the water falling from the roof of the house on the mountain, and its direction so easily changed. So your course through life may be as easily changed by a similar, small effect. A little thought will put you on one of the two roads,—the one to everlasting life, the other to eternal destruction. Remember the one to destruction is down and a day's journey on it, takes three days to come back. O that none could choose this road! Direct your thoughts to the road that will lead you to an inheritance in the beautiful realms of endless bliss.

Brethren and sisters, let us keep small troubles out of the church, so that not one precious soul may turn from us on account of it. Remember, that Jesus brought peace and good will on earth; let it be in the church. Clad in this immortal robe, we need not fear the awful summons of the King of terrors, nor reject our retiring into the chambers of the dust. Our immortal part will wing its way to the arms of its Omnipotent Redeemer, and find rest in the heavenly mansions of the Almighty.

MOTHERS—THEIR INFLUENCE.

BY R. T. BOSSERMAN.

ONE of the sweetest names on earth, is that of mother. There is perhaps no other name around which cluster so many fond recollections. No other name has so many sweet influences associated. To every person with proper feelings of humanity, the name of mother, will produce feelings of filial love and care within his breast. And no sacrifice will be too great for him in the care of her, who had stood over him through life as the guardian angel watching his footsteps. The Savior while upon the cross, though suffering the greatest pain, remembered his mother with feelings of sympathy, and by sweet instructions to the disciple standing by whom he loved, produced in the heart of that beloved child of God such feelings of filial love and affection, that, from that hour he took her unto his own home and cared for her with all the tenderness of a son. Such are the feelings associated around the cherished and endearing name of mother. The remembrance of a mother's name, and a mother's words brings influences to bear upon the minds of many that result in good. That son reared up under the pious instructions of a mother, is under a healthy influence. But as he leaves the parental roof, bids farewell to home and friends, and goes to distant lands, under the pressure of surrounding circumstances, forgets that pious instruction, his heart becomes hard; he turns a deaf ear to all that is good. Wealth and affluence are at his command, and dreamingly looking into the future, he is charmed with the thought of bidding defiance forever to want and adversity. By and by his castles fall and become obliterated. He comes to want, is thrown into society of others and there in that humble abode, he hears a mother sending to God a fervent petition in behalf of her son. It is there his heart is touched and then remembers a mother's prayers in days gone by. That influence follows him wherever he goes and until he resolves like the prodigal to return, he never can be at rest.

The name mother, has associated with it, great influence and it is often used to bring penitence to the heart. It is said, of a famous assassin, whose heart was so hard that his spiritual adviser could make no impression upon his mind, until he made mention of his mother,—when hearing her name, he remembered neglected advice of bygone days, and with feelings of remorse, burst out in tears. A mother's influence is great, and greater than many apprehend. Our own experience may teach us this, as well as the experience of others.

A late writer says, in regard to this fact, "let me educate the mothers of heathendom, and I care not who governs it." A mother's power is great, which we learn from the following scraps of history: John Randolph, of Roanoke said, "I should have been a French atheist were it not for the recollection of the time when my departed mother used to take my little hand in hers, and make me say, on my bended knees, 'Our Father who art in heaven.'" "I have found what made you the man you are," said a gentleman one morning to President Adams; "I have been reading your mother's letters to her son." Washington's mother trained her boy to truthfulness and virtue, and when his messengers called to tell her that her son was raised to the highest station in the nation's gift, she replied, "George always was a good boy."

Some one asked Napoleon what was the great need of the French nation, "Mothers!" was the significant answer. This is the influence that mothers can yield. Early impressions are the most enduring on the human mind. During the first few years of child-life mothers have the greatest control, and it should be borne in mind that, "a moment's work on clay tells more than an hour's labor on brick," so the work should be performed on hearts, while yet tender. The example of maternal influences are countless and exhibit great power for good or evil, which sacred history readily informs.

Solomon makes mention of words of wisdom that fell from a mother's lips. Prov. 31: 1. It was said of Timothy, "from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures," which was undoubtedly taught by his grandmother and mother. 1 Tim 4: 5. And by this holy influence exerted by a Christian mother, he entered the service of the Lord in early life and consecrated the prime of his manhood to the service of his Master.

Mothers, the influence for good is in your hands, will you extend it? It is God who has given you the responsibilities of motherhood, and as those little ones are placed under your care, be faithful unto them and bring them up under a healthy and moral influence, in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. In early youth you may hold the key to their hearts; oh may you never lose it, that you may be enabled by help divine to stamp upon the tablets of their hearts, a holy influence that may tend to life eternal,—a treasure locked up in their hearts that may be impenetrable to all that is unholy. Mothers! it is yours to elevate the moral standard of humanity. It is in your power to enlighten the world. It is in your hands to guide the destiny of nations.

HEALING.

BY EMMA C. NEWLAND.

"But he was wounded for our transgression, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we were healed." Isa. 53: 5.

HERE the prophet told how Jesus would have to suffer for our transgressions. "O, when we know how great His suffering was, how careful every one ought to be not to take one crooked step. To read of it, one might think that all His sufferings would have been too great to bear; but alas it is true, He bore them all. There are a great many afflicted persons; both saint and sinner are often afflicted. God visits us with sickness in order to teach us things which we know not.

It is said of Manasseh, when he was in affliction, he besought the Lord his God and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, and prayed unto him; and he was pitied of him and heard his supplication, and brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom. Then Manasseh knew that the Lord, he was God. 2 Cron. 33: 12, 13. This made Manasseh know the power and greatness of God, His holiness and hatred of sin. Jesus hated sin, yet He was bruised for our iniquities, and with His stripes we are healed.

Our Redeemer has various and wise ends in afflicting us, which ought to be duly considered by all, whether converted or unconverted, and especially by those who are afflicted. Christ teaches us the emptiness of the world. Ofttimes we see that neither riches nor friends can give the least ease to the bodies nor comfort to the souls of persons under sickness and distress. Can any one be at ease when there is such a great work for them to do. "A good tree bringeth forth good fruit." There is a vast difference between our prayers in health and in sickness; in sickness our prayers are more earnest. "Lord in trouble have they visited thee, they have poured out a prayer when thy chastening was upon them." Isa. 26: 15.

Manasseh prayed when he was under his fetters, but he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, when he began to reign in Jerusalem. A fervent prayer is what the Lord desires to hear. O, sinner, is your heart become so hard that you are not sensible of your own sins? Have you undervalued health, and slighted the mercies that your Maker has bestowed upon you? Are you too proud and self-conceited to realize that Jesus, that meek and lowly Son of God, was wounded for our transgressions. By and by a thorn will be sent to break the swollen place of pride, that you may not be puffed up above measure. "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the sinner and ungodly appear." Affliction visits all of us that we may not sleep the sleep of death. O, why not loosen our hearts from the vain things of this world, and look to Jesus who was bruised for our iniquities? We have no resting place here, this is only a home for a short time. Had I wings like a dove, then I would fly away and be at rest. I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest. Psa. 55: 6. Jesus says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Matt. 11: 28.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

BY JENNIE SCAMSTER.

"What shall I do then with Jesus, who is called Christ?" Matt. 27: 22.

THE chief priests and elders had conspired against Jesus to destroy Him. Before their council they charged Him with blasphemy for saying he was the Son of God, for which the council decided that he should be put to death. But they had no power to take life, therefore they brought Him before the judgment seat of Pilate, in whose hands were vested the issues of life and death. After hearing the charges against Christ, Pilate became convinced that the prisoner was a just person, and that the Jews had committed Him to prison out of hatred; but how to dispose of Jesus, was a different problem.

Now at this time which was the feast or passover week, it was their custom to release a prisoner, and Pilate embraced the opportunity of releasing Jesus. But unfortunately when two prisoners were presented the Jews had the privilege of deciding which should be released.

There was at this time a very wicked person in prison by the name of Barabbas. Pilate knew that Barabbas was guilty of sedition and robbery, and that Jesus was innocent, submitted the name of Jesus and Barabbas, thinking no doubt that they would consent to release Jesus, rather than to set at liberty so great a transgressor as Barabbas was. But no; they cry, "Barabbas, release Barabbas!" Pilate was very much disappointed, and asked, "What shall I do then with Jesus, who is called Christ?" They cried out, "Crucify him, crucify him." They doubted thought that if Jesus should be put to death, His name would soon be forgotten. But Pilate was undecided and did not know what to do. Soon he received a message from his wife, saying, "Have nothing to do with that just man, for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him." This troubled him more than ever, so he said to the Jews, "I will chastise him and let him go," but they cry out do more exceedingly, "Let him be crucified." Contrary to law and justice, the entreaties of his wife and the conviction of his conscience, he gave sentence of death against the Lord of glory; after washing his hands before the multitude, he said, "I am innocent of the blood of this just person, see ye to it." The Jews were pleased thinking, no doubt, that they would be troubled no more with his teachings; but in a few days the apostles are preaching salvation through His blood and performing miracles in His name.

The name of Jesus is now producing more interest and excitement than it did before He was crucified. "What shall we do then with Jesus who is called Christ?" This troubled the elders and chief priests more than ever, and for the purpose of freeing their minds, they put to death many of the disciples of Jesus. But still the name of Jesus cannot be put out of the way. Some persons now, like Pilate of old, try to have nothing to do with Jesus at present, but will call on Him at a more convenient time; some fearing the loss of home or position, if they should confess Jesus before men, and become His disciples; like Pilate, contrary to the wishes of their best friends, reject Jesus and say, "crucify him."

Reader, have you embraced Jesus as your Savior, and live as He has commanded you, obeying even the least command? If so, you have made a wise decision. Then honor Him by living holy, and eternity will answer the question, "What then shall I do with Jesus who is called Christ." To those who have not accepted the Savior, do not wait any longer, but accept Him to-day, for to-day is the day of salvation. Read and learn of the awful judgment that fell upon the Jews and their city, for the way in which they answered this question. If you cannot find it in your heart to say, "Crucify him," then embrace Him as your Savior. Come to Jesus as He stands revealed in the New Testament,—embrace Him as the Son of the living God, and the Savior of the world. Remember as long as you refuse to confess Him and become His decided followers, you join in the cry of the Jews, "Crucify him." If you do not want to say, "Crucify him," then turn to God with full purpose of heart, confess Jesus as the Son of God, repent of all your sins, be baptized in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Give yourself, soul, body and spirit to the service of God, and He will receive you, will forgive your past sins, and claim you as one of His dear children.

I hope that every wavering person will answer this question wisely and well, "What then shall I do with Jesus who is called Christ?"

HOW TO MAKE A HAPPY HOME AND A VIRTUOUS FAMILY.

1. Learn to govern yourselves, and to be gentle and patient.
2. Guard your tempers, especially in seasons of ill-health, irritation and trouble, and soften them by prayer, penitence and a sense of your own shortcomings and errors.
3. Never speak or act in anger, until you have prayed over your words or acts, and concluded that Christ would have done so in your place.
4. Remember that valuable as is the gift of speech, the gift of silence is often much more precious.
5. Do not exact too much from others, but remember that all have an evil nature, whose developments we must expect, and which we should forbear and forgive, as we often desire forbearance and forgiveness ourselves.

6. Never retort a sharp or angry word. It is the second word that makes the quarrel.

7. Beware of the first disagreement.

8. Learn to speak in a gentle tone of voice.

9. Learn to say kind and pleasant things whenever an opportunity offers.

10. Study the character of each one, and sympathize with them in their troubles, however small.

11. Do not neglect little things, if they can effect the comfort of others in the smallest degree.

12. Avoid moods and pets, and fits of sulkiness.

13. Learn to deny yourself, and to prefer others.

14. Beware of meddlers and tale-bearers.

15. Never charge a bad motive, if a good one is conceivable.

16. Be gentle, but firm with children.

17. Do not allow your children to be away from home, at night, without knowing where they are.

18. Do not allow them to go where they please on the Lord's Day.

19. Do not furnish them with much spending money.

20. Remember the grave, the judgment-seat and the scenes of eternity, and so order your home on earth that you shall have a home in heaven.—Selected.

POVERTY A BLESSING.

POVERTY is the nurse of manly energy, and heaven-climbing thoughts attended by love, and faith, and hope, around whose steps the mountain breezes blow, and from whose countenance all the virtues gather strength. Look around you upon the distinguished men that in every department of life, guide and control the times, and inquire what was their origin and what was their early fortune. Were they as a general rule, rocked and dandled in the lap of wealth? No; such men emerged from the homes of decent competence or struggling poverty. Necessity sharpens their faculties; and privation and sacrifice brace their moral nature. They learn the great art of renunciation, and enjoy the happiness of having few wants; they know nothing of the indifference or satiety. There is not an idle fibre in their frames; they put the vigor of a resolute purpose into every act. The edge of their mind is always kept sharp; in the school of life, men like these meet softly-nurtured darlings of prosperity as iron meets the vessels of porcelain.

REGARD FOR THE AGED.

A LITTLE thoughtful attention, how happy it makes the old. They have outlived most of the friends of their early youth. How lonely their home! Often their partners in life have long filled silent graves; often their children they have followed to the tomb. They stand solitary, bending on their staff, waiting till the same call shall reach them. How often must they think of absent, lamented faces; of the love which cherished them, and the tears of sympathy which fell with theirs, now all gone. Why should not the young cling around and comfort them, cheering their gloom with songs and happy smiles.—The Guide.

OUR PEOPLE VS. SECRET ORDERS.

THE United Brethren church, which has for years stood up against secret societies, is experiencing considerable trouble from some disloyal preachers, who are straining every nerve to overthrow the time-honored law of that respectable body. However much we may be opposed to the general faith and practice of the United Brethren church, we have always entertained for them a very high regard on account of their persistent opposition to secret orders; but, it would seem that the devil—the enemy of light—has put it into the hearts of some, to associate with an order as void of the Holy Ghost as a rock is of a soul, and thus lead the denomination still further down into the chains of darkness. Such men, if they have no respect for either themselves or the truth, ought to have a little regard for others, and if they cannot live up to, and defend the doctrine of the church to which they belong, they ought to have manners enough to step down and out. When a body of people starts out, fully resolved to discountenance secret societies, it is the height of ill-manners, saying nothing about Christian courtesy, for any man to join that body, with the intention of over-throwing their time-honored customs founded upon Bible authority.

No one ought to object to reforms, or an attempt in that direction—for such movements in times past have done good, but this thing of a few hypocrites, with love upon their lips and guile in their hearts, working their way, under the cloak of religion, into a church with well established principles, for the purpose of perverting her orders is a species of deception, that cannot be too severely censured. Such men have never been converted; they do not know what a change of heart is. They are wolves in sheep's clothing, void of manhood enough to let their actions speak out what is in their hearts until they have secured an influence sufficient to enable them to do considerable damage. Of all the men in the world these are the worst enemies to the cause. They make a conflict, not so much from without, as within. Their work is to ruin the church by producing internal discords, and hence cause divisions contrary to the Word.

These are the men who, with their lips, while on their knees in the water, will "renounce Satan and all his pernicious ways," but with their hearts will cling to secret societies as the idol of their affections. They are born of the water, but, we fear, not of the Spirit. The outside may be clean, but the inside is full of corruption. They can belong to and commune with a church that they know to be opposed to secret societies, and yet seek every opportunity of planting their evil seed in the hearts of other members and thereby corrupt the church. Are such persons honest? Did they not know when they united with the church that our people, as a body, were opposed to secret orders? Under these circumstances how can an honest man be in the church and at the same time a member of an oath-bound society? Of course these remarks do not apply to the members of churches not opposing secret orders, but to us as a body they do apply, and I would that we could feel it forcibly. The man who purposes to enter a church for the purpose of overthrowing her established and distinctive features, ought to have honesty and manhood enough about him to tell the church of his intentions beforehand.

On this question our people want to let their distinctive features stand out pretty prominently. Up to the present time the church has enforced her discipline pretty rigidly in this respect, and should she continue to do so in the future, as she has in the past, we may rest assured that we will have but little trouble with secret societies. But should we be a little lenient—allow a few Masons or Odd Fellows in the church for the sake of peace the time being, and then after awhile undertake to enforce the time-honored and Bible sustained rule of the church, we would have a larger difficulty on our hands than might at first be supposed. That is just the condition of the U. B. church. Their church rule regarding secret societies has not been rigidly enforced, and now it is almost too late—there is danger of them becoming divided. And unless we watch our posts pretty closely, we too may be overtaken by the same evil. I have but little faith in a brother who defends Masonry or Odd Fellowship. The fewer such persons there are in the church the better off she is. They are worse than a dead weight; they are detrimental to the cause of pure Christianity, and in their daily walk and conversation add nothing to the good influence of the church. Before they are suitable subjects, with which to adorn the religion of Him who did nothing behind the veil, they want to be converted from a love of the kingdom of darkness to the true and marvelous light. MORE CONCERNING THE ADOPTED MEANS FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF MAN'S MORAL FACULTIES.

MAN learns better by example than by precept. The system that is made up wholly of theory, is too imperfect for intelligent beings like man. The theory of engineering, however well it may be taught in schools of learning, never makes a practical engineer. The theory of farming, may be advanced with eloquence in agricultural colleges, yet it never makes a practical farmer.

God is God not only in theory—in being, but also in practice. He is not simply the Author of theoretical morality, but He is also the Author of practical morality. Then to have man become acquainted with a system of moral worth—of moral grandeur, there must be both precept and example. "There can be but one perfect model of human nature." To put this Model within the reach of mankind was God's prerogative; and He did it. The Model came, taught and practiced precisely what God demands of those who are to be saved. "Human nature could be perfected only by following a perfect model of human nature." With this Model before him, man may attain to that perfection which God demands of all who will come unto Him.

Man's Character

needed reformation. A model character was presented to him in the Son of God. He assumed human nature, and gave it the seal and perfection of the Deity. He swept away the falsity with which the ignorance of man had enveloped it, and made it possible for all men to attain to the perfection of the Model. If not, then there was no necessity for a Model.

But before observing the means adopted by the Son of God for the development of man's moral faculties, let us go back and take another glance at the age when sign-making was introduced. A noted writer says: "Nothing in the universe of God, animate or inanimate, is left without the government of an appropriate law, unless that thing be the noblest creature of God—the human spirit. To suppose, therefore, that the human soul is thus left unguided by a revealed rule of conduct, is to suppose that God cares for the less and not for the greater—to suppose that He would constitute the moral powers of the soul so that a law was necessary for their guidance, and then reveal none—to suppose, especially in the case of the Israelites, that He would prepare a people to receive, and obey with a proper spirit, this necessary rule of duty, and yet give no rule. But to suppose these things would be absurd; it follows, therefore, that God would reveal to the Israelites a law for the regulation of their conduct in morals and religion." In full harmony with these deductions, the Lord presented the children of Israel with a rule of life—

A Moral Law.

In a former article, notice was made concerning the manner of teaching the idea of holiness to the Jews. This was by comparison. The camp was purified; and the people were by certain acts declared purified. The beasts to be offered were to be more clean than the others of the class; the utensils of the tabernacle were purified—in fact every thing was purified and re-purified until the highest point of purity was reached by the convergence of the numerous rays employed. This conveyed to the mind the idea of greatly superior holiness on the part of God. They looked upon Him as a Being infinitely powerful and full of purity. It was a picture of the condition of God's Spirit and acted upon their spirits with happy effect. With these comparisons—with true ideas of divine holiness they learned that God was too pure to look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. That the idea of sign-making vanished with the going out of the Mosiacal dispensation is an error. It is still a in the present dispensation, and forms the basis for the imbibition of many divine principles. We shall now proceed to notice some of them.

Leading Characteristic

God never puts His own institutions beyond His power, nor does He leave them to be completed by human wisdom. He creates, perfects, then selects for His own purposes. He created water. This He selects as a means for man's moral purity. As water is useful for the cleansing of all material things of their impurities, He chose this as an emblem of the power of the Holy Spirit upon the heart of man. God did not quit making signs when Moses died, but by His Son extends the work to the end of time. The healing of the sick, giving sight to the blind, feet to the lame, ears to the deaf, life to the dead, are signs of God's power. Washing the saints' feet, breaking bread, dividing the cup, the salutation of the holy kiss, the manifestations of brotherly love, are signs of God's power in the hearts of men. God provides the means of bringing the truth into the heart of man, thus stamping the image of Christ upon human nature. There is, however, this difference between the dispensation of Moses and that of Christ; the former consisted very largely of material things, while the latter is full of spirit and life. The former was designed to convey certain ideas of God's character to the human mind by material things, and the latter is designed to perfect ideas in the human soul, having received the impress and seal of the Deity through Christ our Savior.

Outward Objects

having formed ideas in the mind of man, and words given to distinguish them from other ideas, there is no longer any necessity for the objects which were used to represent the idea. In short, when the idea of purity was once conveyed to the mind of man, there existed no longer the necessity of the means employed to represent that idea. "Whenever the Jews were cured of idolatry, and had obtained true ideas of the attributes of the true God, then the dispensation of shadows and ceremonies 'could not make the comers thereunto perfect.'" With correct ideas concerning the attributes of God, the Jews were scattered throughout the world, and those ideas were thus placed within the reach of all men; but at no time were those ideas stamped indelibly upon the human soul until done so by Him who came in the flesh.

JOHN WESLEY ON DRESS.

THE following clipped from the Gospel Banner, is to the point, and shows how that devout reformer looked upon the habit of vain and showy dressing. Were Mr. Wesley to arise from the dead, take a tour through the United States and preach such doctrine there would be some lively rattling among the dry bones, and may be a terrible shaking among the silk and jewelry. Carefully read and take heed: his language is as follows:

"I exhort all those who desire me to watch over your souls, wear no gold, no pearls or precious stones, use no curling of hair or costly apparel how grave soever. I advise those who are able to receive these sayings, buy no velvet, on silks, no fine linen, no superfluities, no mere ornaments, though ever so much in fashion. Wear nothing, though you have it already, which is of a glaring color, or which is in any way gay, glittering, and showy; nothing made in the height of fashion; nothing apt to attract the attention of by-standers. I do not advise women to wear rings, ear-rings, necklaces, laces, of whatever kind or color; or ruffles, which may easily shoot from one to twelve inches deep. Neither do I advise men to wear colored waist-coats, shining stockings, glittering or shining buckles or buttons, either on their coats or on their sleeves, any more than gay, fashionable, and expensive perukes. And whosoever says that there is no harm in these, might as well say that there is no harm in stealing and adultery. This is a melancholy truth. I am ashamed of it, but I know not how to help it. I call heaven and earth this day to witness that it is not my fault. The trumpet has not given an uncertain sound. For nearly fifty years past, I have borne a clear and faithful testimony. In print, in preaching, in meeting the society, I have not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God; I am therefore clear of the blood of those who will not hear. It lies upon their own heads. Let your dress be cheap as well as plain. Otherwise you do but trifle with God and me and your own souls."

BROTHER Hillery, before going West, is spending a few weeks with the members in the Central Illinois mission field.

SOME one wishes us to announce the Love-feast at the Seneca church, Ohio, but fails to give the date. This is the reason the notice cannot appear.

THE price of the BRETHREN AT WORK from now till the end of the year is 50 cents. This is a good opportunity for those who wish the paper a few months on trial.

DURING this season of the year special attention should be given to a strict observance of the laws of health. People cannot be too careful about what they eat, and how they live. Right living is essential to good health and long life.

THOSE who are greatly interested in the spreading of the Truth should not fail to read and practically consider our Special Offer. Send in your mite to aid in sending the paper to those who are seeking for the pure Gospel.

It takes two to make a quarrel. One cannot quarrel alone, hence any one who quarrels, cannot justly blame any one else, for if he would behave himself, the other person would too. Remember that like begets like. If you would live in peace, first learn to be peaceable.

If young men would take better care of their health, we would have more useful old men for counsellors. The small number of old people usually found in the country, is a sad comment on our present high-style, and fast way of living. Those who live fast and high, may expect to reach the grave just that much sooner.

PARENTS cannot be too careful about what their children play with, for these little things, handled day after day, may have much to do with shaping their lives and conduct. Pistols and swords are dangerous play-things to place in the hands of a child, for they may engender a love of carnal weapons, the use of which frequently leads to destruction.

SLEEP is a fit emblem of death. When we close our eyes in sleep, we do not know whether we shall ever awake again, hence how important it is that we retire in peace. People who quarrel while retiring to rest, are in a fearful condition. It is bad to let the sun go down on our wrath, but far worse to fall asleep with bitter feelings in our hearts. Go to sleep as you would wish to die—in peace with the world and heaven. Let your last thoughts breathe the spirit of peace and waft to God a prayer of gentle repose.

THE word devil is perhaps the worst word in the English language—the more you take from it the worse it seems to get. Take d-e-v-i-l and drop the d and we have evil; put the e on the other end and we have vile; drop the v, and e, and il, sounding like ill is left. Take off the i, and l very much like hell, is all there is left either of or for the devil. Drop the d and spell the word backward and we have live—full of life and activity in all his evil works. He needs to be watched on every side, whether considered as a whole or in parts.

SOME GOOD SUGGESTIONS.

JOHN S. Sweeny is known as one of the ablest debaters in the Campbellite church, has engaged in over fifty discussions, and lately held a public debate with Mr. Miller, an able debater of the Methodist church, which was attended by Benjamin Franklin, an able debater also, and editor of the American Christian Review. Mr. Franklin, in speaking of the conduct of the two men, gives some most excellent suggestions. For the sake of those who may likely engage in public discussions we give below some of his criticisms:

1. We would have greatly preferred that Bro. Sweeny had invariably kept his seat while Mr. Miller was speaking; that he had invariably declined to answer any questions during the same time, or even nod the head in assent, or shake the head in dissent. This would have avoided some little altercations and interruptions that injured the force of the debate, and caused unpleasantness in the audience. These interruptions were caused on both sides; but we would have preferred that none of them had been caused on our side.

2. It would have been much better if he had stood in his regular speaking-place, and not worked round, as he did at times in front of Mr. Miller's table. This was not the best of taste.

3. We regretted that his gestures were not less violent, and that he did not reserve a few flourishes of his hands, and slaps of books, before Mr. Miller's face. These gestures did not scare Mr. Miller, nor convince any in the audience.

4. A very few little things, witticisms, etc., might have been omitted with profit to the effect of the debate.

Should it fall to the lot of any of our brethren to defend the Truth in a public discussion they will do well to remember the above suggestions.

MORE ABOUT JOHN'S BAPTISM.

ANOTHER brother sends us a few more remarks about John's baptism, and by answering them, some additional light can be thrown on the subject. It is a question over which not a few are puzzled.

That John baptized by immersion is clear. That his baptism was forward instead of backward is generally conceded, but was it by trine or single immersion? There are many reasons for concluding that it was by trine immersion, which, on any other question, would settle it as a matter of fact. But to the remarks of our correspondent; he says:

"I see in the issue of the BRETHREN AT WORK of the 4th of July, under Querist's Department, in reply to, 'Did John use a form of words when he baptized Jesus?' You first say, 'We think he did.' Now when we think, we are not very positive, but you, in your remarks, positively conclude that John used the formula afterwards given to the disciples. Now if John used the formula given to the disciples on the mountain in Galilee, the disciples would have already had the formula in that case; and a second giving would have been unnecessary. But he now extends their labors to all nations. And further says, 'Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.'"

When the disciples were sent out on their first mission, their work was limited; for they were to confine their labors to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, not being permitted to preach specially to the Gentiles, but when they were sent out on their second mission no limits were mentioned, the whole world being their field of labor. In fact it was their duty to preach the Gospel to all nations.

I do not apprehend that the formula was given the disciples in a special way before the resurrection. They learned it from John the Baptist and the Savior, and baptized in that way, because it was approved by their Master. This conclusion is reasonable, and is the only one against which no fatal objections can be filed. That John used any other formula is a mere supposition and therefore cannot be received as evidence in any case. That he used the same formula that was afterwards given to the disciples, is not only reasonable, but backed up by circumstantial evidence that seems sufficiently clear to warrant its correctness. It will not do to maintain that Christ taught his disciples to baptize differently from what John did, for that would have caused a confusion regarding the mode of baptism. It then follows, that the same formula must have been used by both parties as being the only way of maintaining the sameness of practice.

But while it may be clear that there was no difference between John's baptism and that taught by the Savior in Matt. 28: 19 practically, and their origin and design the same, yet we conclude that there was some difference theoretically. This we have mentioned several times before, but perhaps, not so fully as might have been expedient.

John's baptism was in the name of the Father in fact, and of the Son and Holy Spirit prospectively. John spoke of the Father in fact, but of Christ and the Holy Spirit in promise. This however did not affect either the mode or design of John's baptism, only he baptized the people in the name of the Father whom they knew to exist, and of the Son, and Holy Spirit who were yet to come, and were promised by John. And as they were promised, and John baptized in their name, it follows that his baptism, so far as it was in the name of the Son and Holy Spirit, was prospective. But after Christ came, and was known to the people, then John's baptism was in the name of the Father, and of the Son in fact, and of the Holy Spirit prospectively. Then, when the Holy Spirit came, the baptism was in the name of all three in fact, and none prospectively, i. e., before Christ was baptized, John's baptism was in the name of the Father in fact, and of the Son and Holy Spirit prospectively.—Then after the reception of the Holy Spirit, the baptism was in the name of the three in fact. Or to illustrate more clearly, we present it in the following form, wherein the large capitals represents the baptism when in fact, and the italics when prospective:

(Before Christ was baptized.)
IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER,
and of the Son,
and of the Holy Spirit.

(After Christ was baptized.)
IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER,
AND OF THE SON,
and of the Holy Spirit.

(After the Holy Spirit came.)
IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER,
AND OF THE SON,
AND OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

"Again, John's baptism was unto repentance, John telling the people to believe on him that should come after him. Acts 19: 4; Matt. 4: 2; Mark 1: 8; Luke 3: 16; John 1: 15. Again, when Paul came to Ephesus, he said, to certain disciples, 'Have ye received the Holy Ghost, since ye believed?' They said, we have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. And he said, 'Unto what then were you baptized?' And they said, 'unto John's baptism.' Acts 19: 1, 2, 3. Now brethren, here were disciples who had been baptized unto or by John's baptism and never heard of the Holy Ghost, this could not have been if the same formula had been used by John or his disciples in baptizing converts, that was afterwards given to the disciples of Christ."

I regard the re-baptizing of the twelve disciples by Paul at Ephesus as proof of two things:

1. Though they said they were baptized "unto John's baptism," yet they were not baptized by John, for those he baptized were by him told of the Holy Ghost, on whom they should believe, (Matt. 3: 11), but these disciples had not even so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. Had they been baptized by him, they would have heard of the Holy Ghost, hence it certainly follows that they were baptized by some one who did not teach the way of the Lord perfectly, hence omitted the mentioning of the Holy Ghost.

2. As they had not even heard of the Holy Ghost, it follows that that name was omitted from the formula used at their baptism, and from a careful reading of Acts 19: 3, 4, it may be inferred that even the name of Christ was also omitted, thus showing that at least a part of the formula was disregarded, hence rendering their baptism invalid. They were then baptized by Paul "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

A SPECIAL OFFER.

IN order to accomplish as much good as possible and do all in our power to disseminate the faith and practice of the Brethren, we conclude to make a special offer and thus afford our readers an excellent opportunity to assist in a great and good work. There are thousands, not members of the church, who might be greatly benefited by reading the BRETHREN AT WORK the coming year, and especially the debate, and in order to reach this class we propose the following:

Let some one in each neighborhood send in the names and addresses of those whom they think will likely be influenced for good by reading the paper, and we will keep a careful record of them in a separate book. These names should be written on a sheet of paper separate from all other business. But before sending in any one's name, it would be best to first see the party and solicit their subscription for the paper according to terms published last week, but if they will not subscribe, then forward the names to us. You may also send in the names of distant friends.

To all such we will send the BRETHREN AT WORK one year for $1.00 each, and wish to raise the money by donations from our readers. Hence suggest that all who feel disposed to do so, donate something to this fund—which we will call the Gospel Fund—to be used in sending the paper to such names as will be forwarded to us. We will enter the names in order as they come in, and then as we receive the money, will send the paper. In order to show that we are doing a straight business, we will publish a list of the money received and names to whom the paper may be sent.

Our readers will perceive that this is a very liberal offer, as we throw off 50 cents on each paper in order to reach a class who otherwise would not take the paper. We hope to hear from many of you soon, for this is an excellent opportunity to spread the truth.

PEOPLE who expect to become chaste in conversation, must first learn to be pure in heart, for pure water cannot issue from a corrupt fountain. Purify the heart and the conversation will take care of itself.

BROTHER Sharp left here last Friday, with the intention of spending some time with the Brethren in the Waddam's Grove congregation. His family is still at Marysville, Tenn., but will soon move to Ashland, Ohio.

MEN and women who have to tell their neighbors that they are Christians, are poor walking advertisements for either the Lord's or any other cause. If a man's daily walk and conversation do not tell what he is, there is but little dependence to be put in his verbal profession.

It is truthfully said, that the tallest trees are most exposed to high winds, and ambitious and exalted men to the cyclones of failure and destructive temptations. He who will seriously ponder this subject, will see a reason for keeping down in the valley of humility—here he will find the secret of the success attending an humble life.

SOME energetic brother ought to make an effort to build up a church in the State of Maine, and we think, if the proper efforts were made, it could be done. There is no State in the Union up with Maine in the cause of temperance, and it would be of much advantage to our plea to establish a congregation in such a place; having a temperate people to commence with, much good might be accomplished.

FROM present indications it would seem that the Catholics are making considerable progress in England, and by some it is feared that Catholicism will yet become the prevailing religion of that fertile island. Catholics have already intimated that if England were under the influence of their faith, they could see their way clear to manage the Eastern question to their own notion. Protestantism should keep a keen lookout, for the Catholics will not leave a stone unturned that will strengthen their cause.

THERE always will be men who are called great preachers. The cause cannot well get along without them, nor would they be great without the cause. Some of them are men of great natural ability, but their zeal and stability have much to do with their superior workmanship. In order to become eminently useful, a man must not attempt to do too many things at the same time. Great preachers are seldom great in anything else. We all have our gifts, and it is our duty to improve them, and do the best we know how in our callings. If you would be useful, learn to do good and make your mark, not by running all over the world in search of something to do, but work in the sphere where God has placed you. Better be great in humility and be sure of salvation, than great in the eyes of the world and lose heaven. Take good care of your own conduct and do what is right. God will see to the greatness and the reward too. And for heaven's sake do not be jealous of anybody else.

THE Lord has but little use for people who want their own way about everything that comes up in the church. If they cannot learn to submit while in this life, what will they do in that which is to come?

It is gratifying to reflect on the past history of the island of Cyprus. During the first years of the Christian church it was the home of Barnabas and Anason, and the scene of some of Paul's arduous missionary labors, but having been redeemed from the corrupting influences of Turkey and placed under the control of England, we may expect it to resume, in a measure, much of its former glory and become the home of devoted followers of the Master.

INFORMATION reaches us, that many years ago there was a German book published, giving an account of the relation that Alexander Mack sustained to the descendants of the Waldenses, and that the same thing was referred to in a Bilde, published by the United Brethren church, containing a history of that denomination. Are there any of our readers who know anything about the book? If they do, they will please inform us, as we would like to procure a copy of the work.

If your minister must spend two or three days out of each week preaching funerals and attending to church work generally, you cannot expect him to prosper financially. Instead of censuring him, and talking about his poor management and failures, it would be far better to lend him a helping hand and thus relieve him of a part of his burden. Treat him as you would like him to treat you, were you in his place. Do not expect preachers to bear the cross alone and all the church go free. God pity the poor minister and his family, for the rich will not.

It is reported that the Buffalo ministers are talking seriously among themselves of attempting to abolish operatic quartettes and music from their churches. It is time they were making some kind of a reform. These denominations that have been running off into every foolish thing imaginable in order to induce people to attend services, are beginning to learn a lesson, and this should serve as a warning to our people, that they run not into the same excess of error. We want to cling to the old Apostolic order of singing with the spirit and the understanding also.

THOSE who quote Webster in defense of sprinkling and pouring, do the noted linguist injustice, for he defines the original meaning of the word correctly. We quote from his Unabridged Dictionary of a late date, where he is defining baptism: "Gr. Baptisma, Baptismus, from Baptizein, to baptize, from Baptein, to dip in water." From this it is clear that baptism is derived from words, meaning to dip in the water, hence as evidence is wholly on the side of immersion. Men of such scholarship as Webster are not addicted to defining baptism to mean either sprinkling or pouring, for that would endanger their reputation as scholars. Since the united voice of the ancient Greeks, in whose mother tongue the New Testament was first written, is on the side of immersion, it is not safe for modern scholars of reputation, to gainsay. The question is too firmly settled.

Who can send us the names and addresses of a number of persons living in Maine? We want to send them sample copies and try to work up a list of subscribers all over that State. There are too many temperance people there to have no Brethren among them. Come brethren and sisters, help us a little, and we will see what can be done.

DEATH.

BY HARRIET BUCK.

Oh friends, the day is not far distant when a remorseless foe will confront you. Strength of arm and pride of intellect, and stoutness of heart will not avail. The wisdom of the wisest men cannot save you; although you may be reveling in homes of luxury, and hosts of devoted friends surround you, yet every effort of theirs, in your behalf, will be in vain.

Then since death is on our track, let us try to improve the short space of time allotted us, and try to live, by God's help, so that death will not be feared, and we shall conquer and go shouting home, victorious through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Oh come this moment and begin While life's sweet moments last; Turn to the Lord, forsake your sins, And He'll forgive what's past.

EXTRACTS UPON THE MARRIAGE OF NEAR RELATIONS.

BY JAMES WIRT.

IN Spain, kings marry their own nieces, and in this country, (England) first and second cousins marry without scruple, although every philosophical physiologist will declare that this is in direct opposition to the institutions of nature.

If the first individuals connected in near relationship, who unite in marriage are uncommonly robust, and possess very favorably developed brains, their offspring may not be so much deteriorated, below the common standard of the country, as to attract particular attention, and the law of nature is, in this instance, supposed not to hold; but it does hold, for to a law of nature, there never was an exception.

Marrriages between persons nearly related by consanguinity are now deemed to be, in a certain sense, a violation of the physical laws of nature, and tending to the deterioration of the race. This argument is of universal force throughout Christendom. It rests, however, quite as much upon the fallacies that marriage between near relatives will impair the vitality of families, and interfere with the purity, harmony, and freedom of domestic intercourse, as upon the reason just given.

None of you shall approach to any that is near of kin to him to uncover their nakedness: I am the Lord. (Lev. 18:6)

Concerning marriages of near relations especially cousins, was unanimously considered, and declared good that such marriages should not at all be, and that parents should warn their children earnestly in this respect, so that offense and scandal might be prevented, which have been so often occasioned by it, and that our dear youth may not, in ignorance, be led into something, where, perhaps, afterwards their thoughts might be accusing one another about those things which cannot be altered any more, and therefore should be well considered previously in the fear of God." Minutes of Annual Council, page 17.

TWILIGHT.

BY E. R. STEPLER.

How delightful are the twilight hours! When the last rays of the brilliant orb of day—the setting sun, have disappeared behind the far-stretched Western hills, and all nature is hushed to quietude, then will our minds wander back to the happy days of our childhood, when our hearts were as the sparkling evening dews, when we knew not of sorrow or anguish of heart, when all was joy and happiness, and we thought not of the coming future.

May we, as we wander from the threshold of the old familiar homestead, "O'er these wide extended plains," forget not the Giver of those golden hours of childhood, and all through the journey of life reverence His great and holy name, so that if we arrive at the twilight hours of life, that we may exclaim with Christ, our Redeemer, as He bowed His head and was about to enter the portals of death, "It is finished." Our race is ended, and our journey of life is complete. May we then calmly sink to rest in the arms of Jesus to await the sounding of the trumpet on that great resurrection morn.

The day is past and gone; The evening shades appear; O, may we all remember well, The night of death draws near."

"LET NOT YOUR HEART BE TROUBLED."

BY S. M. MISSNICH.

THERE is trouble for man from the cradle to the grave. He is of few days and full of trouble. Jesus warned His disciples of the trials and persecutions that were about to befall them. He told them "ye will be hated of all men." They will persecute you from city to city; you will be cast into prison and be put to death for my sake. The great Teacher did not tell His disciples where to go, or what to do, to escape trouble, but He told them what was much better for them and us to know—how to triumph over our troubles.

"Ye believe in God, believe also in me." This is the great antidote for all our troubles. Faith in Christ enables us to surmount trouble. As the eagle soars above the rain, the storm and cloud, into the sunshine of a placid atmosphere, so by faith shall the Christian rise above trouble, persecution and even death itself, into the glorious light of the Sun of Righteousness.

Are we in trouble, belief in Jesus will still our tears. Do we fear to die, we had better try to live. If we live right, we shall die right. If we care for our life, God will care for our death. There is nothing for the Christian to trouble about in life or death, who obeys the injunction, "Fear God and him only shall ye serve."

Let war, famine, pestilence come; let the lightnings flash, the thunders roll; yea, let the earth and the heavens flee away, God is our Father. "God is our refuge and strength, a PRESENT HELP IN TROUBLE." Psalm 46:2.

A FEW THOUGHTS.

BY W. C. MILLER.

Oh ways are not God's ways. When Sam saved the cattle by sacrifice, it was a good object he had in view, but it was not according to God's will. That was not God's way and we will all admit that He knows best. When God says, come out from among sinners, and be separate from them, He means for us to do so. When God says, be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, it is for us to obey. We must learn to obey; it is one of the hardest lessons we have, this learning to obey. How few are well trained in this particular.

"But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you." What a pity! false teachers among us. But how are we to tell them? We can judge the tree by its fruits? We can measure by that perfect rule which we have, can we not? "If any man preach any other Gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed: For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ." Gal. 1: 9, 10.

Yes, we complain of hard times, but were we only thankful instead, for the many blessings which we are continually enjoying, how good it would be! If we were as thankful as we should be, God would bless us so abundantly that we would not have room to receive it. We murmur and complain, yet we are even now blessed above what we are worthy to receive.

"I have fought a good fight," Sometimes people, when they come to the church, are disappointed. They seem to think the victory won, but it is only commenced. They expect to find everything smooth and easy. This is a great mistake. We have a battle to fight,—a life-long battle, and sometimes we are in peril here, and sometimes there, and sometimes it happens that we are in peril among false brethren. Even in the Apostles' time, false brethren had crept into the church and what may we expect now? It is a sad thing to get in peril among false brethren. Of all the perils Paul speaks of being in, I always thought the last one was the worst. Even Christ was smitten in the house of His friends. The Christian has a great battle to fight, "foes without and fears within."

"When my father and mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up." What a sweet and consoling thought this is of the Psalmist! When our dearest friends forsake us, the Lord will care for us. This brings to my mind the Scripture where it says, we must forsake all for Christ or we cannot be His disciples. God wants our services unconditionally, not if father and mother give themselves wholly to Him. At the judgment the church will not be accepted as a whole, but such things as offend will be rejected. Brethren and sisters, we will all be judged individually; let us not follow one another, but let us measure ourselves by that measure which will stand when all earthly things will have passed away.

PLAIN TALK.

ZION'S HERALD reports the following remarks of Mr. Moody, delivered in the Boston Tabernacle: Mr. Moody did not believe that anything could renovate the country but a pure revival, and God is always ready to revive His work when asked to do so. Since the war there is no question but that we have become demoralized and extravagant. Young men will not get married in the old-fashioned way and live in two or three rooms, but think they must have at least $5,000 or $10,000 a year. If they cannot have this income, they will not marry, and are led into adultery and licentiousness. The speaker had seen an amount of robbiness and corruption in society for two or three years which astonished him. It was full time for the church to wake up. Men join the church for the purpose of obtaining position and the confidence of society, and soon we hear of them as defaulter's in $200,000 or $300,000. Some ministers are so covetous to have a long roll of names in their church, that they hustle in any one who comes along, without regard to fitness. We want downright honesty in the church. There is something to be done besides singing a few psalms and hymns. We want a revival of temperance in all things. He was sick and tired of ministers who did more harm than infidels. If anything is wrong in their church, they should speak out, and not fear to lose their position. A man who is not willing to dig potatoes for a living if necessary, was never half converted. We to the minister who does not do his duty to his people! We want, also, a revival of brotherly love, and not of sectarian or party bickering.—The Christianian.

Above falsehood, There can be found no higher virtue than the love of truth. The man who deceives others must himself become the victim of methodical distrust. Knowing the deceit of his own heart and the falsehood of his own tongue, his eyes must be always filled with suspicion, and he must lose the greatest of all happiness—confidence in those who surround him.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From South Waterloo Church, Ia.

ON Saturday the 3rd inst., a very serious accident occurred to Eld. J. A. Murray of this place. Bro. Murray was driving a four horse team attached to a harrow, the front horses, being attached to the tongue by a chain, got to lagging, and by request of Bro. Murray, his son, who was near by, hit the team, causing it to start forward, when the chain, which they were hitched back; Bro. Murray having hold of the lines, was jerked forward and fell in front of the sickle, which was in motion. The machine which was unusually low to take up lodged grain, passed over him, dragging him several feet. When the sickle struck him, it cut his left limb severely above the knee, making an opening to the bone. One of the guards passed nearly through the center of his left hand, and his right hand was seriously cut by the sickle, necessitating the amputation of nearly an inch of the index finger. Eight or ten stitches were necessary to bring the open wound in his limb together, and as many stitches were required in his right hand. Dr. G. G. Beckly, one of the leading physicians of Waterloo, was called to dress his wounds, and has since been giving him medical treatment, and it is now hoped that he will recover, though for several days after the accident, the sorrowful thought pervaded the minds of his many friends, that his recovery was very doubtful. It seems like an intervention of Providence, that a man should apparently so nearly reach the verge of eternity, as to pass through what Bro. Murray did and get come away alive.

The report of the above accident, cast quite a gloom over the community where Bro. Murray was known, both in and out of the church, and the special anxiety of his kind family and many sympathizing friends, is being manifested since his affliction, by the efforts put forth to make him as comfortable as possible.

For the satisfaction of the many who are acquainted with Bro. Murray, I have given the above statement. E. SHAWALTER.

A Synopsis of Travels in the West.

ON the 28th of May, we left home for Gilman, Iroquois Co., Ill. Arrived there safe in due time, found my children living there well, but surrounded with a large scope of flat land, then very wet. From there to Cerro Gordo, Piatt Co., Ill., quite a strange place, but ere long found many friends and brethren, preached several times at La Place and at the Love feast in Bro. John Metzger's church. Formed the acquaintance with brethren Lyon, Baruhart, and others. Enjoyed ourselves well; had a solemn feast, not so much crowded, but very interesting. From there on the 5th of June started for Auburn, Sangamon Co., Ill. Found friends and brethren all well; staid with them over Sunday, preached for them three times. Here we found a number of Pennsylvanians, such as Isaac Giddel, A. L. Bowman, H. Hervey, B. Masterson, and others, all doing well. No doubt their transit was for the better, temporarily. Apparently land can be bought cheaper now, than some years ago. Next we explored Girard and its vicinity in Macoupin Co. First entered the house of widow Brubaker, better known as Mattie Gerlach, and in a few hours at the house of Bro. Collen Gibson, a minister. Good to be there, under the tuition of one who took lessons from his master, not to be forgotten again. In these parts we found a number of Pennsylvanians again. Had one quite interesting meeting. Prior to the meeting were shown the country by our friend Amos Young.

Macoupin Co. seems to be a soil adapted to raise all kinds of grain. Land sells the same as in Sangamon, from thirty to fifty dollars an acre. Stopped in St. Louis, saw my nephew Amos Hoffer, all cheer. Bought tickets for Kinsley, Kansas. Arriving in Kansas City, we turned our ship to Miami Co., Kansas. Paola, the county seat, was our stop. Bro. Hollinger took us home and next day to love-feast, at Bro. Ayer's house, the field of Bro. George Meyers. Preaching by Harper, Gibson and others. Bro. George Myers on the occasion was ordained, and a new church organized, over which he is to preside. Country middling well improved, rather broken; plenty of limestone rock. Next day traveled about thirty miles through Franklin county on private conveyance; lodged with a minister, (name lost). Next day went to Douglas Co. Were kindly cared for by Bro. Garst and others. Country about the same as Miami. Land sells from five to twenty-five dollars in these different counties. Were conveyed towards Lawrence, and landed at the house of Bro. Flory. Next morning, started on his conveyance in hopes to be shown the country by him, as we pass along and reach the residence of Eld. Bowers, but we soon learned that his heart was full of Scripture, and pious talk, nice and cheap land had no room there. Old Bowers is the elder in Douglas Co., and an able housekeeper, apparently near his blessed home beyond. He took us to Lawrence next day.— Quite a business place. Took cars for Kinsley, but entirely too much sand, soil and sub-soil. No place for us; thought to return next day to Nigertson station and stay over Sunday; but train disappointed us, so we made for Topeka, and there listened to an excellent sermon, delivered by a Methodist minister. We thought, if only all preachers would raise up their voices against vice and wickedness, as he did, much more good could be accomplished. Next we went about fourteen miles north to Bro. Gish's, Elder in those parts of Jefferson Co. Next day to Jackson Co., found our old friend Strite and son, located on the prairies of North-eastern Kansas, undulated and pleasing landscape.— Fine land sells from five to ten dollars, and improved from fifteen to twenty-five dollars. Here seems to be a large opening for such who have not much capital at hand. Apparently the North-eastern part of Kansas is the most desirable for Pennsylvania folks, if they are inclined to go beyond the Missouri river, and so we found also the South-eastern part of Nebraska; surface and soil, and weather is much better than in the South-eastern part of Kansas, Iowa comes in next. Guthrie, Green and Dallas counties are indeed good counties, soil and surface very rich. A prosperous church is in Guthrie; preachers, Eld. John Fitz, Elder Samuel Longenecker and others. A wide opening here for emigrants. Large tracts of prairie not fenced yet, price from eight to twelve dollars. The prairie is mostly to be found in Guthrie and Green counties. Dallas is more settled up already. Visited Elder Robert Badger and Bro. C. Long, and found them all well. From thence back to Fulton county, Ill. Elder David Miller is housekeeper, and his co-laborers are Jesse Danner, Henry Danner, Solomon Ham and John Dany. This is indeed a fair country, soil adapted to all kinds of grain. Timber and coal plenty. Land sells from twenty-five to sixty dollars an acre. The latter best improved tracts. Health good. Running water, railroad and water transportation at hand. Edgar county is about the same as Fulton with the exception of river transportation. On my return home through Ill., preached thirteen times, as I passed along through Fulton, Piatt and Edgar counties. Am sorry that the Edgar Co. church is without a local preacher for the present. Elder Jacob Wagner accompanied me to Edgar and labored quite agreeably.— Attendance not so large, being right in harvest, but very attentive. On the 29th of July left for home, and on the 30th, by night-fall was permitted to greet my own folks right at home. Found all well, thank God, the kind Father of all living. W. HERTZLER, Elizabethtown, Pa.

Immortality.

BY A. J. HIXON.

SPENCER has said, that we only think solemnly, when God shuts us up in his ebony box," though, we believe that thoughts on sole subjects, by many, are entertained in the daytime. Being all alone this sultry afternoon, we have concluded to pen a few thoughts, for our much regarded visitant, the BROTHERS AT WORK. "All alone," this is true, though we may be abstracted from earthly associates, there is One, from whom, we can never be abstracted. "Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven Thou art there. If I make my bed in hell, behold Thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there, shall thy hand lead me and thy right hand shall hold me." "Such knowledge is too wonderful for me," but "If a man die shall he live again?" One of the most sublime propositions ever propounded to dying men and women, one which independent of revelation defies the fronts in its solution. Yet, in its satisfactory answer, is wrapped up all that makes life desirable or attractive. It is true, that the natural world proves man's immortality, but to elucidate it to the ordinary mind requires such logicians, as an Alexander, a Paley, or a Butler. When we reflect a moment we intuitively feel a longing after immortality.

And shall that longing be disappointed? We answer, certainly not. If the idea of our immortality were banished from our minds, life would be very much less interesting, but one abatement; but Revelation or God's truth, assures us that life is the arch, time is one abatement, immortality the other. The great Newton, when about to leave the world, said that "he felt that he was but a little boy sporting in the sand upon the beach, while the great ocean of truth lay unexplored before him."— And shall he, who could grapple with the great problems of the universe and reduce them to a demonstration, be disappointed? Nay; such minds never die. Fred. Douglass once said, (that there was no limit to the sphere of mind, that its sphere was called the way from the finite up to the infinite.) "I am the God of Abraham and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living. Heaven-born truth! No finite reasoning could ever develop it. God in the fulness of time, has brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. And while we write we are deeply impressed with the thought that we shall meet, when this troublesome life is over, with those dear ones who have passed through the valley and shadow of death; we shall not be disappointed.— Those with whom we mingled and conversed when young in spiritual things, but who have long since gone to their rewards, we shall meet again. "I am the resurrection and the life," said the blessed Jesus. And through faith in this declaration, pilgrims and strangers have made their way from earth to that "Rest which remaineth to the people of God." "As for me I will behold thy face in righteousness, I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness."— Psalms 17: 15.

A Sad Accident.

WILLIAM Allen Brumbaugh, aged fifteen years, two months and six days, met with a sad death. The parents left home in the morning, expecting to be at home by noon, told William to stay at home and take care of his younger brothers and sisters; but in disobedience to his parents, after they left home, he by some means got some wheat, and loading it in a cart, hauled it to market near by, so that he might have means to buy ammunition, in order to enjoy the shooting of his pistols of which he had two in his possession. On the way home, having his younger brother with him, they stopped at the field where a neighbor's boy was plowing. Calling the boy from the plow, they climbed the fence, looking at and handling the pistols. William permitted one of the boys after loading it, to look at and handle it. Immediately he pulled the spring, he should not. The load discharged, slightly wounding the boy, called from the field, in the finger, hitting Wm. in the left eye-brow, passing through the brain. Thus in a moment this young man was ushered into eternity, there to face the history of his conduct, while in life. Parents picture before your children the sad fact, this community was made to witness; they may profit by it, and the cause of its disobedience. Little did the parents think when they left home, that they would on the way back haul their son home cold in death. Funeral services by Daniel Shively and D. Neff, from Eph. 6: 1, 2, 3.

AARON B. MILLER.

New Paris, Ind.

To Bro. S. Z. Sharp.

I READ with interest your communication from Goshen, Ind., and felt glad that you enjoyed the privilege of learning something so easily, which some have had to learn from sad experience. Hope you have learned the important lesson thoroughly, so as to be saved the sadness of learning it experimentally. Experience is a thorough teacher, and in reference to the matter you learned about, at the committee meeting. I know of one who has learned from experience, that it is better to hearken to the Lord than to be governed by human authority, even in finances. Cardinal Wolsey said on his death bed, "Had I served my God as well as I served my King, He would not have forsaken me in this my hour of deep distress." The feeling of the famous Cardinal, is but the feeling of many a broken-down minister. Had he served his God as well as his church, he would not have forsaken him when distress came. Humanity is weak. The friends who in our sunshine live, when Winter comes are gone. The prosperous generally have friends; but if a man wants to be pushed over, just let him get on the down grade financially. Let him make financial blunders, and (though his soul is swallowed up, so to speak in the service of the cause of Christ), mismanage a little, and he is sure to become a victim for reproach, and very often those who ought to be his nearest friends become the abettors of cruelty and ruin. I know a minister whose zeal carried him so far that he made financial ventures, so as to situate himself better for ministerial service; but he failed and the result was simply sad. I don't approve of ministers, nor any one else involving themselves. In fact I say, it is utterly wrong to do so. But when the wrong is unintentional, it is much worse to approach and defame character. True Christianity would say, "I'll help my fallen brother, I will give him another chance." Men after God's own heart are not infallible.— Human judgment is so imperfect that even when we would do good, we are apt to do wrong. If we have the right spirit we will do all in our power to make amends for our wrong doing, and that exertion on our part will satisfy God, whether it will men or not.

To the Youthful Saints in the English Prairie Church, Ind.

Dear Brethren:—

GRACE, peace and love be unto you all, and complete victory over sin by the Holy Ghost! Such, I desire, may be your lot, and that of all the saints of God. May the grand theme of our life be, constant approbation with Him whom we have professed to serve. Our life must be hid "with God in Christ." God is holy and to be saved by Him we must be holy also. Our own fallen, depraved, selfish, sinful nature is the bolted bar between us and life in Christ. Our sinful nature keeps us from any true happiness here, and from eternal bliss hereafter. God is holy and to dwell with him among the justified spirits in the upper world, we must live in Him in this world. And it is a heavenly and glorious truth, that we cannot live in God unless God lives in us. Neither can God live in us, unless we crucify our life. The idea that we can be buried with Christ in baptism, and arise in oddness of life, is a grand delusion, and is equally as absurd as it is to suppose that our life beyond the grave is to be mortal.

Some may say that this is too close, but Jesus says, "Narrow is the way." Men may say, "It is wide," but can we believe them? Which will you believe? Some say, it won't hurt to jest, joke, laugh or have a little innocent sport. I ask, did Jesus say so? Inspiration says "Except we have the mind of Christ, we are none of His." Did Jesus engage in the gratifications of carnality? Nay, verily, but denounced it, and says, that we should have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

Jesus was crucified for us, that we might live, nevertheless unless we are crucified to the world and our carnal mind, we cannot live with Him. "If we live with Him, we shall also reign with Him," but if we live to ourselves, we will miss heaven and sink to the pit of woe. If our life is hid with God in Christ, the desires of the world will die. "He that loveth the world, loveth not the Father." If we live in Jesus, we will not do like the unregenerate of heart. Our minds will be changed, our conversation will be holy, our conduct will be God-like. The saints of God cannot feast in the devil's pantry, neither will or can the blood-redeemed select their apparel out of Satan's wardrobe. The saints have robes of righteousness, and partake of food of which the world knoweth nothing.

If we will have to give an account of every idle word we speak, in the judgment, will we not also have to give an account for our vain dress and life? If we have been buried with Christ in baptism, let us also rise with Him, to walk in newness of life. Then will our life be hid with God in Christ. Then will our knees touch the earth as well as our feet, in humble submission to our great Master above. Then will we seek the throne of grace, not only once in a while, but "day and night." O may God help us all to live and die in him. Oh, how oft I have wept and wept in concern for you, and even now my tears are hardly restrained. It is through love for the soul that I address you so plainly, not knowing whether I shall see your faces any more in this life.

O that we might comprehend the heights and depths of the Redeemer's love for us! May we all love like Him, that we may be with him, when we have crossed the dark valley of death, and draw near to that celestial city, where we shall rejoice forever with the blood-redeemed through.

ISAIAH HURNER.

If we would have peace with God, we must obey Him in all things.

Notes of Travel.

I HAVE been laboring in Carroll Co. Ill., the past few weeks in the interest of Ashland College and also preaching as occasion demanded. So far as the country is concerned I consider this part of Northern Ill., one of the finest for farming I have seen in sixteen States and Canada. The surface is rolling—forming hills from ten to fifty feet high sloping gently and giving a diversified appearance. The prairies are large and laid off into beautiful farms, fenced in many instances with hedges, while the fine farm houses and large Pa. barns are surrounded with groves of Lombardy poplar, maple, willow or some other kind of trees. It is decidedly a stock raising country, and the fields of rich clover are dotted over with herds of cattle and swine. Nothing could be finer, to a "Pennsylvania Dutch" farmer than a view from the top of a farm house perched on one of the hills. The soil is alluvial and especially adapted to the raising of corn and grass.—Towards the Mississippi the country becomes more hilly and finally forms the river bluffs produced by the river, cutting through the hill and exposing the skeleton of the country, which in this instance consists of the Niagara formation of limestone and affording many opportunities to the geologist to notice interesting facts.—The Brethren have been flourishing in this part of the State. The Northern District contains fourteen churches and about twenty-five hundred members with fine prospects for an increase. There are many earnest workers here in the missionary cause. The Danish mission owes its existence to them. There are some noble workers here whom we need not name as their works are written in "another book".—Between the Northern and Southern district is an unoccupied territory, which is "worked up" from both sides.

The Sabbath school has its numerous friends here. I have never been in more interesting schools among the Brethren than I find here, and what is most encouraging is, that East and West, North and South, the Brethren teach the same thing, and have a certain uniformity in their plan. I would not wish to be understood, however, that there is not plenty of room for improvement. The Sabbath-school is a fixed fact in our church now and no power that will oppose it, can impede its progress.

The two educational institutions under the control of the Brethren are equally well established facts. The Ashland College, and Huntington Normal School, are gaining ground every day. Being better acquainted with the former, I am happy to say it has its host of friends through the great West. The principle on which it is founded seems to give universal satisfaction. While a few of our very "fast" Brethren and some very "slow" ones will not join the ranks, it gives us exceeding great pleasure to know that the great body of the brotherhood is in harmony with the project, and those having the control of said school wish to assure our dear brethren that they will do their best to merit the approval of the general brotherhood. S. Z. SHARP, Lanark, Ill.

GLEANINGS.

From S. Z. Sharp.—Bro. Daniel Miller of Lanark is our authorized agent to collect the funds for Ashland College, Ohio, as they become due. Also to solicit donations from those in Milledgeville and Lanark congregations who have not yet been called on.

To those who have responded so kindly and liberally we extend our hearty thanks, and especially are indebted to the Elders who have rendered us special favors. Prospects very good.

From Halling, Kansas.—Myself and companion left home on the 3rd day of June, last, to visit the Brethren in Jasper and Newton counties, Mo. My wife was taken sick on the 23rd of June and died on the 4th day of July, at the house of R. Brooks in Newton Co., Mo. She has been a member of the Brethren for thirty-four years. Age was 64 years, 11 months and 28 days, and I can say she was in the faith and was willing to die. JOSEPH KENNEY.

From Huntington, Ind.—I will drop a few lines from this part of God's moral vineyard. We held a choice for a minister on the 15th of June. The lot fell on Bro. Clinton Murray, who used to live among the Brethren in Neosho Co., Kansas. We hope and trust by the prayers of the righteous, he may be the means of doing much good in the name of Jesus. Our arm of the church seems prosperous, but have had no additions lately.

We have a prosperous Sunday-school the first ever held here. Everybody seems to enjoy the benefits of it very much.

DORSEY HONGDEN.

From Crescent Hill, Mo.—Bro. J. S. Mohler, from Henry Co., came to us on the day previous to the fourth Lord's day of July and preached in the school-house at night. Congregation not so large. Also on Sunday and Monday night to a house full of hearers. The word was preached in its purity and hope, there may be some good done here yet. After meeting he distributed some of his pamphlets entitled "Railroad Sermon." We hope some other brother will pay us just such a visit. This is the first preaching we have had for a year; it makes me glad to hear the word preached.

On the morning of August first, near this place a storm done some damage. It blew over one house and killed a woman and also broke the man's collar bone. Broke off considerable corn in the fields. This is about all the damage it done. We should all work for the interest of our blessed Master, while it is called to day, for the night will come when no man can work. E. FANSLER.

From H. W. Strickler.—Our church is in a prosperous condition, but sadly miss the labors of brother David Wolfe, his health being such that he is unable to labor any, but is slowly recovering. May the brethren and sisters remember him in their prayers.

From Elkhart, Iowa.—The BRETHREN AT WORK comes regularly to our office. It gives good satisfaction as far as I know. Go on dear Brethren in the good work, don't fear man for you have a stronger arm to support you than man. I think the time has come for these erroneous ideas of man to be exposed and the true light to shine on thousands of misled men and women. S. M. GOUGHNOUR.

From John Forney.—I was North over a hundred miles, to visit the Brethren, and attend council-meeting. On my return had meeting in a little town called Clyde, where the Brethren never had preached. The Methodists gave me their meeting-house. Had a good meeting and the best attention.

From Dunkirk, Ohio.—The Brethren of Eagle Creek, Hancock Co., Ohio, are still adding to their facilities for spreading the Gospel within the limits of their own district. They have a new house of worship near Arlington, Ohio, and on the 4th inst. the dedication sermon was preached by Bro. L. H. Dickey, assisted by Eld. J. P. Ebersole. The name suggested for this house was "Pleasant Ridge" church, and will hereafter be known by that name. The means thus expended are but loaned to the Lord and will be credited to us many-fold in the world to come. S. T. BOSSEMAN.

From Linganore, Md.—I presume you made a mistake in reporting me on a committee to W. Va., as it is not on the report of A. M. No harm done I hope. Glad to see your encouragement and enterprise; hope your labors may be blessed with the best of consequences, as you hold a powerful lever.—The Press, may God help you in every way, and bless you with such wisdom as will enable you to glorify his name. J. D. TROSTLE.

From Dunning Creek church, Pa.—Today we had our Harvest meeting. We had a very good meeting, good attendance, good preaching, and the best of all, three dear souls were willing to come out on the Lord's side, to be buried with Him in baptism, to walk in newness of life. Our prayers are, that God may make them useful branches in His church. I would also state that all three have been readers of the BRETHREN AT WORK the last year. We now number nearly one hundred in this church, four preachers, six deacons. We formerly belonged to the Yellow Creek church where the A. M. was held in 1877. Our church is West from where A. M. was held.

As this report is of a Harvest meeting, it might not be amiss to give you a short account of our crops. Wheat was good, oats and grass were good. Corn will be a light crop on account of dry weather. Fruit is almost an entire failure, owing to a frost in May. THOMAS T. HOLSINGER.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

From the following it would seem, that the atmosphere in Egypt has much to do with the preservation of the ruins for which the region is particular noted:

It is feared that the atmosphere of London will soon damage the surface of Cleopatra's Needle. The Luxor obelisk, erected in the Place de la Concorde in Paris in 1836, is some 3,400 years old, having stood with another still larger one before the great temple of Thebes. The stone is syenite granite, of a brownish red color. Thirty-six years of exposure to the atmosphere of Paris has affected the stone more than the same number of centuries' exposure to the purer air of Egypt.

The new wheat crop promises low-priced flour next Winter, the product is so abundant.

Sitting Bull has made application to be allowed to come back; the Government refuses.

The yellow fever has become alarmingly prevalent in New Orleans. Up to Aug 3rd, the total number of cases were 195, and the deaths 53. Extraordinary precautions are being taken by Cairo, Memphis and other cities to prevent the introduction of the disease.

A frightful collision occurred on the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railroad about midnight of the 6th inst., in which fifteen were killed and thirty-five wounded. The collision was between the mail train going West at the rate of forty miles an hour and a freight train going at the rate of 25 miles an hour.

A telegram from London says: Twenty-four thousand nail-makers are on a strike and express unanimous determination to hold out. The nail-makers at Bromsgrove and Blackheath districts will join in the strike.

A RELIGIOUS WEEKLY.

EDITED AND PUBLISHED BY

J. H. MOORE & M. M. ESHELMAN.

THE BRETHREN AT WORK is an uncompromising advocate of Primitive Christianity in all its ancient purity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice.

And maintains that the sovereign, unmerited, unsolicited grace of God is the only source of pardon, and that the vicarious sufferings and meritorious works of Christ are the only price of redemption.

That Faith, Repentance and Baptism are conditions of pardon, and hence for the remission of sins.

That Trine Immersion or dipping the candidate three times face forward is Christian Baptism.

That Feet-Washing, as taught in John 13, is a divine command to be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening, or after the close of the day.

That the Seduction of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Resistance are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That a Non-Conformity to the world in dress, customs, daily walk and conversation is essential to true holiness and Christian piety.

It maintains that in public worship, or religious exercises, Christians should appear as directed in 1 Cor. 11:4, 5.

It also advocates the scriptural duty of Anointing the sick with oil in the name of the Lord.

In short it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the Apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and disorders of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly true.

SEEDS.

We are sowing, daily sowing,
 Countless seeds of good and ill,
 Scattered on the level lowland,
 Cast upon the windy hill;
 Seeds that sink in rich brown furrows,
 Soft with heaven's gracious rain;
 Seeds that rest upon the surface
 Of the dry, unyielding plain.

Seeds that fall amid the stillness
 Of the lonely mountain glen;
 Seeds cast out in crowded places,
 Trodden under foot of men;
 Seeds by idle hearts forgotten,
 Flung at random on the air;
 Seeds by faithful souls remembered,
 Sown in tears and love and prayer.

Seeds that lie unchanged, unquicken'd,
 Lifeless on the tanning mold;
 Seeds that live and grow and flourish
 When the sower's hand is cold;
 By a whisper sow we blessings,
 By a breath we scatter strife;
 In our words and looks and actions
 Lie the seeds of death and life.

Thou who knowest all our weakness,
 Leave us not to sow alone!
 Bid thine angels guard the furrows
 Where the precious grain is sown,
 Till the fields are crown'd with glory,
 Filled with mellow, ripened ears—
 Filled with fruit of life eternal
 From the seeds we sowed in tears.

Check the froward thoughts and passions,
 Stay the hasty, heedless hands,
 Lest the germs of sin and sorrow
 Mar our fair and pleasant lands.
 Father, help each weak endeavor,
 Make each faithful effort blessed,
 Till Thine harvest shall be garnered,
 And we enter into rest.

ANALYSIS OF ANNUAL MEETING OF 1878, WITH OBSERVATIONS.

BY D. P. SAYLOR.

IN the report of A. M., 76 brethren are reported as having taken part in the discussion. Of these, five when combined, were up 104 times, one 30 and one 26 times, while 30 of the speakers were up but one time, 8 two, and five three times. The report contains 4289 lines, of these 819 are filled by the clerk reading queries, closing and opening remarks; the rulings by the Moderator, including his verbal report of the Danish Mission, leaving 3470 lines to discussion; of these the five most frequent speakers use 1168, two of them fill 772 lines, leaving 2309 for the 71 remaining speakers, equally divided among them, will give each one 324 lines. How many of the speakers are lay members does not appear, the presumption is, but a few, if any, and the hue and cry of clerical intolerance, domination, and dictation amounts to nothing; and what is said in favor of public mass-meetings for the transaction of church business, this analysis proves to be vain, as is clearly manifested that the business before the meeting is participated in by but few of those present. Query, could not these few dispose of the business before them in a private room as well as in the public assembly of the great mixed multitude, who come to the meeting simply to gratify a morbid desire of the natural mind, to the great discomfort, and cost of those who really study the merits of the question from a Scriptural standpoint?

Being for many years a close observer, and active participant in the disposition of business of A. M., I know whereof I affirm. The truth that the really weighty and important part of business before A. M., is disposed of by the Standing Committee, cannot be denied, and why should it not be? They are the representatives of the church sent by the voice of the brotherhood, expressed, first in each branch of the church sending a delegate to the District Meetings, and by these each District meeting sends a delegate to the Standing Committee of A. M. Thus the whole membership is as fairly represented in the councils of Annual Meetings, as the people are represented in the Legislative councils of the nations. At some Annual Meetings, one half of the queries from District Meetings come without any answer at all, but are referred to Standing Committee for an answer; while some queries have been discussed for hours in public, until the meeting became so confused that nothing could be done, but to send it into the Committee room for final disposition of it. Very few, if any, such answers are objected to when read to the public.

For the last thirty years I know that the most important business before Annual Meeting had to be, and was so done. All applications for committees &c., are made to the Standing Committee, as well as the many letters sent from different branches of the church, asking for private advice and instructions from the Standing Committee on most important matters, which are never read before the mixed multitude. If a delicate case should arise in the church in which I live, and I would desire the counsel of my senior, and more experienced brethren, I would not have it published in the meeting of a mixed multitude; I would do as many have done, address my inquiry to the sober, reflecting mind of the Elders of the Standing Committee.

What use is there then in conveying many thousand responsible and irresponsible, of interested and disinterested persons to one place at an expense of going to, and being fed while there, of thousands of dollars to hear and see 76 brethren take a small part in the business of the meeting? I am, and have been opposed to this system for many years.

I was foreman of the Committee of 1866, to devise a plan to hold A. M. In that place we say: "We recommend that the Annual council be formed by the delegates sent by the District Meeting, and by all the ordained elders present." And from among these, "The bishops and elders of the church holding the A. M., shall select, from among the bishops present, the Standing Committee. These should organize for the reception of the queries presented by the delegates from the District Meetings (or churches), after which all proper queries shall be read to the general council meeting for adoption or amendment." And, "The church holding the meeting, shall make arrangements to receive and entertain all the brethren and sisters privately. There shall be no boarding tent put up at the place of meeting to entertain and feed a mixed multitude as heretofore."

In 1867, the brethren of Eastern Va., held A. M., according to this plan, and with the exception of a turbulent spirit in some of the debating brethren, the plan proved a success. Over their spirits we had no control, full power to control them was vested in the Standing Committee, but it failed to enforce its power.

The A. M., of 1869, held by the brethren in Va., was held according to this plan, but all others have disregarded the plan, and even some who were on the Committee to form the plan of 1866, have with others clamored for another, which if adopted would be no more observed than the one we now have. I believe it is now the understanding that next A. M., shall be held according to the plan of 1866, subject to the different amendments of A. M., since; but as these are numerous, there ought at least a committee of one have been appointed a codifier; that is, if there is one brother who understands how to arrange the original plan with all the amendments in regular order so as to be understood by all the brethren. If I had been present, I would have offered a resolution that all amendments stand repealed until the plan of 1866 be thoroughly tried by all the churches West as well as East. I have no doubt of the efficiency of the plan.

It is difficult to have us all understand such things alike. We cannot employ language, but some one will put a different construction on it to what was intended. In the plan of 1866, we specified in what sense a boarding tent should not be put up, yet how was it construed by many of the speakers at last A. M.?

The Brethren of Va., in 1869 understood our meaning as well as our language, they had put up a small tent to entertain and feed the brethren and sisters, but not one to entertain and feed a mixed multitude as heretofore.

JESUS CHRIST, THE SURE FOUNDATION.

BY J. W. SOUTHWOOD.

WE understand that Jesus Christ is the only sure foundation upon which to build our hopes for the future; if we would gain the heavenly bliss of the saints and dwell in the bright mansions of eternal glory; yet it is possible and even probable, and more than this, it is a fact that men have, and will continue to lay foundations and try to get others to build thereon; but all such foundations are sandy and will not, nor cannot stand beyond the limits of time, nevertheless they may and do fall sooner; but as we want and need a foundation that will not crumble with time nor wash away with the floods of sin, hence we gladly accept Jesus.

"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 3: 11. For he is the Stone "which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is no other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

Then in view of the fact that Jesus Christ is the only sure Foundation—the only means of salvation—"the Chief Corner-stone," "the Rock of our salvation;" would we not better all build upon this Foundation and not upon the follies of this world?

Would we not better worship the true and living God, instead of the goddess of fashion? If we would build on that sure Foundation, we would better take heed to all of Christ's commands, and humble ourselves under His mighty hand, so the walls of our works and conversation reach down to and rest upon the Rock of our salvation—even Christ Jesus.

"Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock." "And every one that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man which built his house upon the sand; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell, and great was the fall of it." Matt. 7: 24-27. Reader, are you hearing the sayings of the blessed Master and not doing them, and thus building your house upon the sand, even upon the follies of this world or the doctrine of men? or are you hearing and doing and thereby build your house upon the Rock Christ Jesus, fearless of all the scold's of un-sundered world, or a popular Christianity?

He who takes advice is sometimes superior to him who gives it.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

NOT eloquence in the pulpit, nor wealth in the pews, but the reviving influence of the Holy Spirit. Spurgeon says, "The Holy Spirit is able to make the Word as successful now as in the days of the apostles. He can bring in by hundreds and thousands as easily as by ones and twos. The reason why we are not more prosperous is, that we have not the Holy Spirit with us in might and power, as in early times. If we had the Spirit sealing our ministry with power, it would signify very little about our talent.

Men might be poor and uneducated; their words might be broken and ungrammatical; there might be none of the polished periods of Hall or glorious Chalmers; but if the might of the Spirit attended them, the humblest evangelist would be more successful than the most eloquent of preachers. It is extraordinary grace, not talent that wins the day; it is extraordinary spiritual power that we need. Mental power fills a chapel, but spiritual power fills the church. Oh! we know some before whom we shrink into nothing as to talent, but who have no spiritual power, and when they speak they have not the Holy Spirit with them. But we know others, simple-hearted, who speak their country dialect, and who stand up to preach in their country places, and the Spirit of God clothes every word with power. Hearts are broken, souls are saved, sinners are born again. Oh, Spirit of the living God, we want thee! Thou art the life, the soul, the source of thy people's success; without Thee they can do nothing; with Thee they can do everything.

BE KIND TO THE LIVING.

IT is all very well to give men fine funerals when they die, and to write long obituary notices proving them to be saints uncanonized. It is a good thing to pause—we who must all die some day—for a little moment to do honor to the dust and ashes that were yesterday a man. But while we do this, can we not also give a little to the living? Can we not be generous and just and forgiving to those who still have ears to hear and hearts to throb with pain and anxiety?

How many hearts might have been saved from breaking by a perusal of their obituary notices; how many might have been comforted by an antemortem perusal of the verses on their tombstones! It is after he is dead that we say of the man, "He was brave and good;" of the woman, "She was pure and pretty." The abuse, the sneer, the innuendo, the malicious whisper, the coarse caricature—these are for living, breathing, bleeding human beings. Any amount of tombstone praise and funeral pageants that you like, but would it harm us to be a little kinder to the living?

KEEP BUSY.

THE man who has nothing to do, is the most miserable of beings. If you have no regular work, do chores as farmers do when it rains too hard to work in the field. In occupation we forget our troubles, and get a respite from sorrow. The man whose mind and hands are busy finds no time to weep and wail. If work is slack, spend the time in reading. No man ever knew too much. The hardest students in the world are the old men who know the most. If you lack books, there are free or very cheap libraries, at least in cities, at your command.—The man who does not acquire some item of useful information between day-break and bed-time, must mournfully say, with the Roman Emperor, "I have lost a day."—Sel.

To be in a passion is to punish one's self for the faults and impertinences of another.

MY WIFE.

WHAT maiden in the day of yore,
Smote me with most tremendous power,
Inflicting pangs unknown before?—

My wife.

Who pitied me in my distress,
And, by one simple little "Yes,"
Changed all my woe to blessedness?—

My wife.

Who did, with look almost divine,
My soul in cords of love entwine,
And gave her priceless heart for mine?—

My wife.

Who to the altar went with me,
Our hearts aglow with ecstasy,
And my good angel vowed to be?—

My wife.

Who, since I to the altar led
The blushing bride, and vows were said,
Has nought but blessings round me shed?—

My wife.

Who in our pilgrimage below,
Has cheered with smiles the passage through,
And ever faithful proved and true?—

My wife.

When passed with sorrow, toil and cares,
Who all my grief and trouble shares,
And half, at least, my burden bears?—

My wife.

When tempests rage and billows roll,
And human passions spurn control,
Who calms the tumult of my soul?—

My wife.

When storms are hushed and skies are bright,
And shadows dark are changed to light,
Who joys with me in sweet delight?—

My wife.

Who was in youth th' admired of men;
But now, at threescore and ten,
Is far more beautiful than then?—

My wife.

As down life's rugged steep I go,
With careful, trembling steps and slow,
Who clings to me and helps me through?—

My wife.

Who, when my toilsome days are o'er,
Will meet me on blest Canaan's shore,
And sing with me forevermore?—

My wife.

CLOSE COMMUNION.

BY J. S. MOHLER.

FATHER.—Dear son, I am concerned for your salvation, and have wondered why you stood aloof from the church so long, and in danger of losing your eternal interests in the world to come.

Son.—I would have joined the church before now; but there is one thing in the church I do not understand. It looks a little selfish to me. I mean close Communion. I would like to know your reasons for observing it?

F.—So far as Gospel authority is concerned, it is silent about those terms, but we think the principle of close Communion is established.

S.—In what part of the Gospel, and how?

F.—In Hebrews 13: 10, we read as follows: "We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle." Here we notice that the right to eat at the Christian altar is denied those of the Jewish religion.

S.—Yes, but the apostle does not deny that right to any Christian people; only to the Jews.

F.—But we must notice the ground upon which the right to commune is based. The Revelator says, "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14. Then if the right to the tree of life is based upon obedience to the commandments of Christ, doubtless the right to partake of the Christian's altar is based upon the same ground. For it is clear, had those who served the tabernacle, served Christ, they would have had as much right at the Christian altar as any other believer; their disqualification arose from their disobedience.

S.—Your argument seems conclusive and the doctrine of close Communion pretty clearly established; but then Paul says, 1 Cor. 11: 28, "But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup." This, it seems to me, gives every believer the privilege to eat at the Lord's table, and destroys your argument on close Communion.

F.—It should be borne in mind that when the apostle wrote, the church was not divided, and subdivided as it is now, into hundreds of fragments. The various church names we now have, were not in use then. But the apostle wrote to the members of a united church, and not a divided one (save a little temporary trouble at Corinth at the time). They had the same Lord; the same faith; the same baptizing; the same ordinances in all things; they had kept the ordinances as they were delivered to them. Had the division of the church existed then, as now, the apostle would doubtless have referred to all who were not in full obedience to the doctrine of Christ as he did to those of the Jewish religion. "We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat."

S.—It never occurred to my mind that there were no divisions of doctrine in the apostolic church, hence no occasion for the term open, or close Communion. I also infer from your argument that certain qualifications are required to constitute us proper communicants at the Lord's table. I should like to know what these qualifications are?

F.—One of the most important qualifications, is union at heart.

S.—That is just the view of open communicants, hence they unite in communing.

F.—It should be borne in mind that mere external union in form, is no evidence of heart union.

S.—What is the difference?

F.—Heart union is based upon obedience to the true doctrine of Christ, its members being perfectly joined together in the same mind and judgment; while mere external union implies or admits a difference in doctrine; but only unites for the time being, retaining their difference still.

S.—Then I understand there must be union, or oneness of doctrine; this produces oneness of heart: this only qualifies us to eat at the Christian altar.

F.—You have a true conception of a proper communicant. There can be no communion without union, and union that is not from the heart, is no union at all, and there can be no real union without sameness of doctrine. But it must be remembered that there may be union on the side of error, as well as on the side of truth.

S.—This is a new phase of the subject, how can this be?

F.—In the days of Moses, while he was receiving the law, the Israelites in camp made them a golden calf and worshiped it; here was a great union, but on the side of error. Exodus 32. Again, in the days of the prophet Elijah, there was another great union on the side of error. All Israel had gone after Baal, save 7,000 men, and their prophets were 450 men; while but one true prophet existed. Other cases might be referred to, but these are sufficient to establish the point under consideration.

S.—I perceive that union may be on the side of error, as well as on the side of truth; but how can I discover which is the proper union.

F.—You can discover this by examining the basis of doctrine by which such union is effected. If it is based upon obedience to the whole doctrine of Christ, it is true Gospel union, if but part of the doctrine of Christ is complied with, we may well doubt its acceptability in the sight of God.

S.—I am now satisfied as to what the basis of Gospel union must be; but wish to know whether there are other qualifications to commune to divine acceptance.

F.—Another very important qualification, is consistency.

S.—What do you mean by consistency?

F.—We mean, a strait forward course in doctrine, acting from right principles; while inconsistency, is contrary in its character.

S.—Can you refer to a case of inconsistency in the Gospel?

F.—The case of Peter eating with the Gentiles in the absence of the Jews; then withdrawing from them when the Jewish brethren came; is a case in point, and because of Peter's inconsistency, Paul withstood him, for Peter was to blame. Gal. 2: 11, 12, 13.

S.—But are there any inconsistencies practiced by the church now?

F.—We are inclined to think there are.

S.—Will you be so kind as to explain them, as I am concerned about this matter, and want to be right.

F.—For your sake, and others who are equally concerned, I will try and do so, for the sole purpose of establishing the truth as it is in Jesus. A church that holds close baptism, and open communion is in my judgment not very consistent.

S.—What is meant by close baptism?

F.—Close baptism, means, that one mode only of baptism is right, and practiced by a church, all other modes being innovations.

S.—Where does the inconsistency come in?

F.—To exclude all from church fellowship who are not baptized with the baptism of that church and commune with those who have been baptized with some other baptism, does not look very consistent.

S.—But does not the person who has received alien baptism, commune at his risk?

F.—Not altogether. If the church has the right to close its doors against alien baptism, has it not the same right to close its doors against improper communicants?

S.—It would seem that the church has that right; still I cannot see that the church is to blame, for opening its communion doors for members of all churches to commune. The responsibility it seems to me, rests on the individual communing, and not on the church.

F.—But a wilful opening of the door of communion, and a general invitation for members of all churches to come, and commune, is a virtual acknowledgment on the part of the church, that there is no real difference between them. How does this harmonize with close baptism? If the person who has received alien baptism is good enough to commune with, why not have an open door for baptism, and be consistent?

S.—But is the church responsible for the alien baptism of their persons or churches?

F.—No; but it is responsible for acknowledging that baptism in open communion.

S.—But I cannot see how the church could be chargeable with inconsistency or guilt even in open communion.

F.—Read what John says, in his second epistle 10th and 11th verses, speaking of a certain class of believers who, if they did not bring the true doctrine, were not to be received into their houses, (houses of worship), and he that bade him God speed became partaker of his evil deeds. Just so in the church to-day. If I willingly and knowingly, commune with a drunkard, or a liar, or a covetous or a profane man, I then and there, acknowledge that man my equal in religion, and become partaker of his evil deeds, for in willingly communing with him, I bid him God speed. To retain my integrity, I must withdraw from the Communion table, or have him withdraw. This applies with equal force where there exists diversity of doctrine. If an immersionist willing and knowingly communes with a Pedo Baptist, then and there he compromises his baptism, and virtually acknowledges by his act, that baptism by pouring or sprinkling is as good as his own, and to oppose Pedo Baptism after that, would certainly be very inconsistent. Further, let it be understood that no man can commune to himself. It requires at least two to commune. Koinonia, the Greek for Communion, means fellowship, society, participation. The letter, as well as the spirit of Communion, means a number of persons; hence the propriety of all being of the same mind and judgment to commune to divine acceptance. It is because of this, that Paul says, "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and the table of devils." 1 Cor. 10: 21. This clearly proves our position. The principle is, that the Lord's table, is not the devil's table, and the devil's table, is not the Lord's table. Where the apostle says, "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils," he does not allude to any physical inability to do so; but that we cannot do so from Christian principle, without violating our integrity and compromising our religion, and becoming partaker of the guilt of devils, equally so now. A wilful and knowing communion with those we know to be in error, should that error only consist in one thing, is an acknowledgement of indifference and makes such person guilty of the same error.

S.—I admit the propriety, and conclusiveness of your argument; but from the reading of the Scriptures I am constrained to believe that Judas communed with Christ, and Christ certainly knew what was in Judas' heart; that would make Christ a partaker of Judas' evil deeds. How will you reconcile this matter with your argument?

F.—Can you prove that Judas communed with Christ?

S.—Do not the Scriptures clearly teach that Judas ate with Christ in the night when the Communion was instituted, as shown by his receiving the sop.

F.—The sop you refer to pertains to the Supper, and not the Communion.

S.—What supper?

F.—The Supper instituted by Christ in the night of His betrayal.

S.—I thought that was the Jewish Passover they were celebrating.

F.—In this you are mistaken. In the thirteenth chapter of John, we learn that it was before the feast of the Passover that Christ met with His disciples and instituted the Supper and Communion. Again, the Jews would not go into the judgment hall lest they be defiled, but that they might eat the Passover. John 18: 28. Here we see that at the trial of Christ, the Passover was not yet eaten. But Christ had eaten a meal with His disciples the evening previous, hence it is clear that the sop you refer to, did not pertain to the Passover, but to the Supper or meal eaten by the disciples in connection with which the Communion was instituted.

S.—I had an idea that somehow the sop connected with, or pertained to the Communion.

F.—In this you are equally mistaken. Matthew and Mark both reveal the fact, that the traitor was revealed before Christ took special bread to bless it, i. e., the Communion. From John we learn, 15th chapter, that so soon as the traitor was revealed by receiving the sop, he went immediately out i. e., before the Communion was instituted; between the eating of the Supper as instituted by Christ, and the taking of special bread and blessing it, or the institution of the Communion, Judas went out, hence did not commune. As an additional evidence of the distinction between the Passover, Supper, and Communion, we might refer to their distinct names in the original. The Greek for Passover is, pascha, for Supper is, Deipnon, for Communion is, Koinonia. Judas partook of the deipnon (of which the sop was a part, but not of the Koinonia, hence Judas did not commune.

S.—I must confess that your reasoning has thrown new light on the subject. I never could exactly understand how the sop belonged to the Communion, still I could not locate it anywhere else. The idea of a supper separate from the Communion, never entered my mind, but now it is clear as daylight, I can easily understand how Judas could receive the sop, and not commune. But are there any other inconsistencies among the churches?

F.—Pulpit affiliation and close Communion also seem inconsistent.

S.—What is meant by pulpit affiliation?

F.—Simply assisting ministers of other churches in protracted efforts, for the conversion of sinners, at the same time not allow those members, nor those who they themselves were instrumental in converting, to commune with them, unless they joined the same church.

S.—No, it is certainly not charitable to assist those with whom we would not commune, and less still to deny those the right to commune with us whom we had been instrumental in converting, unless they joined our particular church, after giving them free and full liberty to join any other church, as I have heard ministers do. But you have based heart union upon obedience to all the doctrine of Christ, and this only would constitute us proper communicants. Now I would like a brief outline of the doctrine.

F.—This I will consent to give in a very brief manner.

1. Conviction of sin.
2. Objective faith in the Son of God.
3. Repentance, that need not be repented of.
4. Subjective faith, evinced by our obedience to all the precepts of the Gospel.
5. Baptism by trine action as commanded by Christ, Matt. 28: 19, and practiced by the apostles and their successors hundreds of years in an unbroken line of succession.
6. Washing the saint's feet as commanded by Christ, John 13: 15, and referred to by Paul, 1 Tim. 5: 19.
7. The Lord's Supper, Deipnon, an evening meal as defined by Webster, of which the apostle ate, as Christ was taking special bread and blessed it, thereby instituting the Communion. Matt. 26: 26; Mark 14: 22.

8. The Communion, Koinonia as instituted by Christ, while the disciples were eating Supper. Matt. 26: 26 latter clause; Mark 14: 22.

9. The Christian salutation commanded four times by Paul, 1 Cor. 16: 20, 2 Cor. 13: 12; 2 Thess. 5: 26; Rom. 16: 16, and once by Peter, 1 Peter 5: 14.

10. Prayer-covering for the sisters as commanded by Paul, 1 Cor. 11.

11. Non-conformity in dress, custom, conversation, pleasure, amusement &c., as taught by Christ and the apostles.

12. Non-swearing. Matt. 5: 34; James 5: 12.

13. Non-lawing. 1 Cor. 6: 1; Matt. 5: 44.

In addition to these requirements of the Gospel, we must cultivate the graces and virtues of Christianity, that we have excellency of character, such as humility, obedience, temperance, charity, honesty, truthfulness, chaste conversation, prayerfulness. In short, manifest in our lives the fruit of the Spirit, and not of the flesh.

S.—I am aware that you have Gospel for all you have referred to; but is it absolutely necessary that we be so particular, especially in some of these little things?

F.—It is very safe to have the Word of God on our side.

S.—I know that the Word of God is sure and steadfast; but then suppose we attend to the main requirements of the Gospel, but leave undone such little things, as Feet-washing, salutation, prayer-covering for the sisters, would this condemn us?

F.—In answer, I can only refer you to the case of Peter, who doubtless thought as you are thinking, that Feet-washing was too little to be observed; but his refusal would have severed his part with Christ. Now if you can show from the Gospel, that you are better than Peter was, or that you can be saved some other way, then your plea may amount to something. Besides this, I cannot see how you can call anything little, that is commanded, either by Christ or the apostles. I do not know but you are sinning in so doing.

S.—Perhaps I should not have used the term, little. I do not mean to disparage the precept of the Gospel; but somehow I can see no propriety in being so very particular.

F.—You must admit, whether you see a propriety in strict obedience or not; that it is infallibly safe, while to be only partially obedient, may not be safe.

S.—There is no doubt as to the safety of the position you occupy.

F.—It is not only safe, but forms the basis of union for Gospel Communion. Suppose every believer would obey the Gospel in all things in its plain, simple meaning, what would the result be? Would we not have Gospel union all over Christendom? Yes; and heart union too. Zion's watchmen would see eye to eye. All schisms and divisions would cease, and we would have no more use for the terms, open and close Communion, than the brethren had in the apostolic age of the church. We would be one people, perfectly united upon the broad platform of the Gospel. We could then freely, consistently and by authority of the Gospel, commune wherever we might go, among all the churches of the land. The term, churches, then, would not mean divisions of the church; but branches of the same church or organization. It is not because men cannot see alike, that we have so many divisions in the church; but because men and women are not willing to obey that, which they already know.

S.—I now see the propriety of your reasons for close Communion. If I understand you correctly, your reasons for close Communion, are to retain the purity of the doctrine of Christ; and this you can only do, by strict obedience to all things required at your hand.

F.—You understand us correctly. Close Communion upon any other ground, is mere selfishness.

S.—But do you believe that churches that are not so strict in obedience, are positively wrong?

F.—We should not concern ourselves so much as to who are positively wrong, as we should as to what is positively right. To obey God in all things as well as we know how, is certainly right and safe. This is all we claim, and all the Gospel claims.

S.—I admit the correctness of your premises, as well as your conclusions, and upon that basis, I am a close Communionist too. I see that there is no sectarianism nor selfishness about it; but simply love for the truth as it is in Jesus. Would to God that all believers were possessed of this love; disunion would soon be banished hence.

AN INVITATION TO SINNERS.

BY DAVID L. WILLIAMS.

"And when they saw it, they all murmured saying, That he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner." Luke 19: 7.

THE language of our text was uttered by the multitude that thronged our Savior's entrance into Jericho at the time that he dined with Zaccheus. Zaccheus had climbed into the tree in order to get a position that he might have a fair look at Jesus as He was passing with the multitudes thronging after him. Somehow or other he had attracted great attention, not that the multitudes really considered Him the Son of God or the Savior of the world, but from the reports circulated relative to the miracles that He did and the power in which He taught. He spoke as one having authority. Now Jesus seeing Zaccheus, called him down from the tree, telling him that He intended to dine at his house. They all marvelled; they say that Zaccheus is a sinner, and Christ who claims to be the Son of God, and we partly believe it, from the miracles that we have seen Him perform, and the fame that is gone abroad of Him; but now it astonishes us to see that He is going to become a guest with Zaccheus, that sinner who has not stood at all creditable in society. We cannot afford to stain our character so as to become a guest with such a low character as this sinner.

Mark you, that this great multitude consisted mainly of those who pretended to be righteous as a general thing, and those of course did not feel the real need of a Savior; consequently He could do them no good. It is those who are laden down with sin that He relieves. The invitation is, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Yes, Jesus was a friend to sinners; it was for sinners that He bled and died. He says, "came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance" that those who are whole need no physician, but they that are sick. The idea here advanced is, that Christ came to do for poor, mortal, sinful man, what he could not possibly do for himself—heal him, restore him from the maladies of sin, and reinstate him in the favor of God.

Herein is presented a sublime thought for our mortal minds to feast upon, and animate our souls with the ecstasy of gladness. To contemplate that we have such a friend who is holy, harmless and undefiled, yet is not only willing, but anxious to have us come to Him. He left His Father's side and the shining courts of heaven, denied Himself of the joys of that habitation for a season, acquainting Himself with sorrow and grief in order that we might become His children—His joint heirs in the everlasting kingdom—the region of the just, the estate of all purity. Contemplate the blessing of Zaccheus, that sinner who was favored with a Guest from heaven, the Son of God, who needeth not that any testify of Him, for He knew the state, the secret emotion of Zaccheus' heart. He knew that he could do him some good. No doubt Zaccheus was somewhat like David, did not justify himself in his sin, but was such that would acknowledge his faults and willing to reform. Such an one as this, Christ can assist and help. How Zaccheus must have rejoiced while favored with such a Guest as Jesus was; the Son of God going to eat dinner with him, he such a sinner, that he certainly was disfellowshipped from the religion of that day, hence was easy drawn to Christ. If he had at that time belonged to a religious body, as did our Savior's persecutors, he no doubt would have clung to it and rejected Christ, as it is with us in this nineteenth century. Those that have joined themselves to a religious body, cling to it whether their religion is pure and undefiled or not. They are like the Pharisees and Sadducees in our Savior's time. They "know" that their religion all is right.

Here again, is one grand and important thought, and that is, as Zaccheus was so base as to be rejected on account of his sinfulness by those of his brethren in the flesh, and Christ stooped to him so as to elevate him in society. Yes, dear sinner, this is what He came, and bled and died for, that He might elevate you; though you are vile and have sinned greatly, and have sunk your character beneath the notice of creditable people. He will stoop to you if you will yield to Him, and He will take your feet out of the mire and clay, and place them upon the Rock of ages. He will refine your character, and fit you for the best of society; will lead you to live a holy life—one that cannot be gainsayed by your neighbors.

Oh, sinner, what a Friend you have in Christ, and yet you reject Him. He is willing to become your Guest, while your neighbors are not willing to stoop so low. But if you will yield to Christ and accept Him as your Guest, He will elevate you above many of those who refuse Him. He loves you, dear sinner, though you may be low in sin, and your life much degraded. But He does not love your sins; it is you that He loves; your sins He hates. He knows that it will destroy you and ruin you. He wants to free you from it. He so loves you, that He is willing and anxious to do it, but for Him to accomplish, you must have some regard for yourself and Him too. You must yield to His kindness and grace, and He will refine the purpose of your heart, that you may be led to live a different life.—one that will be animated with the hope of that blessed immortality. No matter if you have been a great sinner. He is your Friend.

GRAINS OF TRUTH.

"Feasts of Charity."—Popular Churches and Popular Preachers.—Clouds, Tempests and Sunshine.—Patient Endurance.—Superiority of Christianity.—Right is Might.

FROM the Atlantic to the Pacific preparations are being made for "feasts of charity," thus showing that the primitive practices of the Gospel still live, and that a noble band of believers are not ashamed to maintain them in their purity. Who was it that recently said, that "the Gospel is a failure?" These disciples of Jesus know nothing about yielding up the holy, self-denying practices of the Lord and Master. Brethren, let no strife pull us apart, but let us continue to pull together. This together always wins—always brings victory.

Just so soon as churches begin to seek none but popular preachers, and popular preachers begin to seek none but popular churches, there will be a down-grade tendency, swift and sure. Churches should seek truth-loving, God-fearing, zealous men to declare the word of Truth, whether they be "chief men" or subordinates; and pious, God-fearing preachers should seek the isolated and numerically weak churches, where much hard work is needed, and where the devoted few are unable to do much themselves. Go and help them to develop activity—help them to increase in the riches of Christ—help them to bring out the hidden talent that it may also labor in the vineyard of the Lord. This is the way of the Lord, and He has strewn many blessings there. Highly-favored minister, what say you to gathering them in?

SOMETIMES it is cold, rainy and cloudy for weeks, and only now and then we get a glimpse of the sun. We become gloomy and impatient, declaring we never saw such weather. But after while the clouds pass away, the sun shines out grandly beautiful, and all nature sparkles with joy. Smiles seem to rest on things. Is not this a picture of the soul? Storms, tempests, trials of all kinds toss us hither and thither; we become alarmed and are ready to fall under the clouds, and then God drives them away, and lets in the bright rays of the Sun of Righteousness, and we are ourselves again. Right will prevail, and peace always follows war; so long as there is war, there is no peace, and during peace there can be no war. Blessed be God, who can always bring sunshine in due time!

"A MAN who has no enemies is seldom good for anything. He is made of that kind of material which is so easily worked that every one tries a hand in it. A sterling character—one who speaks for himself, and speaks what he thinks—is always sure to have enemies. They are as necessary to him as fresh air. They keep him alive and active. A celebrated person, who was surrounded by enemies, used to say, 'They are sparks which, if you do not blow them, go out of themselves.' Let this be your feeling while endeavoring to live down the scandal of those who are bitter against you. If you stop to dispute, you do but as they desire, and open the way for more abuse. Let the poor fellows talk. There will be reaction, if you do but perform your duty; and hundreds, who were once alienated from you, will flock to you and acknowledge their error."

CHRISTIANITY means, God incarnate, and seeks all rational beings. Judaism was purely local, being the system of one nation, but Christianity is designed as the one system for all nations. Greek gods were made in the image of men, hence when man worshipped those gods, he could rise no higher than himself—partook of his own nature, which when once defiled leads man from bad to worse. But Christianity raises us above our corrupt natures—makes us clean where we were filthy, puts light where there was all darkness. Mohammedanism has man for its head-light, hence Mohammedans fail to reach the higher and better life. Christianity has Christ for its Head, and this Head possesses a divinenature—a sinless nature; hence in following—in accepting this Leader, our natures become purified—our souls cleansed, our hopes confirmed and peace with the everlasting Father.

No one should attempt to carry his point by dictation—by mere assertion, but by the assertion of truth—by divine authority. This is the highest and absolute authority in all things. Why should you fret and worry, and get into a petty jealousy because your opponent carries his point—gives divine authority for his work? Never try to pull a man down because the argument is on his side—because he is in the right and you in the wrong. Walk out in the broad field of divine authority and be a free man. Study well and carefully the whole truth, and then stand for it. If a man will twist and evade, put the exact truth at him: he will not, he cannot withstand it. Take the right ground—the precise Truth as revealed by the Lord, and stand by it. Right may be pushed back a little, but God will, in due time, bring it to the front. There is strength in right, for God put it there. Who is not for right? M. M. E.

TRIP TO ROCK CREEK.

SOON after completing the work pertaining to the organization of the church at this place, of which an account will be found elsewhere, we left Lanark, by private conveyance, to attend a council meeting held by the church at Rock Creek, some twenty miles South of here. We were in company with brethren Enoch Ely, J. J. Emmert, and Daniel Miller. Found the ride a pleasant and enjoyable one, considerable rain having fallen, sufficient to lay the dust and cool the air. We reached the place on the morning of the 20th, and found the congregation assembled in the Brethren's large meeting-house, beautifully situated in the edge of the timber, on a lofty eminence, overlooking a vast tract of well improved farming country. The situation of the building is certainly a desirable one.

This congregation is composed of about one hundred members, pretty well scattered over Whiteside Co., and formerly a part of the Mill-edgeville congregation. It is moderately well supplied with ministers, who, owing to the scattered condition of the members, have considerable traveling to do, in order to fill their appointments, thus rendering their work rather laborious. The church here has been sorely afflicted for some time, and on this occasion met to confer with a committee sent by last Annual Meeting to adjust the existing difficulties. Elders Enoch Ely, Jas. R. Gash, and J. J. Emmert were the committee.

The council meeting commenced on Tuesday morning. There were two cases before the committee, and some other miscellaneous business. The members presented their grievances, one by one, in the most Christian-like manner. I never before saw a body, in the midst of such troubles, act so coolly and deliberately. The most critical points were presented and examined without producing the least excitement. In this respect the example of those brethren is certainly commendable.

The committee made their report on Thursday morning, and explained it in full, giving the members permission to ask all the questions regarding it they thought proper, so as to be sure that they fully understood the decision in all its parts. It was then put to vote whether the church would accept it, and carried without a dissenting voice. Every member seemed fully satisfied, and the whole church present, manifested tokens of the greatest satisfaction. One was reclaimed and another baptized, thus adding much to the joy of the church.

We regret that all the members were not present when the decision was read and explained, for that was the essential part of the work, and a feature on which much depends. It is so often the case that members think it is not necessary to put themselves to any extra trouble in order to hear the decision read and explained by the committee, as they can hear of the contents from other sources. In this, however, they may be mistaken, as none will likely be prepared to explain it so well, and answer questions as satisfactorily as the committee. Besides this, they ought to be present to file objections if they have any, and assist further in removing whatever may be in the way of peace and general good will. If all were present they could take part in the closing portion of the work and thus contribute to the sentiment and feeling of the body, and be instrumental in arriving at a greater unanimity of sentiment.

During this, as well as other similar investigations before committees, we thought we could see chances for some improvements in the manner of presenting cases. It would greatly facilitate the work of committees if the plaintiffs would carefully write all the charges in a very brief and pointed manner some days before the council. These charges should then be read before the meeting, in the presence of the committee and handed to them; and at the proper time, the party handing in the charges could be called upon to prove them. This would save the committee much writing and enable them to do their business in about half the time. It is generally the case that committees require that the plaintiffs give in all their charges, without being molested by the other party. While doing so, the clerk writes down all the charges presented. Then the defendants present their defense and charges, if they have any, which are also written down by the clerk. After this, the plaintiffs are called upon to prove all their charges, one at a time, if they can, the clerk keeping a record of the evidences presented. In this way they go through with what has been presented by both parties. In connection with this last part is the cross-questioning, which it is necessary to conduct with great care. This done, the committee retires, takes into consideration all that has been proven, and makes their decision accordingly. We have mentioned the above for the benefit of other congregations where committees may chance to be called.

Our associations with the members at Rock Creek were pleasant, affording us an excellent opportunity of becoming acquainted with them, and learning much of their history and ways. We must confess that we formed a good opinion of them, as well as a close attachment. There are many warm-hearted members in this congregation, who love the cause and will sacrifice much for the Master's kingdom. We had great reasons to sympathize with them in their long-standing afflictions. Being lovers of peace and harmony in the church they felt the dart keenly.

Congregations, like the physical body, may, at times, be sorely afflicted with disease, from which every member of the body must suffer more or less, yet this is no evidence that the body is dead. Some of the healthiest men in the country have passed through severe stages of sickness, which, when over, seemed for their good. Just so it may be with churches, the body of Christ; all things, if properly applied, may work together for good. Brother Edmund Farney takes charge of the church for the present. The meeting was not only a good one, but evidently a profitable one, from which the church will doubtless derive great benefit if she puts to practice the advice given her, and strictly lives up to the laws of spiritual health.

J. H. M.

A WOMAN cannot afford to give herself away to a man to reform him, for as a general thing, if he does not reform before marriage there is but little hope for him afterwards. A good woman's life is of too much value to be wasted by a man; she should never marry till she is sure of getting some one, who has manhood enough about him to know how to treat a woman.

DECOY-SHEEP.

ABOUT the latest thing out is the decoy-sheep. It is difficult to drive a flock of sheep through the crowded and noisy streets of cities; the vehicles will cause them to scatter in all directions. To overcome this, the butcher procures a sheep and trains it to follow him wherever he goes, through the streets or any place else. Before starting through the noisy streets with a flock, he turns his decoy-sheep in with them a short time, to become acquainted. When he starts off, his decoy-sheep will follow, and of course, according to sheep nature, the flock will stick to the decoy-sheep, and are in this way enticed into the slaughter pens. Thus one decoy-sheep may be made instrumental in leading thousands to the slaughter.

We are led to wonder if the devil hasn't a few well-trained decoy-sheep? They are turned into the church just long enough to become acquainted, and then start off to the slaughter pen with the flock following them. Whenever I see a meek and apparently quiet man come into the church, and in a few years wants to lead the flock off into sin and destruction, it does not take long for me to conclude that he must be one of the devil's decoy-sheep. Such people need to be watched. There are thousands who will not follow the devil through the public streets of this world, but they will follow some man who is walking in the very footsteps of the devil.

Do not conclude that all the devil's decoy-sheep are persons of great influence. He knows the nature of Christians and hence works accordingly. Let each of us be certain of two things: 1st, That we are not a decoy-sheep, and 2nd, That we are not following a decoy-sheep. The Good Shepherd says, "Follow me;" "I am the way, the truth and life, and no man cometh unto the Father but by me." J. H. M.

BROTHER Brinkworth arrived in Lanark, Sunday morning, direct from England. He preached here Sunday evening and will remain with us a few days.

A YOUNG sister writes the following: "Find enclosed one dollar for which please send me BROTHERS AT WORK. I have been reading borrowed papers, but think it the best policy to send for one for myself. Think others should go and do likewise."

THE yellow fever scourge continues in the South and seems to be spreading. At Grenada, Miss., the mortality is terrible. At Vicksburg, New Orleans, and Memphis there is no abatement in the plague. Thousands of people are leaving the cities and have gone into camps on high ground, hoping to escape sickness.

BROTHER Bashon commenced a series of meetings in Marshall Co., Iowa, the 24th inst., and will continue one week. He expects to reach Lanark by September 7th. His correspondents will please note this. Glad to hear that brother B. is able to take the field again, and hope his labors may be crowned with success.

FOR the want of space, considerable interesting Correspondence and Gleanings go over to next issue. We feel thankful to our readers for the good supply, and hope they will continue to furnish us with news concerning the church's progress and development of divine character. "Rejoice with those that rejoice," is a divine injunction; and to rejoice, the saints must have the knowledge.

THE troubles on the Eastern Continent do not seem to be over. Bosnia and Herzegovina are contesting Austria's occupation of their country, and the people of Batoam declare that Russia shall not govern them. In the meanwhile the Porte is so very slow in submitting to the work of the Berlin Congress, that the powers are uneasy. All this shows that the governments of earth are still in human hands.

WE usually conclude it a great task to stand before men and confess our faults; yet we seem to be willing to stand before God and confess to Him, and this, too, when we know He is greater than man. Why is it? Do we so because we think it not against the flesh to humble ourselves before a greater, but dishonorable to yield before an equal? If so, it is not the mind of Christ, who thought it not disgraceful to humble Himself before His Father, with whom He is equal. A little more humbling will forward the spirit considerably, and keep down the flesh not a little.

OUR LORD'S DAY.

How We Spent It.—Internal Work.—Hearing, Coming and Doing.—Exact Theory and Precise Doing.—The Church's Perpetuity.—Cannot Persuade the Gospel to Change.—Afternoon Work.—The Lord's Prayer.—What It Teaches.—Evening Exercises.

THANK God, if we are able to say our "Lord's day." That our includes all who have been washed—all who have been made white in the "precious blood." The meeting in Lanark was opened by brother Paterbaugh presenting the 78th hymn, which the congregation sang with becoming order and vigor. After prayer the twelfth of Romans was read, when brother Moore commenced by urging all to read the Bible—to read it carefully, and not lean on man. Showed that there is a possibility of relying wholly upon the external work, and neglecting the internal part. Those who are internally right, cannot be otherwise than externally right. If the heart be right, the tongue will be right—will be bridled. If the heart be right, our love will be right—will be without dissimulation. If the heart be right, our dealings will be right—will provide things honest in the sight of all men.

There are three things that man must do: 1. Hear Christ. 2. Come to Him. 3. Obey Him. Suppose we hear, and do not, will it amount to anything? It is hearing Him, coming to Him, and obeying Him that makes us acceptable to Him. "Whosoever knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Refusing to do, becomes sin to him who refuses. The only true foundation is Christ. 1. It is sure. 2. Sure, because laid by the Lord. 3. Being sure, there is no terror to those who build upon it. There is too much dependence upon some great man—some reformer, as he is called. If the "reformer" is not strictly correct in his theory and practice, his followers will not be. Just as he practices, they will practice. If he leaves a little of the sayings of Christ undone, they will leave them undone. Such are not safe leaders. But we have One who is safe. He practiced all He wants us to practice. He is the Light. You must let this light shine on and in you.

A certain woman could always tell how Elder so and so preached, where he preached, and what he said, but never could tell what Christ and the Apostles said and did. It will not do to follow men—they are not safe. Point to Christ as a Pattern; follow Him and you are safe. Go to the Fountain for pure drink. Sometimes we think that when we are gone, the church will be gone. Not so at all! God is able to make it stand. The gates of hell shall not prevail against it. It has stood amidst the trials and storms of the dark age, and will continue when you and I have gone to mother dust. Alexander Mack and those old veterans who traveled hundreds and thousands of miles, declaring the riches of God's grace, never said, that when they would go to their graves, the church of the living God would be no more. No, never, for they knew that they were only pilgrims and strangers, and when they were gone, others would step into the ranks and go valiantly forward in defense of primitive Christianity. The church of the living God is the ground and pillar of the truth, and not a few here and there.

Sometimes we get a little careless, and allow pride and fashion to creep into the church, and then instead of getting it out according to the law of the Lord, we look to each other. You may persuade men to allow you to wear gold, but you cannot persuade the Gospel to do so. You may persuade men to allow you to go to theatres, but God's Law will not permit you. Study the Word of God and obey it.

At 3 P. M. we attended Sunday-school. The lesson was the Lord's Prayer. Matt. 6: 7-13. From it we learn in what manner to pray. We learn to avoid (1.) Hypocrisy. (2.) Use no vain repetitions, nor to speak much. We learn from "Our Father which art in heaven," that He is omnipresent; that He has dominion over all His creatures; that He is full of power and might; that His eyes behold all things—He "looketh down from heaven;" that He is pure and holy. And we learn to hallow—to exalt His name; first, In all our thoughts; second, By our lips; third, By our lives; fourth, In our families, by the training we give our children; and fifth, In our calling or business. "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," declares our desire for God's will to reign over our wills. Angels do the Father's will with zeal, delight, perseverance. And "Forgive us our debts," shows that we have naught to pay God with. God forgives; He asks no pay from us. We owe Him love and obedience, and ought always give that which belongs to the Lord. He transfers the credit from justice to mercy, and as we are not free from sin which reigns in our mortal bodies, the debt on our part goes on increasing, which makes us continually dependent upon God's mercy. This to the carnal mind is a strange economy, but it is God's method of bringing us into eternal felicity. Present, five officers, thirteen teachers, and one hundred and ten scholars.

In the evening were entertained from Daniel 2: 31-45, and were given a vivid description of the city of Babylon, and the kingdoms mentioned by the prophet. Thus ended our Lord's day with the brethren and sisters of the Lanark church, and we hope all were edified and made better for life's tempestuous voyage.

CHURCH ORGANIZED.

ON the 19th inst., at 8 A. M., the members in and around Lanark met for the purpose of organizing a church—a council at Cherry Grove on the 13th having granted this permission. There was a good attendance, and elders Martin Meyer and John J. Emmert were present to assist in the work. Brother Meyer, in a Christian way, presented the duties of the laity and officials, and exhorted all to faithfulness and steadfastness in the doctrine of Christ.

The church then proceeded to ballot for Clerk and Treasurer, which resulted in the selection of John H. Peck for Clerk, and Isaac Rowland for Treasurer. The next in order was the election of three Trustees, who, according to the laws of the State of Illinois, are to hold in trust all property belonging to the church. The members proceeded to ballot, and in due course of time the elders reported, that one brother had received a majority, and three others had each received an equal number of votes. Now as there were only three wanted, the question arose how to dispose of the fourth one, and, after a fair and free discussion, it was agreed that the three should cast lots. This was done, and the one receiving the blank was counted out. D. B. Ely, Isaac Rowland, and Jacob Arnold are therefore Trustees of the church at Lanark.

Brother J. B. Moore was unanimously chosen as overseer of the church, and he has, for an assistant in the ministry, brother Samuel J. Peck. To aid them in the proper way, at proper times, there are three deacons. There are one hundred and thirteen members in the Lanark church, and by their judicious labor, holy lives and zealous hearts may soon make for themselves a good and glorious record in the book above. Peace and good-will are noble characteristics, and if becomes this band of believers to do all in its power to give evidence of "being born of God"—born of the spirit of brotherly affection. A collection for missing work was taken up, resulting in upwards of thirty dollars. At 12 M. the congregation was dismissed, all apparently having enjoyed the meeting and its work.

It may be proper to state here, that about one hundred and twenty members remain in the Cherry Grove church, under the care of elders Michael Bolinger and Henry Martin, assisted by brother David Paterbaugh and three deacons. Within the past five years this church has witnessed some important work. In the Fall of 1875 the Danish Mission was here inaugurated, brother Hope being chosen to the ministry and sent to his present field of labor. During the same time upwards of fifty precious souls were added to the church, the pentecostal flame reaching nearly every family in the congregation. Methinks when all the toils of life are over, and we all stand before the judgment seat of God, the books being opened, we will have no regrets for the work of Cherry Grove church during the Fall of 1875. About all who then came forward and gave their hearts to Christ are faithful and devoted members. They came to Christ speedily—twenty being immersed in one day—and neither they nor us have lost by their rapid flight from sin. Ah! we never wish to forget that glorious time when every house seemed to be burning with holy zeal and earnest longings for the love of God. May peace and good works always characterize the church at Cherry Grove, and when their toils, their trials and ours, are all over, may we, with calmness, go to rest, to arise in the first, grand resurrection to meet Jesus in all His glory and splendor.

We can furnish "Reason and Revelation," a work of 564 neatly printed pages, for $2.50 per copy. Bible students and ministers will find this a valuable aid in the study of the Word.

A MAN recently crossed the Atlantic in a boat not much larger than a canoe. He was fifty-six days in crossing, including a stop of several days on the English coast on account of stormy weather. The boat was taken to the Paris Exposition to be admired by those who attend the great show.

The sixth annual meeting of the Indiana State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will be held at Spiceland, Henry Co., Ind., Oct. 9, 10 and 11. The sentiment against secret orders, in many localities, is growing rapidly, and bids fair, if properly applied, to become a power for good.

SAMARIA was the capital of the kingdom of Israel, or the ten tribes. Omri, king of Israel, built it about 900 years before Christ. It was located on a beautiful spot in Palestine, and the subsequent kings omitted nothing to make it strong and beautiful. It was almost reduced to ruins by the Assyrians. Herod rebuilt it, and called it Sebaste, (Latin, Augusta). Philip preached here, and was the means of turning many to Christ.

We had calls the past week from brother J. R. Gish and wife, brother Enoch Ely, and sister Sperow, who has, for the past year, been spending her time with friends in Iowa and Nebraska. Brother Sharp also returned to give us a friendly greeting before his final leave. From here he goes to Rock Creek church, thence to Ashland, O., and persons wishing to correspond with him will address him there.

On the 18th inst., a number of members from the Shannon church came over to within a half mile of Lanark and witnessed the baptism of two precious souls from their congregation. Owing to a misunderstanding as to the time, the members here did not attend. We are always glad to see repentant souls come home to God. The field is large, the number of persons to be saved are numerous, hence not a single minister can afford to be slothful in his calling. "Cry aloud," that many may awake, should be the minister's motto.

We have received a copy of the Greek and English Concordance, prepared by Charles F. Hudson, and published by H. L. Hastings, Boston. It connects the Greek Text of the New Testament with the Common English Version in such a way as to enable the student to find the meaning of any Greek word in the New Testament, and where used. A man need not know a word of Greek in order to make use of the book, yet it is so arranged, that one can soon, by a little study, become familiar with the Greek also. Price, cloth, $2.50; leather, $3.00. Address the publishers.

The occasion, this week, rather demands from us an article setting forth some of our views regarding an improved plan of holding our Annual Meeting, but for the want of room on the editorial pages, must defer it till next week. Suffice it to say, that the BRETHREN AT WORK is opposed to any plan favoring the "delegated power." It is not only unscriptural, in our judgment, but may be the prolific source of schisms and general discord. The history of the past has left a sad record of delegated ecclesiastical power. The church—the body of Christ, the pillar and ground of the truth should ever keep the power in its own hands.

In number 31 a call was made for a number of workers to help better the condition of poor and unfortunate children, by placing the Children at Work in their hands. We are happy to state that willing hands and hearts are responding, feel rejoiced to be able to labor for the neglected and uncared-for children. What a noble field to labor in! There is many a pearl hidden beneath the sunburnt face and tattered garments, and from a divine standpoint, as good a place to seek the imperishable gold as could be desired. We do not mean to stop with the placing of the Children at Work in the hands of the poor and neglected: we mean that it shall be a simple means of doing them good in other ways than by the mind. As already stated, the field is large, and is awaiting some one—some thousands to go in and occupy. This we mean to do, by the grace of our Father; but we need your help, your prayers, your heartfelt sympathies. God bless the kind hearts that are awakened and that are to be awakened upon this subject.

ELDER Jas. R. Gish, of Woodford Co., Ill., who was with us last week, and preached for the Brethren here on Friday evening, is extensively known as a traveling missionary, and for years has spent the greater part of his time in the field preaching, especially among small congregations and isolated members. Wherever he goes he endeavors to introduce the BRETHREN AT WORK, saying, that if he can get isolated members to take the paper he is sure of their interest and zeal for the cause being kept alive. This is something that ought to be carefully attended to by our traveling ministers—they should make great efforts to get the paper into every family of members and thereby be instrumental in keeping up their zeal for the cause.

In the second editorial column, No. 32, was published a short item referring to brother J. S. Mohler's article on Matt. 9: 15, 17. By some it is thought that our remarks reflected somewhat against brother Mohler. This was not the case with us. We had not the least idea of criticising what was written in brother Mohler's article. The fact of the matter is, there were certain things that we have been wanting to say for some time, and thought that would be just the right time to say it. The last thirteen lines of the item referred to, were not intended to be applied, in any way, shape or form, to what brother M. had done. He did just right, and any other member has the same privilege. We explain the Word the best we can, and if some one has anything better, we want it, but it must be free of all controversy.

Methodism is not agreed. The front ranks are more or less disturbed, controversy is in the field, and some are for Paul, some for Cephas, some for Apollis. The whole body seems to be somewhat agitated over the rights of officials and laity, one desiring greater power, the other reaching for more privilege. The close observer for the past few years can readily see that there is a conflict going on between spiritual and temporal—a question whether there shall be a continuation of prelatical rule, or a change to democracy. Christ places the government of His people in the body, for the body, and no portion of that body can assume that government for the body. The probationary system is waning, and if it could be set adrift altogether, with infant sprinkling, and there would be a grand general move all along the line, to practice John 13: 1-17; Rom. 16: 16, and a number of other divine institutions, there would be considerable "glory to God," and much "good will" in many hearts.

NO DEBATE IN VA.

Dear Brethren:—

OUR Baptist friends after having challenged me in different forms, as I understand it, first to meet one of them in public debate, and then to meet them single handed in their ministers and deacons' meeting, against the whole Baptist clergy and others combined, to debate true immersion, now write to me, proposing a number of propositions shaped to suit themselves, and then declaring emphatically that they will not debate with us, (I having named our representative), unless we would come up squarely and make a challenge. This I decline, and so far as I am concerned, the matter ends. I, however, have forwarded their communications to Bro. Stein, for him to do as he may think best. B. F. MOORMAW.

We want the name and address of every brother and sister who contemplates doing any traveling this Fall. Send in your name and address immediately.

WON'T YOU GO?

BY J. W. SOUTHWOOD.

There is a bright and happy land,
For all that dwell below,
Who love the Savior as they should;
Oh father, won't you go?

CHORUS.

Won't you go? Won't you go?
To that bright and happy land?
Won't you go? Won't you go?
And among the angels stand?

That land is ever bright and fair,
And always free from woe;
There cares and troubles ne'er can come;
Oh mother, won't you go?

That land is where the Savior dwells,
Who loves His children so,
He gave His life that we might live;
Oh brother, won't you go?

That land is bright with glory-light,
For all that Christ shall know;
It is an endless home on high,
Oh sister, won't you go?

(Any one desiring the music to the above hymn can obtain it by addressing the author as below.)

SELECTED GEMS.

Crossing the river, one by one,
Over the silver tide;
Away from the shadows of time,
Our loved ones glide.

—Remorse is the echo of a lost virtue.

—No man's religion ever survives his morals.

—To think kindly of each other is good, but to act kindly toward one another is best of all.

—Repose and cheerfulness are the badge of the gentleman—repose in energy.

—A promise is a just debt, which you must take care to pay, for honor and honesty are the security.

—He who murmurs at his lot, is like one barring his feet to tread upon thorns.

—When the sun of virtue is set, the blush of shame is the twilight. When that dies, all is darkness.

—Dr. Franklin says: "The eyes of other people are the eyes that ruin us. If all but myself were blind, I should not want a fine house nor fine furniture."

—Many talk familiarly of sanctification in the lump, who know but little of it in the piece. The readiest way to know whether you are in Christ, is to know whether Christ be in you.

—In most quarrels, there is a fault on both sides. Both flint and steel are necessary to the production of a spark; either of them may hammer on wood forever, and no fire will follow.

—To make anything very terrible, obscurity seems in general to be necessary. When we know the full extent of any danger, when we can accustom our eye to it, a great deal of apprehension vanishes.

—The greatest loss of time is delay and expectation, which depends upon the future. We let go the present, which we have in our power, and look forward to that which depends upon chance—and so relinquish a certainty for an uncertainty.

—The service of God should be heart service; that of the lips is only abomination. We are to "call upon our souls"—to rouse the whole nature in praising and glorifying our Creator and Savior. He whose heart is full of thanksgiving is living near heaven.

—To do good to men is the great work of life; to make them true Christians is the greatest good we can do them. If we could make each man love his neighbor we should make a happy world. The true method is to begin with ourselves, and so extend the circle around us.

—More heresy is lived, than is written or believed. Although less talked of and condemned, the heresy of life is more culpable and disastrous than that of opinion. The Gospel has suffered more from the under-estimate of the one than from the overrated influence of the other.

—What shall I give? To the hungry, give food; to the naked, clothes; to the sick, some comfort; to the sad, a word of consolation; to all you meet, a smile and a cheery greeting. Give forgiveness to your enemies; give patience to the fretful; give love to your households; and, above all, give your hearts to God.

—Horace Mann, in a speech on one occasion, speaking of the importance of correct early training, said: "No unskillful hand should play on a harp where the tones forever remain in the string." If impressions on the mind are as lasting as the child itself, how important they be in strict accord with the Word of God!

TEACHERS.

BY MARY C. MILLER.

IN a piece published in the Chicago Journal, taken from a N. Y. paper, teachers are spoken of as filling a very important position in the city. It spoke of the rising generation, that out of it would come their worst as well as their best citizens, and how important that they be well taught, that evil be kept out of their minds. While reading it, I thought of the relation of teachers to the church. Do we, brethren and sisters, fully realize and rightly estimate the necessity of good teachers and good teaching? We want teachers whose lives speak the words of revealed truth. They must be pure and self-denying followers of that once despised, but now highly exalted Jesus,—He who was laughed to scorn by an ignorant people.

We want such teachers to convert the world, to make it better, and especially do we want such to guide the children, those dear, little, confiding ones,—they who will believe what they are told, and are quick to discern what they are taught. They remember their training from an early period of their lives. I once read of a Catholic priest, saying, that could he have the control of the children from the ages of four until seven, he would convert the world to the Catholic faith quicker than by any other means. This is the idea, though not the exact words. We cannot lightly pass over this assertion, for it cannot be denied that they are very thorough teachers and he knew what he was saying. Please observe how careful they are with their little ones in their early childhood, and with what results. Should we then, as a church, select those to teach in the church who have not yet learned to obey? Do we want the children taught the goodness and love of God? Get those to teach who will teach from actual experience.

Then we want teachers full of the Holy Ghost, those whose lives belong to their Creator. Children are close observers, as well as grown people, and the character of the teacher is more or less stamped upon the mind of the pupil. If we have Bible teachers or spiritual teachers for our children, should we not have those who are living true and holy lives, obeying God in all things? for would it be good teaching for them to tell the little scholars to obey their parents while they were living in open rebellion against their heavenly Father? Should the children take them for examples, which they will surely do to a greater or less degree? Would it not be better for the church and the cause of Christ not to tolerate such teachers?

THE FEAST OF HARVEST.

BY S. S. W. HAMMER.

ALL things are lovely and interesting in their seasons. All must have felt the power of the sacred proverb. A word spoken in season how good it is. The Savior always seemed to adapt His discourses to the seasons and the audiences He addressed. Men's minds are more deeply impressed at one time than another. In sickness he feels his mutability, near the grave, his mortality.

Seasons and feelings should be appropriate with each other, hence we are enjoined in the day of prosperity to rejoice, while in the day of adversity we are to consider. In ancient times God was pleased to appoint services and festivals for the commemoration and improvement of seasons and events. There were in particular, three general feasts: First, that of the Passover; second, the feast of weeks or Pentecost, seven weeks after the Passover, when the first-fruits were presented to God; then the feast of harvest, through which the people celebrated the goodness of God in the abundance of His bounty.

We are glad to say, that the church at March Creek, as well as churches at other places, held what they termed, a harvest meeting, and celebrated the goodness of God for His beautiful harvest granted, and which is stored away safely, and all trusted to His providential care—His care for the human family. And His mercies which He holds over us certainly demand our grateful services and worthy of the sunner's notice as well as the God-fearing. Yes, we may say, worthy of all, the infidel, atheist, and all description of people the broad land over.

The instructions we derive from a contemplation of the harvest exhibit the wonderful power of God. Our minds should be sufficiently impressed with this. We stand astonished at the power of the storm and tempest, yet are liable to pass over the silent, yet not less energetic influence of Jehovah's power. Christ's miracle on the Sea of Galilee did not exhibit His power more than when He silently multiplied the loaves and fishes, and led thousands in the desert. How astonishing the energy by which a few grains produced an increase of thirty, sixty and a hundred fold. In these things we have an establishment of the faithfulness of God.

Wherefore does Jehovah meet all the wants of His creatures? It is because the Lord is good and His tender mercies are over all His works. See the beautiful description, Psalm 9: 5, 9-13. It displays the mercy and forbearance of God. For whom does He send the profusion of His bounty? For the holy, upright, and obedient? No; but for a world in arms against Him; for rebels against His authority; for, as we have stated, atheists, infidels, sensualists, worldlings, blasphemers. He sends His rain upon the evil as well as the good. This shows us the way or connection between the means and the end.

All our blessings are from God; there is nothing more evident than this. This applies to any thing in nature, providence and grace; yet exertion is ours; we must plow our fields and sow the same, then trust to God and we will be sure to reap the same. So in the requisition of knowledge, or in the attainment of salvation; we can only reap everlasting life by sowing to the Spirit. Now let us consider in reference to the harvest. What feeling it should produce; it should produce feelings of deep humiliation. God's goodness should humble us; our consciousness of being utterly unworthy, should prostrate us in the dust. Abraham repented himself in dust and ashes. The prodigal said, "I am not worthy." We are not worthy of the least of heart-felt gratitude.

Bless the Lord, oh our souls. We ought to rejoice in His loving kindness, hence the propriety of recognizing at every meal, the Deity of all our mercies. We should feel our constant dependence upon Him, in all our ways acknowledge Him. We should see His hand in everything, and endeavor to glorify Him in all we see. In sowing our fields, plowing and reaping the same, we should feel a constant desire to bless Him. The inquiry should be, what shall I render to the Lord? What does God demand from us, our hearts, and lives and all?

But the final harvest. The field is the world. Harvest is near, full of wheat and tares. Angels are the reapers. Speedily command will be given, "Thrust in the sickle." Eternity is suspended upon it. Wheat will be gathered into the garner, and the tares burnt. How do we stand? We all should act in reference to the final harvest.

THE POPULAR HOBBY.

BY C. F. DETWEILER.

"The veil is upon their heart."—1 Cor. 3: 15.
OPEN Communion, and that which men call non-sectarianism, have, in most of the popular denominations, become the staple. Some of those whose office it is to "give them meat in due season," deal in these like our old ancestors of colonial days dealt in mush and milk. It is said, they had mush and milk for supper one evening, and milk and mush the next, and so on alternately. Well, brotherly love, and true charity are certainly worthy of a place in every discourse the year round.

That charity is an essential principle of Christianity, is admitted by all, but in regard to how it is manifested there exists a wide difference of views. The saddest fact connected with the open Communion theory is, that most of its advocates are in principle, men of war, and in their sermons we often hear them relate incidents of military life. If we were wrong in declining to fellowship those whose principles have before now set Christians in battle array against each other, which has been the case in almost every war that cursed Christendom; brother against brother, each impelled by his own views of right, how these ambassadors of open Communion should lift up their voices as ambassadors of peace! Add to this the horrors of war; bodies mangled, cities burned with fire, the pangs of bereavement with widows and orphans all over the land, and sinners by the thousands doomed to death and hell. Hard as it is, less than this in no description at all. It, under such circumstances, the affairs of the world were the affairs of those who have come out from the world, how the advocates of open Communion should labor to bring about such a unity in the church as would turn its influences against such occurrences; how the ambassadors of the Prince of Peace should labor to bring the church of Christ into a solid phalanx in defense of international arbitration. But so far as my observations go, this is not the case. If any of the bold advocates of open Communion who preached in these parts, have ever lifted up their voice in the pulpit against the cruel monster, war, or in favor of international or national arbitration, it has never, to the best of my recollection, been my joy to hear the first sentence of it.

If national politics are a part of Christianity, where must our patriarchs and Statesmen be reared up? Surely they maintain, that they are to be reared up in the Sunday-school and in the church. But in the Sunday-school we are taught that it is honorable to fight for our country, and members of the church send their sons to the military schools. Peace societies are organized outside the church, and thither the professed disciple of Christ goes to advocate the first principles of Christianity!

Surely "the veil is upon their heart."

WHY IS IT?

S. BRUMDAUGH.

WHY is it that there are so many sinners in the world? After God has shown His great love and mercy in preparing a beautiful home for those who love and obey Him,—a place where there is nothing but happiness—where death, pain, sorrow, and affliction never come—a place so lovely. After doing all this, why so few followers? Why are we not more concerned about heaven, knowing that missing heaven, lands us in hell? Friends, why are you living so careless? Why is it? Why is it that so many of the Brethren have not their children in the fold? Brethren are you concerned about your children as you should be, or why is it that they are still out in the cold?

Why is it that there are so many ways marked out for heaven? Do we not all know there is but one way? Can we not all find that way? Have we not all the same geography? Does it not describe and point out the way to us alike? Why is it that we cannot believe alike? Why can we not have the same faith, speak the same thing? Why is it that some teachers tell us we need not obey all the commandments to gain heaven? Where do they find it? Why is it that some of us do not follow the order of the Brethren? Why is it we do not wear the uniform of the Brethren while it is an established order by the church? Why try to have another order? Why is it?

Why not have more praying? Why do not parents get their children around the family altar in worship, more than is done? Why is it that there is not more unanimity in sentiment in the church? Why must we have so many questions at Annual Meetings that it takes three or four days every year to settle all? Why so much difference of opinion when less would do? Why is it?

FAMILY WORSHIP.

BY JACOB KELLER.

EVERY Christian's house should be a house of prayer. Will any one try to serve God without prayer? To maintain family worship, is the duty of every Christian. It is too much neglected. Prayer should never be overlooked. A sense of unworthiness should not prevent us approaching a throne of grace. How beautiful to behold the father and mother who are bringing up children, gathering the loved ones around the family altar, and engage in singing songs of praise to the heavenly Father! Hear them raise their voices, "beseeching forgiveness and asking for a continuation of His love and mercy during days to come." The less we engage in our spiritual duties, the colder and more distant we become. Then let us awake to this work—be diligent in this duty and holy privilege. O, what a good example we may be to others by attending to family prayer! There is power in such work, and who would do without godly power?

LIFE.

THE mere lapse of years is not life. To eat and drink and sleep; to be exposed to darkness and the light, to peer around the mill of habit and turn the wheel of wealth; to make reason our book-keeper, and turn thought into an implement of trade—this is not life. In all this, but a poor fraction of the consciousness of humanity is awakened, and the sanctities still slumber which make it most worth while to be. Knowledge, truth, love, beauty, goodness, faith, alone give vitality to the mechanism of existence. The laugh of mirth which vibrates through the heart; the tears which freshen the dry wastes within; the music which hurls childhood back; the prayer that calls the future near; the doubt which makes us meditate; the death which startles us with its mystery; the hardships that force us to struggle, the anxiety that embosoms in trust—these are nourishments of our natural being.

The gems of liberty and poetry brought into action the brightest powers of the human mind.

Shall Christians Dance?

[Non-Profit Society.]

WHY not Christians, if anybody? We would not advise a sinner to dance. A sinner is an enemy to God; and shall he dance? A sinner must repent or perish; and shall he dance? A sinner is on the way to hell, and may be there in an hour; shall he dance? There is something supremely shocking in the idea of a dancing sinner. What fearful declarations are those of Job! "They send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance. They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave." (Job 21: 11, 13).

But a Christian is a redeemed sinner. "He is bought with a price." "He is washed, he is sanctified, he is justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God."—"He is a new creature; old things have passed away; behold, all things are become new." The Christian is the image of Christ, and is to show to the world that he has been with Jesus, and has learned of him. The Christian is "crucified to the world," and is in a little while to be in heaven beholding and enjoying, and forever to enjoy the glory of God. Let him sing for joy, and dance too before the Lord, as David did, if such an exercise be suited to his present condition, and adapted to promote the glory of God and the salvation of men. For this is the apostolic exhortation: "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

Shall Christians dance? Then they must have a time to dance. At what point of time shall it be? Just before, or after they sit down at the table of the Lord? Is it the kind of preparation which fits them for that scene which Calvary beheld? Will the dance help them to "examine themselves?" Will it enable them to deny themselves as they should, after they have been new to see Christ crucified? Can they, at the dance, think intensely upon the scenes in the garden; in the palace of the high priest; in the hall of Pilate; on the way to Calvary; at the nailing of the victim; and at the innocent sufferer's cry of agony, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" This cry, under almighty wrath crushing him to death for our sins, makes the ears of Christians tingle. How can they forget it, so as to find a time to dance?

Shall Christians dance? Then they must have leisure to dance. "Whist ye not said Jesus, that I must be about my Father's business?" He began early, and continued to the end to be about his Father's business, so that in the end he could say to his Father, "I have glorified thee upon earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." Then He was ready to depart, and with his last breath cried, "It is finished." Duty and suffering were completed. Are Christians the followers of such a Saviour, at leisure so that their work is done long before the sun is set? Do they understand God's work so well that they need study it no more? Are all their duties to God, in the closet, in the family, and in his house, diligently and faithfully performed? Do they perform all that is needful for the young, for the aged, for the church, for the world, and then find leisure to unite with gay companions in moving to the sound of the viol, and the mazes of pleasurable dissipation? Is the soul duly cared for? And from the dance can they return home to commune with God; to pray for parents and the ministers of Christ, with all prayer and without ceasing? Can they visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep themselves unspotted from the world?

Shall Christians dance? Then they must have money to maintain the dance. They are God's stewards, and he claims all they have, as well as they are. The gold—"it is mine."—The silver—"it is mine." Does he require Christians, as his stewards, to take his silver and his gold, and use them to decorate their persons; to furnish room and equipage and music and refreshments for the dance? His poor must have food and raiment and shelter out of his silver and gold. The institutions of religion must be sustained; the word of God must be put into every family of man; the ministry must be furnished for every creature; and all this must come out of his treasures. And when millions are needed more than are obtained—when the cry is wafted to Christian ears on every breeze, "Come over and help us"—where is the money to be found to maintain the dance?

Shall Christians dance? Then they must be imitated by others. Allowing that Christians have time, leisure, and money for the dance, and that it may be proper for them to dance, still a question remains. Is it expedient? If it be lawful in the sight of God, does it tend to edification? Is it attended with no danger to others? Will the gay and the thoughtless be likely to derive benefit from such examples of Christians? Did not the apostle Paul say, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth; lest I make my brother to offend?" Should not we all look to the welfare of others? If it be not perilous to ourselves, yet if it be not to others, charity requires us to abstain. If we would not advise sinners to dance, we certainly should not set the example. If but one member of a church be found in a ball room, who will know it? Will not every eye be fixed on that individual? Will not some be ready to say in heart, Did not I see thee at the Lord's table? Will it not be reported the next day? And will not the echo fly among the circles of the lovers of pleasure? Will not the thoughtless urge this example, as a plea for the indulgence which conscience forbids? And will not many be emboldened, not only near by, but far off, to do what no sinner should venture to do, as it must be at the peril of his soul? And I will not those gay companions of yours despise you for your vain indulgence?

The New Departure.

THE alarming and rapidly increasing spread of materialism in our land, the address with which its advocates maintain and challenge discussion, is a subject demanding the thoughtful consideration of every candid Christian mind. A little reading only is sufficient to show that there has been a decided change in the tactics of these would-be-destroyers of the Christian's hope. The "contrary to human experience" argument of Hume and others—has been surrendered as untenable, as we are now presented with the scientific theory. Hume declared that a miracle was in opposition to human reason and experience—Christianity therefore was a falsehood. Tyndall, Huxley and Darwin announce Creation as the result of force and not the act of a being,—per consequence, the Mosaic account is false and fabulous history! These men rank among the ablest scholars of the day and have their followers in every class and circle, from the erudite philosopher down to the conceited ignoramus, who perhaps never read a page of his country's history.

That a higher grade of education, coupled and connected with true Christianity is necessary to successfully refute the argument of these false teachers, few will controvert. The signs of the times betoken the approaching conflict, not of carnal warfare—but of a conflict with more potent weapons,—brighter than the burnished steel—the demonstration of the truth that science does not conflict with Religion, and that where it does, science is at fault, system after system of theoretical speculation has fallen before the argument of methodic knowledge, and "as" says Dr. Campbell, "science is of little value which does not serve as a foundation to some beneficial art," so is it also true that false indeed must be that knowledge, (if such a term be not a misnomer,) that teaches the overthrow of a faith that acknowledge an obligation to God. The recognition of this doctrine not only crushes out the inherent love of man everywhere to Deity—but denies the truth of the principle taught ages before the advent of our Saviour.

The step in recent years taken by my friends—the Brethren many of whom have not been favorably impressed with the necessity of a more than ordinary English course of study, fill with confidence the hearts of the lovers of truth everywhere. I refer to the several schools of learning, that are now soliciting and receiving the encouragement of the Brethren. Your church with it is said, a strength of from 75,000 to 100,000 representing a youth of perhaps—150,000 growing up under the influence to a greater or a less degree of the doctrines, publicly proclaimed by Ingersoll, whose finished rhetoric and finely polished sentences are well calculated to ensnare the undeveloped reason of the young, the wonder is that this step was not taken long ago. Do we not see these thousands—sons and daughters of those, about whose Christian firmness there need be no question, standing between the fires of the approaching hostile lines—uncertain, doubting and hesitating? Scores of them can be counted in every church—and their doubts multiply as their numbers increase.

The observant student cannot fail to notice the progress made by the foes of Christianity during the last half century. There was a time when atheistic views were regarded by the masses as well as the church with abhorrence, now there is an attempt at least to clothe its advocates with the garb of respectability. We return the assertion that the church is to blame in this matter—unconsciously and unintentionally, but to blame nevertheless. The world admires nothing so much as success; even treason ceases to be treason and a crime when its advocates are successful; so that when educated skepticism challenges uneducated Christianity—we who believe—have reason to tremble for those who are standing on the halting!

Let Christians, fathers and mothers testify in other ways beside faith their devotion to the holy cause! "By their works ye shall know them." Stand by and encourage to the full extent of your ability in every way your educational institutions, who through their representatives are appealing to you for help. I join no issue with those who prophesy danger,—who arraign intellectual refinement as the cause of skepticism—who prefer not only the killing of the weed but the destruction of the soil beside—time with these, let us hope, will convince them of their error. Let us rather possess the educated soul of a Galileo than the circumscribed, bigoted faith of an Urban. "The human soul" says Addison, "without education is like the marble in a quarry, which shows none of its inherent beauties—till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colors, makes the surface shine, and discovers every ornamental cloud, spot and vein that runs through the body of it."

May the divine Master crown with a glorious success this noble effort in behalf of Christianity!

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Hausertown, Ind.

AS I am aware, that no correspondence has been had, from this arm of church, I shall therefore endeavor, to write a short communication for publication, if you find a space in your paper. Our arm of church is composed of Owen and Clay counties,—considerably scattered over a large territory—about eighty or ninety members. David Culler is the Elder, R. R. Goshorn and Ananias Hensel, speakers in the second degree, Henry Shuller is speaker in the first degree. Our arm of church has not made any accession for some time, but is in a healthy condition, and we have a good Sabbath-school in our fraternity. I would further add, the news of the death of a brother-in-law of mine, and who has many friends, that are members in our church. The name of the deceased is Jonathan Shultz, who was born in Somerset Co., Pa., July 11th, 1820. Emigrated to the state of Ohio at the age of 22. On the 13th of Sept. 1843, was married to Catharine Row. Had moved to Ind. some years ago. Had born unto them eleven children, six sons and five daughters. The father departed his life, May 22nd 1878, aged 57 years, 10 months and 11 days. Hoping this obituary may reach many of his friends; by reading the paper, that would otherwise not hear of his death for years. May the Lord still be our protector to the end of our earthly journey, and after death save us all, is the prayer of your humble brother.

JOHN LONG.

From Elk Creek, Nebraska.

Dear Brethren:—

I WILL try and give you a few lines concerning this arm of the church. We are isolated some twenty-two or three miles from any other body of the church, and feel lonesome.—We take the BRETHREN AT WORK. I can hardly attend to my household affairs until I have read the paper. Often I am cast down with trouble and sorrow, but when I read those good pieces that are in them, it encourages me again. Now dear brethren and sisters do try and think of us poor sheep when you are ready to go to worship, that we are isolated and can't go to place of worship and we have no shepherd to watch over us. We are three brethren and four sisters and no preacher. Now dear brethren can't you branch out more and send us one, as we are settled here on a farm and can't sell for near what it is worth and it is a nice country, and we would like to stay here if we could have meeting more regularly. Oh how I love to have some brethren and sisters to come and sing and pray with us; it does me so much good. Brother Pulrow, from Pawnee church was here the 27th and 28th of July and preached for us. Our meetings are so far apart that we get dull and careless. Our plainness is a subject of remark by both the popular professor and the worldly person. Our mode of worship, our plain habits, our devotion to Bible principles are talked about in a light manner, and then we are exposed to the jeers and taunts of the world much more than those who almost wholly make up a community. Now I believe if we had a home preacher, we would get members.

BEST assured that Rom. 8: 28 has the seal of divine veracity upon it. God never finches.

To "walk in the light as He is in the light," is to have the head and heart and hand of the omnipotent at our command.

Be wise as a serpent, harmless as a dove.—Let meekness be enthroned in your heart, put the radiance of Heaven in your eye, and the honey of Paradise on your lips. Let your whole power and glory lie in self-crucifixion. Live in the element of James 1: 5; 1 John 4: 16.

I am deeply grieved at your many trials. Do not lose yourself in them, but look through to the high character and glorious reward they are meant to secure. I know by experience that we make too much of affliction as an end, and too little as a means. When we are emptied from vessel to vessel, and our bottles are broken, we are apt to feel as if we were receiving rough treatment; and in one sense we are, but our great future requires it. Jer. 48: 11, 12. The real indwelling of God, and faith in "the glories to be revealed in us," enables us to "take joyfully the spoiling of our goods, KNOWING IN ourselves that we have in Heaven a better and an enduring substance." Rom. 8: 18; Heb. 10: 34. To maintain our integrity through all the flailing and sifting of disciplinary stage, requires a whole-souled commitment to the Cross, and a deeply practical acquaintance with the Crucified. Christianity is not sentimentalism. It means baptism with fire and the Holy Ghost, "piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, of joints and marrow," penetrating and disclosing the secret depths of our being. Heb. 4: 12. It may sweep away everything but faith, hope and love, and leave us as naked and destitute as Job. The church is slow in learning the great lesson of Philip 3: 8. Let us step into the van.

From Cornelia, Missouri.

IN company with A. Hutchison and J. S. Mohler I attended a love-feast with the Brethren of the Murvea Creek church, Morgan Co.,

Missouri, on the 13th. Their meeting passed off pleasantly. The members are watchful to improve their opportunities having had a number of additions from other denominations, who seem to be earnest workers for the truth. Bro. David Bowman, formerly from Virginia, was ordained to the full ministry, having now the care of the congregation in said county, and hope that he may, in connection with his official brethren and the church, do a good work in the large field open to them. He has as assistant in the ministry, Bro. Daniel Cline also from Virginia, who is as yet young in the ministry and needs the sympathy and prayers of the church, which, we hope, he is having.—Our association with the church, of which we are speaking, has continued since the first baptism in Morgan Co., in 1872, which, from two members, grew to the number of forty-five or fifty at this time. Bro. Peter Lehman and wife, members from near Johnstown, Pa., were the first to locate at that place; since which they have seen of their children and others added to them, until they have a fine working body. I may truly say, that my visits to them through a series of years were always attended with pleasure; and in severing my connection with them officially I do so with the firm hope that the truth will continue to flourish among them; as the fruit of their covenant with each other to labor together for the promotion of holiness and for the active development of the principle of plainness of attire, both among the membership, and among the children.

I may state here incidentally, that my observation in visiting many congregations of Brethren has been, that, as a rule, our strongest churches are those, in which plainness of dress is maintained. I call attention to this, in the hope, that this characteristic of our brotherhood may be honored as a means of promoting the good cause. Its influence is recognized by many, who are attracted to the church by it. God blessing it to the saving of many, by causing a closer examination into the doctrine of the word as held by the Brethren. Examples of this fact are numerous among us as a body. While many urge a partial abandonment of this peculiarity of the Brethren's church, in order to an increase of membership, it would benefit all such, no doubt, were they to know the fact, that not our churches which have relaxed discipline in this particular are the strong churches, but to the contrary. True, if salvation was of man, then this man-conceived idea might prove itself correct; but salvation is of God, who says "My ways are not your ways." God blesses the self-denying ones who in gentleness, as nursing-fathers are leading the tender limbs of the fold into the clearer, view of Christian light, and of non-worldliness. God's penetrated ones do not stagger at, but are attracted by the positive principles of His word, and lose its exhibition. May God bless our dear Brethren of Morgan Co., Missouri and everywhere in the maintenance of plain dressing!

As an item of interest I may say that several of our ministers while on a trip lately to Benton Co., this State, holding meetings, had an opportunity to hear Elder Ray of the Baptist Battle Fluy preach a sermon, the burden of which was "Baptist High-churchism," and was especially severe on the Campbellites and paying left-hand compliments to the Brethren, publicly charging Moore's "Trine Immersion traced to the Apostles" with the basest falsehood, professing to show it up, etc. Of course I sweetly remembered "Newtonia" when informed of his trumpet-blowing among the Osage river hills. I imagine, that had I been present on the occasion referred to, I might have helped Mr. Ray to gravitate a little, by simply mentioning, "Stein, Newtonia, and Trine Immersion, martyred million Baptists." Mr. Horne, the Baptist moderator at the Newtonia discussion, has also put his hand into the business, saying publicly, that the Tankers are a people, who believe greatly in penance, using billets of wood for pillows, etc., reiterating Mr. Ray's reading of "Bucks" statement of the Euphrata Dunkards, as descriptive of the Brethren. Yet notwithstanding that Bro. Stein exploded this idea, Mr. Horne being present, he finds food in saying of us, what he knows is false. Neither Mr. Ray nor Mr. Horne have yet recovered from the gauntlet running, that Bro. Stein gave them at Newtonia. The Brethren here can quietly look on at the blustering of these men spending their wrath against the truth,—like the wave dashing against the rock, and disappears. "Him whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad." These men act as if the spell was on them.

It is to be regretted that men—claiming to be ministers of the Gospel, will so degrade their standing, as to deal in untruths and defame others. Mr. Ray in his late trade, asserted, that the "Brethren" preferred to be called "Tankers," which he knows to be untrue; asserting also in his speech, (for sermon it was not,) that Tankerism is Campbellism run to seed. If Mr. Ray fails to distinguish between an impure, malicious heart, and a pure, gentle Christian spirit, others do not; and the comparison is in no sense creditable to him. One of his own Brethren remarked to me, "It is of no use for Mr. Ray to ridicule and defame your people" meaning the Brethren; "for" says his Baptist brother, "I know it is false."

It is no source of pleasure to write this of Mr. Ray, and apart from the duty to make known the man who proposes to champion the claims of his sect, against those who hold to the faithful Word, I would not be induced to say a word in this manner. S. S. MOHLER.

NOTICING the death of Bro. Henry Smith of Bedford Co., Pa., by lightning, reminds me of an incident here, during our late Kansas storms.

A heavy, black storm cloud came over from the North-west, flashing and roaring. My little boy, my brother David and myself, all took refuge in our carpenter shop, up-stairs, in the old cottonwood shanty, which we vacated last Spring. There, with open window, we had a fine view of the storm of wind, rain and hail, that swept over the prairie and hemmed us in with its terrible roar. We had closed the North window and sat down on the work-bench and tool-chest, silently listening to the raging trio outside, when a terrific crash and simultaneous display of fire-works in the North end of the room made us jump from our seats. The sparks seemed to fall like a shower. Never were we so closely environed by so many of the powerful elements of nature before. We looked and the old cottonwood shingles lay scattered around, the gable end boards were bursted loose, both rafters were splintered, and the siding and lining and filling all showed signs of the thundering and instantaneous demoralization. The terrible bolt had struck within ten feet of us. We were not hurt, but Harry said that evening, his ears still rang and we all complained the same way. To-day the chapter read at Sabbath-school was the 103rd Psalm. How feelingly our hearts responded, as the sweet singer began and ended, "Bless the Lord, O my soul."

The last paper brings us the welcome intelligence that our beloved Bro. Lemuel Hillery is about to pay us a visit. I believe that no item could have given me greater pleasure. We have desired long ago and still desire that our Gospel field should, from the very time that the breaking plow started, be well cultivated. Yet we have often had to sigh with our Savior, "The harvest is indeed plenteous but the laborers few." We have taken the advice of the Savior and we feel to thank God that our prayer is about to be answered.

The Brethren of the Northern District of Illinois, have acted nobly in the missionary cause. God has blessed you; you are able, you are strong, you have laborers in abundance, you are continually sharing the labors of our talented and able Eastern Brethren that often visit you,—will you not be so good as to allow us to share with you of the great abundance of your good workmen in the Lord? If you feel loth to part with one of your missionaries, remember how you will feel when hundreds over these Western prairies are turning to the Lord. Certainly we have souls here as precious as those in Denmark. Come over into Kansas and help us. "Whosoever will let him come."

GLEANINGS.

From D. B. Gibson.—I have just returned from a short tour of a week, in Davies and Caldwell counties, Mo. There were a few isolated members in Davies Co., who desired my humble labors. With Bro. G. Witwer, who was with me part of the time, held six meetings, the immediate result was, five baptized, the few languishing members revived, the doctrine of Christ held up in its original purity. The order was excellent, and the interest as good as I ever witnessed; as usual had to close too soon. We then went to Log Creek congregation, and ordained Bro. C. U. Root to the Eldership, and advanced Bro. Z. Henrick to the 2nd degree of the ministry.

From Mattie A. Lear.—The first Sunday in August, Bro. Barnhart baptized in our arm of the church a sister, aged 84 years. Her name is Young, she had long been a member of the Methodist church.

Urbana, Ill.

From C. Hope.—On the 28th of July we held council meeting, and chose Bro. H. C. Thaanum to the ministry. The meeting was very interesting, and will be long remembered by all; for it was like many of those which occur in America, tears flowed from all eyes, and earnest prayers were offered from all present that God would supply abundant grace to our Bro. for the work. If such meetings will not meet God's approbation, I do not know what will; and if they are not better than a cold ordination by a so-called straight line by some pretending professor who says "Lord, Lord" and fails to do what He commands, then I am at a loss to know what is good.

Sickness still rests with our family. I am still unable to do much. We have very warm weather occasionally, then suddenly cool, which makes it unhealthy.
